4) Rāvaṇa secured boons. Kaikasī (Rāvaṇa's mother) who became envious of the pomp and prowess of Kubera advised her son to secure boons from Brahmā by tapas and become equal to Kubera. Accordingly he went to Gokarṇa with his brothers and began tapas. Kumbhakarṇa did tapas for 10,000 years; Vibhīṣaṇa also did tapas for 10,000 years standing on one foot. Rāvaṇa, standing in the middle of the five fires, meditated upon Brahmā. Though 10,000 years passed thus, Brahmā did not appear yet. Rāvaṇa then cut one of his ten heads and made an offering of it to Brahmā in the fire. Thus, within 9000 years he cut nine of his heads and offered them to Brahmā in the fire. Lastly when he was about to cut off his tenth head, Brahmā appeared and asked him to choose whatever boon he wanted. Rāvaṇa chose the boon that from none but men should he meet with his death. Kumbhakarṇa desired to secure the boon of 'nirdevatva' (Absence of the devas) but secured by a slip of the tongue 'nidrāvatvam' (sleep). Vibhīṣaṇa chose devotion to Viṣṇu. On his return after securing the boons, Rāvaṇa occupied Laṅkā, drove away Kubera and took his puṣpaka chariot. Rāvaṇa further declared Mahāviṣṇu to be his eternal enemy. Hearing about Rāvaṇa's victory the Rākṣasas from Pātāla came to live in Laṅkā.

5) Family life. Rāvaṇa married Mandodarī, foster-daughter of Mayāsura and three sons, Meghanāda, Atikāya and Akṣakumāra were born to the couple. He then conquered the whole world with the cooperation of his sons and other Rākṣasas. The Aṣṭadikpālakas (protectors of the eight regions) were subjugated. He attacked Devaloka, but was defeated and imprisoned. Meghanāda by magical trickery captured Indra and released Rāvaṇa from custody. Meghanāda came to be called Indrajit from that day onwards.

6) Kārtavīryārjuna and Rāvaṇa. See under Kārtavīryārjuna, Para 6.

7) Curses heaped on Rāvaṇa. As a result of ruling the land, as a terror to the whole world, for many years and of his triumphal journey Rāvaṇa had invited on his head eighteen śāpas (curses) as follows.

(i) Nalakūbara śāpa. Rāvaṇa once insulted Rambhā, the betrothed wife of Nalakūbara during her tour at a place near Alakā. On hearing about the insult Nalakūbara cursed that Rāvaṇa should die with his ten heads broken.

(ii) Vedavatīśāpa. While Vedavatī, the only daughter of sage Kuśadhvaja, was doing tapas to secure Śrī Mādhava as her husband. Rāvaṇa committed rape on her and she cursed him thus :—"You and your family will be ruined by Lord Nārāyaṇa on account of me."

(iii) Brāhmaṇaśāpa. He invited a Vedic brahmin to install the idol of Tripurasundarī given to him by Śiva. As the brahmin happened to be a bit late to come, Rāvaṇa imprisoned him for seven days, and the old brahmin cursed that Rāvaṇa would be imprisoned seven months by a man.

(iv) Nandikeśvaraśāpa. For calling him 'monkey' at Kailāsa, Nandikeśvara cursed that Rāvaṇa and his kingdom would be destroyed by monkeys.

(v) Vasiṣṭhaśāpa. As Vasiṣṭha refused Rāvaṇa's invitation to teach the Vedas etc. he took the former captive. When he was released from captivity by the solar King Kuvalayāśva, Vasiṣṭha cursed that Rāvaṇa and his family would be destroyed by those born in the solar dynasty.

(vi) Aṣṭāvakraśāpa. Rāvaṇa once saw sage Aṣṭāvakra at Śleṣmātaka and gave him a kick saying, 'Oh ! handsome fellow ! I shall cure your eight hunches", and the sage cursed Rāvaṇa as follows :—For kicking me, a poor innocent sage, you will be kicked from head to foot and foot to head by monkeys."

(vii) Dattātreyaśāpa. Rāvaṇa once poured on his own head water kept purified by mantras by Dattātreya to bathe the head of his Guru, and the latter cursed that Rāvaṇa's head would be polluted by the feet of monkeys.

(viii) Dvaipāyanaśāpa. When Rāvaṇa molested and wounded the lips of Dvaipāyana's sister in his own presence he cursed that Rāvaṇa's sister would be mutilated by a man and he would be humiliated by monkeys.

(ix) Māṇḍavyaśāpa. During a pleasure trip of his with Mandodarī Rāvaṇa cruelly manhandled Māṇḍavya-maharṣi, when the latter cursed that Rāvaṇa too would be roughly handled by a monkey.

(x) Atriśāpa. Rāvaṇa once dragged by hair the wife of Atri in his very presence, and Atri cursed that Rāvaṇa will have to witness his wife being denuded of her dress and dragged by the hair by monkeys.

(xi) Nāradaśāpa. Nārada refused to explain the meaning of 'Om' to Rāvaṇa and the latter threatened to cut the tongue of Nārada. Nārada then cursed that all the ten heads of Rāvaṇa would be cut by a man.

(xii) Ṛtuvarmaśāpa. Rāvaṇa once raped Madanamañjarī, wife of Ṛtuvarman, who lived as an anchorite in the marutta forest, and the latter cursed that Rāvaṇa would be killed by a man.

(xiii) Maudgalyaśāpa. Once maharṣi Maudgalya was sitting in the svastika pose resting his neck on the yogadaṇḍa (a short stick-like piece of wood with a handle) Rāvaṇa happened to come there and he cut into two the yogadaṇḍa with his Candrahāsa (sword) with the result that the maharṣi fell down with face upwards and broke his back-bone. The maharṣi then cursed that Rāvaṇa's Candrahāsa would prove ineffective in future.

(xiv) Brāhmaṇajananīśāpa. Certain young brahmin girls who had gone for sea-bath were humiliated by Rāvaṇa in the presence of their mothers when they cursed that the wife of Rāvaṇa would be insulted in his very presence by monkeys.

(xv) Agniśāpa. Rāvaṇa once humiliated Svāhādevī, wife of Agni in his very presence and Agni cursed that Rāvaṇa's wife would be humiliated by monkeys in his presence.

(xvi) Anaraṇyaśāpa. Rāvaṇa killed by one blow on his chest King Anaraṇya of the solar dynasty who sought refuge with him, and the King cursed that Rāvaṇa would die with all his ten heads cut by the arrows of a prince of the solar dynasty.

(xvii) Bṛhaspati śāpa. When Rāvaṇa was about to return after conquering Devaloka and taking the devas captives, Sulekhādevī, daughter of Bṛhaspati tried to take shelter somewhere when Rāvaṇa attempted to catch her by force. Then Bṛhaspati cursed that Rāvaṇa would die hit by the arrows of Rāma.

(xviii) Brahmadevaśāpa. Rāvaṇa tried to humiliate Puñjikādevī, daughter of Brahmā, and the latter cursed that Rāvaṇa would die with all his ten heads broken if he touched unwilling women.

8) Rāvaṇa got Candrahāsa. See under Candrahāsa.

9) He threatened Devas. Rāvaṇa, during his triumphal march with the armies, once came to the Uśīravīra mountain. Then the King called Marutta was performing Maheśvara yajña on the plains of the mountain. Indra and the other devas came to receive their portion of the offerings. But they ran away in fear on the arrival of Rāvaṇa. Indra assumed the form of a peacock, Yama that of a crow, Kubera that of a chameleon and Varuṇa that of a swan, and the devas, thus assuming various forms went away in different directions. Marutta got angry and got ready to fight Rāvaṇa. But, as the maharṣis prevented him from it no fighting took place. Rāvaṇa returned with the glories of victory.

10) He defeated Kāla. Once Nārada felt the urge to witness a quarrel. He went to Laṅkā and told Rāvaṇa tales about Kāla, that Kāla was more powerful than Rāvaṇa, that Kāla would soon be causing Rāvaṇa's death etc. These stories awakened the anger in Rāvaṇa against Kāla, and the former, with a strong army challenged Kāla, and war between the two started.

Brahmā was in a fix, for he had given Rāvaṇa the boon that the latter would be killed only by a man. At the same time he had given the boon to Kāla that anybody thrashed with his (Kāla's) club would die. Brahmā, therefore, decided to end the fighting between Kāla and Rāvaṇa somehow, and he approached Kāla and requested him to withdraw from fighting. Accordingly Kāla acknowledged defeat and thus the fighting ended.

11) Rāvaṇa attacked Pātāla. Afterwards Rāvaṇa marched with his army to Pātāla where he defeated Takṣaka, the nāga King and exacted tributes from him. Then he attacked Nivātakavacas. When the fighting became very fierce Brahmā intervened and brought about a compromise between the two. Next, Rāvaṇa attacked Surabhi in Varuṇa's palace, but the Rākṣasas who emerged from the pores on Surabhi's body drove away Rāvaṇa.

12) Raped Rambhā. See under Nalakūbara.

13) His death. Rāvaṇa's sister, Śūrpaṇakhā met Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa at Pañcavaṭī and wanted first Rāma and then Lakṣmaṇa to marry her. But, Lakṣmaṇa cut away her nose, breasts etc. Enraged by this Rāvaṇa abducted Sītā. Śrī Rāma, with the help of the monkey-army, killed Rāvaṇa in war. (See under Rāma.

14) Synonyms of Rāvaṇa. Daśakandhara, Daśānana, Daśāsya, Paulastya, Pulastyatanaya, Rakṣaḥpati, Rākṣasādhipa, Rākṣasamaheśvara. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa and Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

RAVI I. A prince of Sauvīra. It was this prince who stood with the flag behind the chariot of Jayadratha, who had come to carry away Draupadī. He was killed by Arjuna. (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 27).

RAVI II. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma in the great war. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 14).

RAYA. A King of the lunar dynasty and son of Purūravas. Urvaśī, who had many sons like Āyus, Śrutāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

RĀYĀṆA. Brother of Yaśodā, mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, 2.39, 37-39).

ṚBHU I. An ancient sage. He was the son of Brahmā. He was an extraordinary scholar who became the preceptor of Nidāgha who was the son of Pulastya and the grandson of Brahmā. Ṛbhu conveyed all knowledge to Nidāgha. But he saw that although he taught Nidāgha all branches of knowledge, the latter did not take any interest in "Advaita". So he left him in disappointment but later got him interested in Advaita. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2. Chapters 15-16).

ṚBHUS.

1) General information. Ṛbhus are a group of divine beings who attained divinity by performing tapas. Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 25 says that even other gods worship the Ṛbhus.

2) Who were Ṛbhus? Aṅgiras, the son of Brahmā had a son named Sudhanvā. Sudhanvā had three children, Ṛbhukṣan, Vibhvan and Vāja. These three persons form the Ṛbhus as mentioned in Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka, 111th Sūkta.

3) Ṛbhus and Miracles.

(i) Long ago, a cow belonging to a Ṛṣi died. Its calf began to cry. The Ṛṣi took pity on it and prayed to the Ṛbhus. They made a cow and covered it with the skin of the dead cow and placed it in front of the calf. Because of its likeness to its mother, the calf believed it to be its mother.

(ii) Ṛbhus restored their parents who had become old, to youth. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka. 11th Sūkta).

(iii) Ṛgveda says that it was the Ṛbhus who made Indra's horses, the chariot of the Aśvinīs and Bṛhaspati's cow.

ṚCEYU. A king of the Pūru Dynasty.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order:-Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas.Āyus-Nahuṣa. Yayāti-Pūru-Janamejaya - Prācinvān - Pravīra-Namasyu-Vītabhaya-Śuṇḍu-Bahuvidha-Saṁyāti - Rahovādī-Raudrāśva and Ṛceyu.

(2 Other details.

(i) His mother, Miśrakeśī was a goddess. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 10).

(ii) He had two other names; Anvagbhānu and Anāvṛṣṭi. Matināra was the son of Ṛceyu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 11-13).

ṚCĪKA I (AJĪGARTA). A famous sage.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order-Brahmā-Bhṛgu-Cyavana-Ūrva-Ṛcīka. Ṛcīka was the father of Jamadagni and grandfather of Paraśurāma.

2) Ṛcīka's marriage. Gādhi, a king of the Lunar dynasty had a daughter, Satyavatī. Ṛcīka wished to marry this beautiful princess. Gādhi agreed to give his daughter in marriage to the sage if he gave 1,000 horses with black ears. Ṛcīka offered worship to Varuṇa to help him in the matter. Varuṇa was pleased and a thousand horses rose up from the river Gaṅgā. Ṛcīka married Satyavatī after giving the horses. Afterwards both of them went and settled down in the forest.

3) Birth of Jamadagni. One day Satyavatī made a request to Ṛcīka that she should have a son. Besides, she requested him that her mother should be blessed with a son, so that she might have a brother. Ṛcīka performed a "homa" and after that he made two balls of rice and gave them to Satyavatī. He advised her to eat one of them and to give the other to her mother. Ṛcīka had put "Brahmatejas" (brilliance of Brahmins) in the first rice-ball and "Kṣātratejas" (brilliance of Kṣatriyas) in the other. When Satyavatī and her mother ate the rice-balls, it so happened that the rice-ball intended for her mother was eaten by Satyavatī and the one intended for Satyavatī was eaten by the mother. Later Ṛcīka came to know of this mistake. In due course, Satyavatī and her mother gave birth to sons, Satyavatī's son was named Viśvāmitra. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 57).

4) Other sons of Ṛcīka. After this three more sons were born to Ṛcīka. The eldest of them was named Śunaḥpuccha, the second was named Śunaśśepha and the third, Śunolāṅgūla.

5) The sale of Śunaśśepha. Once king Ambarīṣa started a yāga. Indra who was jealous of him, stole the sacrificial cow. Since it was an evil omen, the priest advised Ambarīṣa that either the lost cow or a human being in its place must be obtained to complete the yāga. In spite of searches made in many places, the cow could not be traced. At last Ambarīṣa's men met Ṛcīka who was doing tapas on Bhṛgutuṅga. Ṛcīka sold his second son, Śunaśśepha to Aṁbarīṣa in exchange for the price of 100,000 cows.

The king took Śunaśśepha with him and came to Puṣkara tīrtha. There they happened to meet Viśvāmitra. Śunaśśepha complained to Viśvāmitra and lamented over his ill-fate. Viśvāmitra wished to save him and to send one of his own sons in his place with Ambarīṣa. But none of his sons was willing to oblige. Viśvāmitra cursed them and turned them into eaters of human flesh. Then he turned to Śunaśśepha and said :—

"When you stand ready to be sacrificed near the altar, offer your prayers to Agni. If you do so, you will attain siddhi." (salvation or mokṣa). He also taught him two songs of praise to Agni.

While standing at the altar ready to be sacrificed Sunaśśepha recited the two songs of praise. Indra and the other gods appeared and after saving Śunaśśepha rewarded Ambarīṣa for his yāga. (Vālmīki Ramāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 62nd Sarga).

6) Ṛcīka and the Vaiṣṇava bow. Once Viśvakarmā made two mighty bows. One of them was taken by Śiva to burn the Tripuras. That bow is known as "Śaivacāpa". The other bow was given to Viṣṇu. It is called "Vaiṣṇavacāpa". The Devas wished to see a trial of strength between Śiva and Viṣṇu. They prompted Brahmā to bring about such a conflict. Brahmā succeeded in causing a quarrel between Śiva and Viṣṇu. A fight began between Śiva and Viṣṇu. Both the Śaivacāpa and Vaiṣṇavacāpa went into action. But Śiva was defeated. After that, Siva gave his bow to Devarāta, king of Videha. By inheritance it came into the hands of king Janaka, the father of Sītā. It was this bow which was broken by Śrī Rāma at the time of Sītā's Svayaṁvara.

After the battle with Śiva, Viṣṇu gave his bow to Ṛcīka who, in turn gave it to Jamadagni. Jamadagni presented it to his son Paraśurāma. It was with this Vaiṣṇavacāpa that Paraśurāma confronted Śrī Rāma who was returning after Sītā's Svayaṁvara. (Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 75th Sarga).

7) Other details.

(i) Ṛcīka was given 1,000 white horses with black ears which could run fast, by Gādhi as dowry. Varuṇa presented these horses on the bank of the river Gaṅgā. The place in Gaṅgā where the horses rose up, came to be called "Aśvatīrtha". Gādhi gave Satyavatī to Ṛcīka at the place called 'Kanyākubja'. (M.B. Araṇya Parva, Chapter 115).

(ii) Mahābhārata, Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 23 says that Ṛcīka once tried to stop Paraśurāma from killing Kṣatriyas.

(iii) Once Dyutimān, King of Sālva, presented a tract of land to Ṛcīka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 28).

(iv) Ṛcīka attained Vaikuṇṭha and his wife Satyavatī accompanied him in her earthly body. It is said that after it, Satyavatī transformed herself into a river under the name "Kauśikī" and began to flow in north India. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 34th Sarga).

ṚCĪKA II. One of the twelve Ādityas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

ṚCĪKA III. A King who was the grandson of emperor Bharata and son of Dyumanyu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24).

ṚDDHI. Varuṇa's wife. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117. Verse 9).

ṚDDHIMĀN. A great serpent. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 15, there is a reference to the killing of this serpent by Garuḍa.

REṆU I. A teacher-priest, who was the son of hermit Viśvāmitra and the author of a Sūkta in Ṛgveda. (Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa 7. 17. 7; Ṛgveda 9. 70).

REṆU II. King of the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. Reṇukā the wife of the hermit Jamadagni, and the mother of Paraśurāma was the daughter of this King. Reṇu had other names such as Prasenajit, Prasena and Suveṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 116; Verse 2).

REṆUKĀ I. The wife of the hermit Jamadagni. (For further details see under the word Jamadagni).

REṆUKĀ II. A holy place frequented by Sages. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82. Stanza 82 that those who bathe in this holy bath would become as pure as Candra (Moon). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, that this holy place lies within the boundary of Kurukṣetra.

REṆUKA. A powerful Nāga (serpent). This serpent who was a dweller of Pātāla, (nether world) once went to the Diggajas (Eight elephants supporting the globe), in accordance with the instruction of the gods, and asked them questions pertaining to duty and righteousness. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva. Chapter 132, Stanza 2)

REPHA. A hermit of the period of Ṛgveda. Once the asuras threw this hermit into water. This was the punishment for the sins committed by him in his previous life. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 116).

REVANTA. A son of the sun.

1) Birth. The sun married the daughter of Viśvakarmā named Saṁjñā. She gave birth to three children named Manu, Yama and Yamī. Once, being unable to bear the radiance of her husband, Saṁjñā went to the forest to do penance. During this period Chāyā the maid of Saṁjñā attended on the sun. Three children, Śanaiścara, Manu and Tapatī were born to the Sun of Chāyā. Once Chāyā cursed Yama. Then only did the Sun remember about Saṁjñā. At that time Saṁjñā had been doing penance in the forest in the form of a mare. The Sun took the form of a horse and lived with her in the forest. From this union Aśvinīkumāras and also the last son Revanta were born. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 2).

2) Lakṣmī astounded at the sight of Revanta. For the story of how Lakṣmī was astounded at the sight of Revanta's handsome figure and how Mahāviṣṇu cursed Lakṣmī consequently, see under Ekavīra.

REVATA. The father of Revatī, the wife of Balabhadrarāma. Revata was the son of Ānartta and the grandson of king Śaryāti. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, that Revata was the first king who erected his capital in the Island Kuśasthalī and began to rule over it.

REVATĪ I. Wife of Balabhadrarāma. Revata the son of Ānartta and the grandson of King Śaryāti was ruling over the island Kuśasthalī. Hundred sons beginning with Kukudmi, were born to him. As the youngest of all a daughter named Revatī was born. At the instruction of Brahmā the beautful Revatī was given in marriage to Balabhadrarāma. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10; Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

REVATĪ II. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Stanza 29, the name 'Revatī' is used as a synonym of Aditi Devī.

REVATĪ III. One of the twentyseven stars. The following statements occur in the Mahābhārata about the importance of this star.

(i) Śrī Kṛṣṇa started on his journey at the auspicious moment of Maitra on the star Revatī in the month of Kārttika. (M.B. Udyoga Parva. Chapter 83, Stanza 6).

(ii) If a cow is given as alms on the day of this star that cow will go to heaven and make preparations for the comforts and convenience of the giver. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 33).

(iii) He who gives offerings to the manes on Revatī day would become wealthy. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 89, Stanza 14).

REVATĪ IV. The mother of Raivata, the lord of the fifth Manvantara (age of a Manu). There is a story in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa about the birth of Revatī.

A son was born to the hermit Ṛtavāk on Revatī day. By and by he became wicked. Having learned from the hermit Garga that his son became wicked because he was born under the star Revatī, Ṛtavāk cursed the star Revatī and kicked it down from its place. The spot on which the star fell became a lake. After a time a beautiful damsel was born from the lake. The hermit Pramuca took the girl home and brought her up. She was called Revatī. When she came of age, she was given in marriage to Durgama, the son of king Vikramaśīla. At the request of Revatī her marriage was conducted at an auspicious moment on the day of the star Revatī. The hermit blessed the couple "Let a son, who would become the Lord of the Manvantara, be born to you." As a result of this blessing the bright and valiant son Raivata was born to them. This Raivata was the Lord of the fifth Manvantara.

ṚGVEDA. The Ṛgveda is the oldest recorded work of the human race. The Egyptians claim that another book entitled "Book of the Dead" was also written during the period of the Ṛgveda. The Babylonians have an ancient work called 'Gilgamish', which according to scholars, is not as old as the Ṛgveda. Ṛgveda is the work that forms the basis of Hindu religion. Of the four Vedas, Yajurveda, Sāmaveda and Atharvaveda were composed after Ṛgveda." The Ṛgveda sūktas were interpreted for the first time in Yāska's "Nirukta" and Sāyaṇa's "Vedārthaprakāśa".

The most important of the four Vedas is Ṛgveda. It is divided into ten "Maṇḍalas". There are 1017 sūktas and 10472 Ṛks in it. Although there are 11 more Sūktas called "khilas," they are not usually included in the Ṛgveda.

Maṇḍalas two to seven of the Ṛgveda were composed in different Ṛṣikulas. The second Maṇḍala was of Bhārgava Kula, the third of Viśvāmitrakula, the fourth of Vāmadeva, the fifth of Atri, the sixth of Bharadvāja and the seventh of Vasiṣṭha. The eighth Maṇḍala and the first 50 Sūktas of the first Maṇḍala were composed by Kaṇvakula. The general view is that the tenth Maṇḍala was written by someone at a later period.

Most of the Ṛgveda sūktas are praises. But some of the Sūktas in the tenth Maṇḍala are of a different type. We can see in many sūktas the joy and wonder experienced by the Āryas when they entered the beautiful land of India for the first time. Most scholars believe that the Ṛgveda was composed during the period between 2, 500 and 2,000 B. C.

Ancient Belief about Ṛgveda. The four Vedas—Ṛgveda, Yajurveda, Sāmaveda and Atharvaveda emerged from the four faces of Brahmā. In Kṛtayuga, Brahmā gave these Vedas to his sons. In Dvāparayuga, the Ṛṣis got these Vedas. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated on earth for the preservation of Dharma, in the person of Veda Vyāsa. Vyāsa distributed the Vedas among his son Śākalya and his disciples. Śākalya received Ṛgveda. He communicated it to his disciples. (Bhāgavata, 12th Skandha. See under the word Veda).

RIPU. Grandson of Dhruva. Two sons called Śiṣṭi and Bhavya were born to Dhruva by his wife Śambhū. Śiṣṭi's wife Succhāyā deliverd five sons, i.e. Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. Cākṣuṣa Manu was born as the son of Ripu by his wife Bṛhatī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13).

RIPUÑJAYA. I Son of Suratha, lord of Kuṇḍala city. When Suratha captured Śrī Rāma's yājñic horse there ensued a fierce war between him and Śatrughna. Ripuñjaya too was present at the fighting. (Padma Purāṇa).

RIPUÑJAYA. II A brahmin, who was born as Divodāsa, king of Kāśī in his rebirth. When once fire ceased to be in Kāśī, he took upon himself the function of fire. (Skanda purāṇa, 4.2, 39-48).

RIPUÑJAYA III. See under Ripu.

RIṢṬA. A king. He worships Yama in his assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8).

ṚJIŚVĀ. A king mentioned in the Ṛgveda. Once he besieged the city of another King, Vaṁgṛda, with the help of Indra. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 10th Anuvāka, 53rd Sūkta).

ṚJRAŚVA. A muni (sage) celebrated in the Ṛgveda. Some details.(1) Ṛjrāśva was made blind by his father (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 16 th Anuvāka, 112th Sūkta) (2) Ṛjrāśva was the son of the royal sage, Vṛṣāgīr. Once the donkey which is the vehicle of the Aśvinīdevas assumed the shape of a she-wolf and went to Ṛjrāśva. Ṛjrāsva gave it 100 sheep belonging to the people of the country and cut them to pieces and offered the same as food to the she-wolf. This plunder of the people's wealth enraged Vṛṣāgīr. He cursed Ṛjrāśva and made him lose his eye-sight.

Ṛjrāśva who thus became blind offered prayers to Agni, who restored his eyesight. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 17th Anuvāka, 116th Sūkta).

ṚK. A small section of the Veda. The Veda which issued from the face of God at the time of creation, consisted of 1,00,000 books in four sections, beginning with Ṛk. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 4). The root "ṚC" means "to praise". It got the name "ṚK" meaning, "to praise gods".

ṚKṢA I. A king of the Pūru dynasty. He was the father of Saṁvaraṇa. For genealogy see under the word Saṁvaraṇa (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94).

ṚKṢA II. King Hariha had a son named Ṛkṣa born to him by his wife Sudevā. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95 says that this Ṛkṣa had a son named Matināra, by his wife Jvālā.

ṚKṢĀ. Wife of Ajamīḍha, who was a king of the lunar dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 37).

ṚKṢADEVA. Son of Śikhaṇḍī. Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23 refers to his horse with white and red colour.

ṚKṢĀMBIKĀ. A woman follower of Lord Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).

ṚKṢARAJAS. A monkey who was the foster-father of Bāli and Sugrīva. He was the king of Kiṣkindhā. He had no issue for a long time. Bāli and Sugrīva were brought up by Ahalyā at Gautama's āśrama. Ṛkṣarajas, with the permission of Indra, went to the āśrama and took Bāli and Sugrīva with him to Kiṣkindhā. From that time, Bāli and Sugrīva remained with him as his foster-sons. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

There is a story in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Prakṣipta Sarga, about the origin of this monkey.

Once when Brahmā was in a state of meditation on the Meru mountain, tears rolled down from his eyes and he gathered the tears in his own hands. From those tears, a monkey came into being. Ṛkṣarajas was that monkey.

One day, Ṛkṣarajas went to a lake to quench his thirst. Seeing his own image reflected in the water, he thought it was some enemy and jumped into the lake, to attack him. But he soon realized his mistake and returned to the shore. As soon as he came out of the water, he felt that he had become a woman. Seeing her fascinating beauty, Indra and Sūrya were filled with lustful passion. Both of them had involuntary emission of semen. Bāli was born from Indra's semen which fell on the head and Sugrīva was born from Sūrya's semen which fell on the neck of Ṛkṣarajas. Towards the end of the night, Ṛkṣarajas lost his female form and regained his former shape as a male. At once he took the two children with him to Brahmā and told him the whole story. Brahmā sent a messenger with Ṛkṣarajas and had him anointed king of Kiṣkindhā. After the time of Ṛkṣarajas, Bāli became king of Kiṣkindhā.

ṚKṢAŚṚṄGA. The younger son of Dīrghatapas who was performing tapas in Mandāravana on the northern part of Kāśī. Since he was killed by Citrasena, all others committed suicide. But Dīrghatapas who was left behind collected their bones, and deposited them in the sacred Śūlabhedatīrtha. Skanda Purāṇa says that consequently they attained Heaven.

ROCAMĀNĀ. An attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 28).

ROCAMĀNA I. A Kṣatriya King. The following information is available from Mahābhārata about him.

(i) Rocamāna was born from a portion of an asura named Aśvagrīva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 18).

(ii) Rocamāna also was present at the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 10).

(iii) Rocamāna was the King of the country Aśvamedha. Bhīmasena, at the time of his regional conquest, defeated this King. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 8).

(iv) At the beginning of the battle of Kurukṣetra, the Pāṇḍavas sent an invitation to this King to join the battle. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 12).

(v) Rocamāna was a mighty warrior on the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 47).

(vi) Rocamāna was killed by Karṇa in a combat. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 49).

ROCAMĀNA II. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 19, mentions another Rocamāna who had been defeated by Arjuna in his regional conquest.

ROCAMĀNA III. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 20, that teacher Droṇa had killed two brothers with the name Rocamāna in the Bhārata-battle.

ROCANĀ I. The daughter of the King Devaka. Vasudeva married Rocanā. Two sons Hema and Hemāṅgada were born to her. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

ROCANĀ II. Grand-daughter of Rukmī, the King of Vidarbha. Aniruddha the grandson of Śrī Kṛṣṇa married her at Bhojakaṭa, (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

ROCANĀMUKHA. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105, Stanza 12 that Garuḍa killed this Asura.

RODHA. A hell. See the part Naraka under the word Kāla.

ROHIṆĪ I. The mother of all the cows. The following is a story about the origin of Rohiṇī, given in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14.

Prajāpati Kaśyapa married Surabhi the seventh daughter of Dakṣa. Two daughters Rohiṇī and Gandharvī, were born to Surabhi. In later years cows and oxen were born in the world from Rohiṇī and horses from Gandharvī. In the Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 66, it is mentioned that two daughters Vimalā and Analā were born to Rohiṇī and that from these two, in later years cattle were born.

ROHIṆĪ II.

1) General information. One of the wives of Candra (Moon). The twentyseven stars are the wives of Candra. Of these twentyseven wives, Rohiṇī was loved most by Candra. (See under Candra).

2) Rohiṇī and Daśaratha. (See under Daśaratha, Para 10).

ROHIṆĪ III. The mother of Balabhadrarāma.

1) General information. Vasudeva had two wives Devakī and Rohiṇī. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born from Devakī and Balabhadrarāma from Rohiṇī.

2) Previous Birth of Rohiṇī. Vasudeva was the rebirth of Prajāpati Kaśyapa. When Kaśyapa took birth as Vasudeva, his two wives Aditi and Surasā took birth as Devakī and Rohiṇī respectively. (They took birth thus, because of the curse of Varuṇa. For details of the curse see under Kaśyapa, para 6).

3) The birth of Balabhadra. The seventh child of Devakī was placed in the womb of Rohiṇī and Balabhadrarāma was born. (For this story see under Kṛṣṇa, para 6, Kaṁsa, para 6 and Ṣaḍarbhaka).

4) Death. As soon as a messenger named Dāruka brought the news that the entire race of the Yādavas had perished in Dvārakā,

"because of grief, Vasudeva, Devakī and Rohiṇī forsook their bodies." (Bhāgavata, Skandha 11).

ROHIṆĪ IV. Niśā the third wife of the Agni (fire) called Manu or Bhānu gave birth to a daughter named Rohiṇī. Because she had done some misdeeds, she became the wife of Hiraṇyakaśipu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221).

ROHIṆĪ V. The mother of Utatthya, a famous hermit. (For details see under Satyatapas).

ROHITA (ROHITĀŚVA). The son of Hariścandra. This son, who was born by the blessing of Varuṇa, was wanted to be sacrificed by Varuṇa himself. In connection with this Hariścandra had to bear much sorrow and misery. (For details see under Hariścandra).

ROHITAKA (ROHITAKĀRAṆYA). A mountain famous in the Purāṇas. Places surrounding this mountain also were known by the name Rohitaka. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 4, that during the regional conquest of Nakula, he passed through this country. The present name of this country is Rohtak (Haryana).

ROMAHARṢAṆA. A famous disciple of Vyāsa. The great Vyāsa gave the collection of Purāṇas to Romaharṣaṇa. Sumati, Agnivarcas, Mitrāyus, Śāṁśapāyana, Akṛtavraṇa and Sāvarṇi were the six disciples of Romaharṣaṇa. (See under Guruparamparā).

ROMAKA. A country in ancient India. The inhabitants of this country were called the Romakas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 17, that the Romakas came with presents to the horse-sacrifice performed by Yudhiṣṭhira.

ROMAPĀDA. See under Lomapāda.

ROMAŚĀ. A daughter of Bṛhaspati. The reply given by Romaśā to her husband when he teased her, is given in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 19, Sūkta 126.

ṚṢABHA I. A King of the Lunar dynasty. He was the great grandson of Uparicaravasu.
Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 12 says that he fought within the Garuḍavyūha formed by Droṇa.

ṚṢABHA II. A muni (sage) who was the grandson of King Agnīdhra.

1) General information.
Ṛṣabha was the son of King Nābhi by his wife Merudevī. One hundred sons were born to Ṛṣabha by his wife Jayantī. After entrusting his kingdom to Bharata, the eldest of his sons, Ṛṣabha went to the forest and did tapas in Pulaha's āśrama.

3) The power of Ṛṣabha's Yāga. Ṛṣabha became a devotee of Śiva by worshipping him.
Once a Brāhmaṇa named Mandara had an illicit alliance with Piṅgalā, a prostitute. Both of them died together. Mandara was re-born as Bhadrāyu, the grandson of Nala and Piṅgalā as Sumati, the wife of King Vajrabāhu (Aṁśumān). Sumati became pregnant. Her co-wives who were jealous of her poisoned her. As a result of it, she and the child born to her fell victims to diseases. Daśārṇa abandoned them in the forest. Sumati lived in the house of a Vaiśya with her child. While living there, the child died of disease. Ṛṣabha went to the grief-stricken Sumati and comforted her. (Śiva Purāṇa).

4) Ṛṣabha's End. Ṛṣabha performed tapas according to the rules of Vānaprastha āśrama and conducted yāgas as ordained by Śāstras. On account of his austerity he became so lean and thin that all the veins in the body could be seen. Putting a pebble in his mouth, he went about in the forest, determined to renounce his body. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Chapter 1, Section 1).
In the course of his wanderings in the forest a wild fire broke out in which his body was burnt up. Śiva Purāṇa says that the soul of Ṛṣabha who died in the wild fire, attained Śiva Loka.

ṚṢABHA III. A Nāga born in the Dhṛtarāṣṭra family. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 11, we read that this nāga was burnt to ashes at Janamejaya's Sarpasatra. (Snake sacrifice).

ṚṢABHA IV. An Asura. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 51).

ṚṢABHADVĪPA. A holy place on the banks of the river Sarasvatī. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84 says that by bathing in this place, one would obtain Devavimāna.

ṚṢABHAKŪṬA. See under Ṛṣabha II and Ṛṣabhaparvata.

ṚṢABHAPARVATA. There are twenty mountains on the four sides of Mahāmeru. Ṛṣabha is one of them. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).
There is a reference to Ṛṣabha Parvata when Sugrīva gave instructions about the way to the army of monkeys going out in search of Sītā. Sugrīva speaks about the Ṛṣabha mountain as situated in the middle of the ocean of milk. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, 4th Sarga, Verse 44).

ṚṢABHATĪRTHA. An ancient place of holy waters in Ayodhyā. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84 says that an observance of fast at this tīrtha is equivalent to the gift of 1,000 cows and a Vājapeyayajña.

ṚṢI. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348 states that the letter "Ṛ" means "sound". The word "Ṛṣi" is derived from this root. During the period when the art of writing was not known, Vedas, Śāstras and other sacred lore were communicated through the mouth of the Ṛṣis. The voice of Ārṣa Bhārata itself is the voice of the Ṛṣis. Hindus believe that the Vedas are the outcome of the inspiration, introspection and spiritual vision of the Ṛṣis. There is a Saṁskṛta stanza defining a Ṛṣi, which is given below :

Ūrdhvaretāstapasyāgaḥ
Niyatāśī ca saṁyamī /
Śāpānugrahayoḥ śaktaḥ
Satyasandho bhavedṛṣiḥ //

India has given birth to numerous Ṛṣis. The word "Ṛṣi" may be found throughout the Vedas. Ṛṣis born in all classes of people had lived in India. The general belief is that the number of Ṛṣis may come to about 48,000. It is not possible to know the names of all of them. In the Rāmāyaṇa we find that when Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā after his life in the forest and took up the reign, many Ṛṣis came to Ayodhyā from all parts of the country. Among them, Viśvāmitra, Yavakrīta, Raibhya, Kaṇva and Garga came with their party of disciples from the east; Dattātreya, Namuci, Pramuci, Vālmīki, Soma, Kuṇḍu and Agastya came with their disciples from the south; Vṛṣaṅgu, Kaviṣa, Kaumya, Raudreya, Nārada, Vāmadeva, Saubhari, Aṣṭāvakra, Śuka, Bhṛgu, Lomaśa, Maudgalya and others with their disciples came from the west and Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha, Atri, Gautama, Jamadagni, Bharadvāja, Sanaka and party, Śarabhaṅga, Durvāsas, Mātaṅga, Vibhāṇḍaka, Tumburu, the Saptarṣis and others with their party of disciples arrived from the north, according to Uttara Rāmāyaṇa. There are three classes of Ṛṣis—Brahmarṣi, Rājarṣi and Devarṣi. Vasiṣṭha was a Brahmarṣi, Viśvāmitra, a Rajarṣi and Kaśyapa, a Devarṣi.

ṚṢIGIRI. A mountain situated near Girivraja, the capital of Magadha kingdom. This mountain is also known as "Mātaṅga" (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Verses 2 and 3).

ṚṢIKA I. A Rājarṣi. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 32 and 33 state that he was the rebirth of Arka, the Asura leader.

ṚṢIKA II. A town in North India. A terrible battle took place here between Arjuna and Ṛṣika, the Rājarṣi. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 25).

ṚṢIKULYĀ. A sacred river in ancient India. Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 47 mentions that those who bathe in this river will attain Mokṣa (salvation).

ṚṢYAMŪKA. A mountain. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 9 states that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa visited the sage Mārkaṇḍeya on the top of this mountain. It was here that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa met Sugrīva. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 279, Verse 44 states that the river Pampā runs round the Ṛṣyamūka mountain.

ṚṢYAŚṚṄGA. Son of the sage Vibhāṇḍaka.

1) Birth. Vibhāṇḍaka, son of Kaśyapa was the father of Ṛṣyaśṛṅga. There is a strange story about him in the Mahābhārata.

Once sage Vibhāṇḍaka happened to see Urvaśī at Mahāhrada. At the very sight of her, the sage had an involuntary emission of semen. The semen fell in the water and just then a female deer came there to drink water. It swallowed the semen with water and in due course became pregnant and gave birth to a human child. But the child had the horns of a deer. Consequently Vibhāṇḍaka named the boy "Ṛṣyaśṛṅga". Vibhāṇḍaka and Ṛṣyaśṛṅga lived together in the āśrama. Ṛṣyaśṛṅga grew up into a youth, but he had never seen anyone except his father Vibhāṇḍaka.

2) Rainfall in the kingdom of Aṅga. At that time, the kingdom of Aṅga was ruled by Lomapāda, a friend of Daśaratha. Once he cheated a Brāhmaṇa. Consequently all the Brāhmaṇas in that country left the place and emigrated to other lands. From that time there was no rain in the land of Aṅga. A severe drought and famine followed. Lomapāda invited devout Brāhmaṇas and consulted them how they could bring rain to the land. They told him that if he could get a Muni (sage) who had never seen women to perform a yāga, there would be rainfall in the land. The King sent his men far and wide to find a Muni who had never set eyes on a woman At last he got news that Ṛṣyaśṛṅga, son of Vibhāṇḍaka was the sage who had never seen women. He then began to plan how Ṛṣyaśṛṅga could be brought over to Aṅga.

Lomapāda called together some prostitutes and asked them whether they could bring Ṛṣyaśṛṅga to his country. All except one of them said it was quite impossible. One of them, however, agreed to try. As desired by her, the King sent her with several other damsels.

The young women went to the forest and made a floating āśrama in a boat in which they sailed in the river by the side of Vibhāṇḍāka's āśrama. They stopped the boat close to the āśrama and one of the girls entered the āśrama when Vibhāṇḍaka was not there. She had a talk with Ṛṣyaśṛṅga in the course of which she used all the amorous enchantments of her sex to captivate the young Muni. She told him that she was the daughter of a Muni, living in an āśrama, three yojanas away. Ṛṣyaśṛṅga felt a peculiar fascination for her and tried to please her by offering fruits etc. When she left him, he felt deeply distressed and unhappy. He was in that depressed and gloomy state of mind when Vibhāṇḍaka returned to the āśrama. Finding him unusually restless and dejected, the father asked him whether anyone had come there. Ṛṣyaśṛṅga who was an entire stranger to the feminine world told his father that a handsome youth of irresistible charm had visited him during Vibhāṇḍaka's absence. But from Ṛṣyaśṛṅga's description of the "youth" Vibhāṇḍaka understood that the visitor must have been a woman. But he could not guess who it was.

On another occasion, the same woman came again to the āśrama in the absence of Vibhāṇḍaka. At her sight Ṛṣyaśṛṅga was enraptured and before his father's return, they left the āśrama. They entered the floating āśrama in the boat and the woman set the boat sailing in the river. It glided slowly down the river and at last reached near the palace of Lomapāda. They landed there and the King married his daughter Śāntā to Ṛṣyaśṛṅga.

To appease Vidhāṇḍaka, Lomapāda sent him rich presents and much wealth. When Vibhāṇḍaka returned to his āśrama he was met by the King's servants who had brought the presents and wealth. Ignoring them and their rich presents, the furious Maharṣi set out to the city of Campā, the capital of the Aṅga Kingdom. At the royal command, Vibhāṇḍaka was welcomed by the people with honour. When the sage found that the whole kingdom belonged to his son, his anger was allayed. After ordering his son to return to his āśrama after the birth of a son, Vibhāṇḍaka left the palace. As a result of Ṛṣyaśṛṅga's yāga there was rainfall in Aṅga and famine ended. After the birth of his child he returned to the forest as ordered by his father. (M.B. Araṇya Parva, Chapters 110-112).

3) Ṛṣyaśṛṅga in Ayodhyā. King Daśaratha of Ayodhyā had no children for a long time. His Minister Sumantra advised him to invite Ṛṣyaśṛṅga to perform a yāga for the purpose. Lomapāda sent Ṛṣyaśṛṅga to Ayodhyā at the invitation of Daśaratha. He arrived at Ayodhyā and performed a yāga called Putrakāmeṣṭi. From the sacrificial fire there arose a dark monstrous figure, with a pot of pudding in his hand. Daśaratha received it from him and gave one half of it to Kausalyā and the other half to Kaikeyī. Both of them gave half of their shares to Sumitrā. Thus Sumitrā got two shares while the other two wives of Daśaratha got only one share each. As a result Kausalyā and Kaikeyī gave birth to a son each, while Sumitrā had two sons. Kausalyā's son was named Rāma, Kaikeyī's son was Bharata and Sumitrā's sons were Lakṣmaṇa and Śatrughna. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Chapters 14-16).

ṚTA I. One of the 11 Rudras. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 12).

ṚTA II. See under the word Pramṛta.

ṚTA III. This word has a general meaning "truth". Besides, in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 152, we see that it also means "Something obtained by begging".

ṚTADHĀMĀ. Another name of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 62).

ṚTADHVAJA I. (KUVALĀŚVA—DHUNDHUMĀRA). A famous King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order—Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa—Vivasvān—Vaivasvata Manu —Ikṣvāku — Vikukṣi — Śaśāda — Kākutstha—Anenas—Pṛthulāśva—Viśvagaśva— Adri—Kuvalāsva (Dhundhumāra).

2) How he got the name Dhundhumāra. The most heroic exploit of Kuvalāśva or Kuvalayāśva was his killing of the Asura Dhundhu.

Madhu and Kaiṭabha were two Asuras born from the ears of Mahāviṣṇu. The Asura Dhundhu was their son. After his birth, Mahāviṣṇu killed Madhu and Kaiṭabha. Dhundhu was furious over the death of his fathers. He worshipped Brahmā who granted him unconquerable strength. After defeating the gods he went to the desert called Ujjālaka and lay beneath the sands. Whenever he heaved a sigh clouds of dust rose up to the sky and the earth shook for seven days. It caused great damage to life and property in the world, like a storm. Uttaṅka, a sage who lived in the neighbourhood of Ujjālaka was the person who suffered most from Dhundhu's misdeeds.

Bṛhadaśva, of Ikṣvāku dynasty and father of Kuvalāśva in his old age entrusted the rule of the country to his son and prepared to go to the forest. At that time, sage Uttaṅka came there and advised the King to go to the forest only after killing Dhundhu. Bṛhadaśva called his son Kuvalāśva and after giving him the task of killing Dhundhu, proceeded to the forest.

Kuvalāśva had 21,000 sons. Leading them, he went to the desert Ujjālaka to kill Dhundhu. Uttaṅka declared that anyone who killed Dhundhu would get part of Mahāviṣṇu's strength. Kuvalāśva's sons surrounded Dhundhu. The Asura awoke with anger. In the fire from his eyes, all the 21,000 sons of Kuvalāśva were burnt to ashes. Next Kuvalāśva came into conflict with Dhundhu. In that fight Dhundhu was killed. The gods gave Kuvalāśva many boons. From that day, Kuvalāśva got the name, "Dhundhumāra" (one who killed Dhundhu). (M.B. Vana Parva, 4 Chapters from 201).

3) His sons. Kuvalāśva had three more sons named Dṛḍhāśva, Kapilāśva and Candrāśva, or Bhadrāśva besides the 21,000 sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 204, Verse 40).

4) Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 59 gives the following account of how Kuvalāśva won the favour of sage Gālava.

Long ago while sage Gālava was performing tapas in his āśrama, an Asura called Pātālaketu used to disturb his meditations regularly. One day, the sage looked up to Heaven and heaved a sigh. At once a horse dropped down from the sky. A mysterious voice was heard saying—"This mighty horse will travel thousands of yojanas in a day." The sage received that horse and presented it to Ṛtadhvaja, King of the lunar dynasty. Ṛtadhvaja mounted the horse and killed Pātālaketu.

It was Viśvāvasu who dropped this horse from Heaven. Pātālaketu had once fallen in love with Viśvāvasu's daughter, Madālasā. It was in revenge that Viśvāvasu had done like this.

ṚTADHVAJA II. A Maharṣi (sage). The sage Jābāli was his son. (For further details, see Para 2 under the word Viśvakarmā).

ṚTAMBHARA. An ancient King. He worshipped Kāmadhenu and obtained a son who was a devotee of Viṣṇu. The son's name was Satyavān. In connection with Śrī Rāma's Aśvamedhayāga, Śatrughna who was leading the horse, arrived in Satyavān's city during his tour of the eastern lands. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 30).

ṚTASTUBH A Muni (sage) celebrated in the Ṛgveda. (Ṛgveda. 1st Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka, 112th Sūkta).

ṚTĀYU. See under Kaliṅga.

ṚTEYU I. A king of the Lunar dynasty.

ṚTEYU II. A Maharṣi (sage) of the western country. He was a ṛtvik (priest officiating at a yāga) of Varuṇa. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 36).

ṚTUKĀLA. The time that is most auspicious for sexual intercourse for a woman with her husband. In ancient India certain days were prescribed as the best period for women to become pregnant. This period is called Ṛtukāla. (Ṛtu—Menstruation. Kāla—time, period.)

The sixteen days following menstruation are supposed to be good; but the first three days are not very good and it is advisable not to have sexual intercourse during those days. The next even days beginning with the fourth day (4th, 6th, 8th, 10th, 12th, 14th and 16th) are the best days for coitus if a male issue (a son) is desired. The odd days (5th, 7th, 9th, 11th 13th, 15th) are to be preferred if a female issue (daughter) is desired. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 151).

ṚTUPARṆA. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

1. Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order-Brahmā-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān-Vaivasvata Manu-Ikṣvāku-Vikukṣi-Śaśāda-Purañjaya-Kākutstha - Anenas-Pṛthulāśva-Prasenajit-Yuvanāśva-Māndhātā- Purukutsa-Trasadasyu-Anaraṇya -Aryaśva - Vasumanas - Sutanvā-Trayyāruṇa - Satyavrata (Triśaṅku) - Hariścandra-Rohitāśva-Harita - Cuñcu - Sudeva - Bharuka - Sagara-Asamañjasa-Aṁśumān -Bhagīratha-Śrutanābha-Sindhudvīpa-Ayutāyus-Ṛtuparṇa.

2) Other Details.

i) Nala's incognito life. While Nala was wandering in the dense forest after leaving Damayantī, he was bitten by the serpent, Karkoṭaka. His complexion turned blue owing to the effect of the poison. Karkoṭaka gave him a garment by wearing which Nala could regain his form. As advised by Karkoṭaka, Nala went to the palace of Ṛtuparṇa, king of Ayodhyā, assuming the name Bāhuka. He lived there as the chief charioteer of the king. He had mastered the art "Aśvahṛdaya" by which he could drive the chariot-horses with astonishing speed. Ṛtuparṇa appointed him as his chief charioteer and gave him two assistants, Vārṣṇeya and Jīvala. (M.B., Araṇya Parva, Chapter 67).

(ii) Ṛtuparṇa and the second marriage of Damayantī. Damayantī came to know that Nala was living in Ṛtuparṇa's palace, through the messenger Parṇāda. She sent a secret mesage to Ayodhyā through a Brāhmaṇa named Sudeva that her second marriage was fixed for the next day and that Ṛtuparṇa should attend the ceremony. Ṛtuparṇa started at once with Bāhuka as his charioteer. On the way, Ṛtuparṇa's cloak happened to fall down from the chariot. At once he asked Nala to stop the chariot. But he told him that within a moment, the chariot had covered a distance of one yojana from the place where the cloak fell.

They saw a tree in the forest which was heavily laden with fruit. Ṛtuparṇa was able to tell at a glance, the exact number of leaves and fruits on that tree. He told Nala that he was able to do so with the help of the art "Akṣahṛdaya" and he taught it to Nala. In return for it, Nala taught the king the art of Aśvahṛdaya. At last they reached the city of Vidarbha. Damayantī managed to recognize Nala even in his disguise. Ṛtuparṇa who was happy over the reunion of Nala and Damayantī returned to Ayodhyā on the next day. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 77).

ṚTUSTHALĀ. A Celestial damsel. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, we find that she attended the birth festival of Arjuna.

ṚTVĀ. A Deva Gandharva. Mahābhārata,Ādi Parva, Chapter 122 states that he had taken part in Arjuna's birth-festival.

ṚTVIK. A Priest who officiates at a yāga.

Those who perform yāgas like Agnisandhāna, Agniṣṭoma, Pākayaña etc. are called Ṛtviks. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 2, Verse 143).

RUCAKAPARVATA. (The mountain Rucaka) A mountain standing near the mountain Mahāmeru. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, that there are twenty mountains including Rucaka on the four sides of Mahāmeru.

RUCI I. A celestial maid of Alakāpurī. This celestial maid danced in the Palace of Kubera on the occasion of the visit of Aṣṭāvakra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 44).

RUCI II. A son of Brahmā and a Prajāpati. This prajāpati married Ākūti the daughter of Manu Svāyambhuva. A son and a daughter were born to Ruci of Ākūti. The son was the incarnation of Viṣṇu. He was named Yajña. The daughter who was incarnation of Mahālakṣmī was named Dakṣiṇā. Yajña was brought up in the hermitage of Svāyambhuva and Dakṣiṇā grew up in the hermitage of Ruci. When they grew up Yajña married Dakṣiṇā. Twelve sons, named Toṣa, Santoṣa, Pratoṣa, Bhadra, Śānti, Iḍaspati, Idhma, Kavi, Vibhu, Vahni, Sudeva and Rocana, were born to the couple. In the time of Manu Svāyambhuva these twelve were called the Tuṣitas, a group of devas (gods).

RUCI III. The wife of the hermit named Devaśarmā. (For detailed story see under Vipula).

RUCIPARVA. Son of the king Ākṛti. In the Bhārata battle, to save Bhīmasena, Ruciparva confronted the elephant of Bhagadatta and was killed by Bhagadatta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 51).

RUCIRĀŚVA. A king of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

RUDHIRĀMBHAS. A hell. (See under the word Kāla).

RUDHIRĀŚANA. A giant-chief who came to fight with Śrī Rāma, under the leadership of the giant Khara. In that fight the captains of the army of the giants were Rudhirāsana etc. All of them were killed by the arrow of Śrī Rāma. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya, Kāṇḍa Sarga 26).

RUDRA. A form of Śiva.

1) General information. The birth of Rudra is from Brahmā. Even before the creation of the Prajāpatis, Brahmā had created Sanandana, Sanaka, Sanātana and Sanatkumāra. These four were not desirous of mundane pleasures and were not prepared to beget children. They were great sages and scholars, of abstinence and without any discord and animosity. When these four showed no interest at all in the creation of the world, Brahmā became angry to such an extent that he was prepared to destroy the three worlds. At that time the whole of the three worlds shone in the radiance that emanated from the fire of the fury of Brahmā. Then from his shining eyebrows which were curved with fury, a figure of unbearable radiance like the mid-day sun came out. That figure was Rudra. Half of the fierce body of that Rudra who was very furious, was a woman and the other half was a man. Brahmā, saying, "Divide body", disappeared. Instantly Rudra split himself into the figure of a man and the figure of a woman. He again divided the body of the man into eleven parts. These eleven figures are the eleven Rudras.

The names of the eleven Rudras are given differently in different Purāṇas. In a text it is said that the eleven Rudras are, Manyu, Manu, Mahīnasa, Mahān, Śiva, Ṛtudhvaja, Ugraretas, Bhava, Kāma, Vāmadeva and Dhṛtavrata. According to some other Purāṇas, the eleven Rudras are Aja, Ekapāda (Ekapāt),Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭā, Rudra, Hara, Śambhu, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Īśāna and Tribhuvana. Brahmā apportioned to the eleven Rudras the eleven positions of the heart, the five organs of senses and the organs of action and to Rudra the eight positions of life, ether, air, fire, water, earth, the sun and the moon. It was said before that Rudra was divided into man and woman. From the woman-portion eleven Rudrāṇīs came into being. They were Dhī, Vṛtti, Uśanā, Umā, Niyutā, Sarpis, Ilā, Ambikā, Irāvatī, Sudhā and Dīkṣā. The eleven Rudraṇīs became the wives of the eleven Rudras. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1. Chapter 7).

2) Other information regarding Rudra. Details about the orgin, life, character etc. of Rudra which occur in other Purāṇas are given below.

(i) Thirtythree children were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa, by his wife Aditi, as Ādityas, Vasus, Rudras and Aśvins. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

(ii) From the fury of Brahmā, Rudra was born; from the lap of Brahmā, Nārada was born; from the right thumb, Dakṣa; from the mind, Sanaka and the others; and from the left thumb, a daughter named Vīraṇī was born. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

(iii) In the beginning of Kalpa (Age of Brahmā) Brahmā meditated upon getting a child like himself and a child of blue complexion appeared on his lap. He ran here and there crying aloud. Brahmā asked him "Why are you crying?" He replied: "I must be named." Because he was crying (doing rodana) Brahmā named him Rudra (He who cries). He cried seven times more. Brahmā gave him seven more names. They were Bhava, Śarva, Īśāna, Paśupati, Bhīma, Ugra and Mahādeva. Thus there were eight Rudras. To each of them, Brahmā gave a position and wives and children.

The Sun, water, earth, air, fire, ether, Brahmin who has taken vow and the moon were allotted to them as their positions and figures. Their wives were Suvarcalā, Uṣā, Vikeśī Śivā, Svāhā, Dīśā, Dīkṣā and Rohiṇī. This world is filled by the sons and grandsons and so on of these wives. Their sons respectively were Śanaiścara Śukra, Lohitāṅga, Manojava, Skanda, Sarga, Santāna and Budha. This Rudra who is described above, married Satī the daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 8). (For further information see under ŚIVA also).

RUDRAKETU. An asura. Two sons named Devāntaka and Narāntaka were born to this asura by his wife Śāradā. The hermit Nārada was greatly pleased at the valour of these two sons, and taught them "Pañcākṣarīmahāvidyā." Devāntaka and Narāntaka, who became haughty and arrogant by their prowess were killed by Gaṇapati. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa, Kriyā Kāṇḍa 2).

RUDRAKOṬI. A holy place in North India. Once a large number of hermits gathered in this place to worship Śiva. Greatly pleased at this Śiva appeared before them in the form of many phalluses. From that day onwards the place Rudrakoṭi became a holy place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 118).

RUDRĀKṢA. (Elaco Carpus seeds) Beads for rosaries.

1) General information. A holy thing worn by devotees. In the Purāṇas much importance is attached to Rudrākṣa. In Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, there is a story stating how Rudrākṣa came to be honoured in this way.

Once there lived an asura chief who was mighty and valiant. His name was Tripura. He defeated Devas and deva chiefs and became emperor of the asuras. The Devas were much grieved because of him. They went to Śiva and represented their grievances. Śiva thought for a while, how to kill Tripura, and sat with open epes. This sitting continued for a thousand divine years. After this prolonged time Śiva winked his eyes and tears fell down from them. The Rudrākṣa tree originated from these tears. From the Sun-eye of Śiva twelve types of Rudrākṣas came into being; from the moon-eye sixteen kinds of Rudrākṣas and from the fire-eye ten kinds of Rudrākṣas originated. Those which originated from the Sun-eye are bloodcoloured, those from the moon-eye white Rudrākṣas and from the fire-eye black rudrākṣas. Boiled Rudrākṣa is considered a Brahmin caste, red rudrākṣa a Kṣatriya caste, white one a Vaiśya caste and the black rudrākṣa a Śūdra caste.

2) Division of rudrākṣa based on quality. The division of rudrākṣa according to the number of faces, and qualities thereof are given below:

With one face: Rudrākṣa with only one face is the figure of Śiva. By wearing this remission from the sin of Brahmahatyā could be procured.

With two faces: Rudrākṣa with two faces is the figure of Devīdeva. This is known by the name "Gaurīśaṅkara". By wearing this remission from all sins committed knowingly and unknowingly, would be obtained.

With three faces: This is the figure of Agni (fire). By wearing this the sin incurred by Strīhatyā (killing a woman) would be washed away.

With four faces: Rudrākṣa with four faces is the figure of Brahmā. By wearing this, the sin incurred by Narahatyā (killing a man) could be got rid of.

With five faces: This is the figure of Kālāgni (Fire of Kāla the God of death). By wearing this, remission of sins incurred by eating food which ought not to have been eaten and enjoying woman who ought not to have been enjoyed, could be obtained. All sorts of sins would be absolved by five-faced rudrākṣa.

With six faces; Six-faced rudrākṣa is the six-faced god Kārttikeya. By wearing it on the right hand, remission from all sins, beginning with Brahmahatyā could be obtained.

With seven faces: Rudrākṣa with seven faces is the figure of Kāmadeva (Cupid). If this is worn, sins such as theft of gold etc. could be removed.

Eight faces; Rudrākṣa with eight faces is the figure of Vināyaka, the general of the great army. By wearing this, sins incurred by deceit such as selling rice of low quality as good quality, keeping false weights and measures, giving gold of lower carat as good carat gold, by enjoying woman of wicked families, touching the wife of teacher, and so many other kinds of sins would be absolved, and impediments would be avoided and finally one can attain supernal bliss.

With nine faces:-This rudrākṣa is the figure of Bhairava. This should be worn on the left hand. By doing so one would become as mighty as god and would become devoted to god and would attain salvation. The sins incurred by killing the child in the womb a thousand times and killing Brahmins a hundred times would be got rid of by wearing this rudrākṣa.

With ten faces :—This is the figure of the real Janārdana. If one wears this, the devils, wicked planets, Ghosts, goblins, spirits haunting funeral places, Brahmarākṣasas (a kind of demon) etc. will not come near him. Moreover, snake-bite would not affect him.

With eleven faces :—Rudrākṣa with eleven faces is the figure of the Eleven Rudras. This should be worn on the head. By doing so one could obtain the fruits of performing a thousand horse-sacrifices and a hundred Vājapeyayāgas (A kind of sacrifice).

With twelve faces :—Rudrākṣa with twelve faces is the dwelling place of the twelve Ādityas. This should be worn on the ear. If it is done so, the sun-god will be pleased. The wearer will obtain the fruits of performing horse-sacrifice, cow-sacrifice etc. He will not be wounded by animals with horns, or quills or teeth. He need not fear disease or worry. He need not fear to go anywhere. Wherever he goes he will be honoured as God. All the sins incurred by slaughter of elephant, man, snake, rat, frog etc. will instantly be absolved.

With thirteen faces :— He who wears rudrākṣa with thirteen faccs will be equal to Kārttikeya. All his wishes will be realized. He will get rasa (mercury) and rasāyana (sweetened medicine) and all the pleasures and luxuries of the world. The great sins of killing parents, brothers etc. will be removed.

With fourteen faces :—He who wears rudrākṣa with fourteen faces will be exactly like the real Paramaśiva.

3) The mode of wearing Rudrākṣa. He who wears thirty-two rudrākṣas on the neck, forty on the head, six on each ear, twelve on each hand, sixteen on each of the upper arms, one on each eye, one on the lock of hair, and one hundred and eight on the chest is really Śrī Nīlakaṇṭha Paramaśiva Himself.

RUDRAMĀRGA. A holy place. If a day and a night's fast is taken in this place, one will attain the world of Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 181).

RUDRĀṆĪ. Another name of Pārvatī. (For further details see under Pārvatī).

RUDRĀṆĪRUDRA. A holy place in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 31, that the great hermit Aṣṭāvakra visited this holy place, on his journey to the northern countries.

RUDRAPADA. A holy place in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 100, that if Śiva is worshipped in this holy place, one will obtain the fruits of performing the horse sacrifice.

RUDRAROMĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 7).

RUDRASĀVARṆI. A Manu. (See under Manvantara).

RUDRASENA. A King who was the helper of Yudhiṣṭhira. Mention is made about this King in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 39).

RUDRAṬA. A Sanskrit critic who lived in the 9th century A.D. The famous Book of criticism known as "Kāvyālaṅkāra", was written by this scholar who belonged to Kashmir.

RUDRĀVARTTA. A holy place. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 37, that by taking a bath in this holy place, one could attain heaven.

RUHĀ. Daughter of Surasā, the mother of Nāgas. She had two sisters called Analā and Vīrudhā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 66).

RUKMAKEŚA. The youngest of the five sons of Bhīṣmaka, King of Vidarbha. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

RUKMĀṄGADA I. A son of Śalya the King of Madra. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 14, that this Rukmāṅgada, the brother of Rukmaratha, attended the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Draupadī.

RUKMĀṄGADA II. Father of a Vaiṣṇavite named Dharmāṅgada. This Rukmāṅgada was the son of Ṛtadhvaja, the King of the city of Vidiśā. (See under Dharmāṅgada).

RUKMARATHA I. Son of Śalya, King of Madra.

(i) He attended the wedding of Draupadī in the company of his father and brothers. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 14).

(ii) In the great war he fell unconscious shot by the arrows of Śveta. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 48).

(iii) He was killed by Abhimanyu in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 9).

RUKMARATHA II. A synonym of Droṇācārya. As he rode in a golden chariot Droṇa came to be known by this name. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 2).

RUKMARATHA III. A particular sect of Trigartta Kings, who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 19). This sect of Kings attacked Arjuna.

RUKMAREKHĀ. The wife of King Raibhya. She was the mother of Ekāvalī. (See under Ekāvalī).

RUKMAŚUKRA. A son of Priyavrata the brother of Uttānapāda. Prajāpati Viśvakarmā gave in marriage to Priyavrata, his two daughters Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī, who were exceedingly beautiful and good-natured. By the first wife, ten sons were born to him. Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

RUKMĀVATĪ. The daughter of Rukmī. Pradyumna married this lady. Aniruddha was the son born to Pradyumna of Rukmāvatī (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

RUKMĪ.

1) General information. King of the Province Bhojakaṭa in the country of Vidarbha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 62, that this Rukmī was born from a portion of the Asura named Krodhavaśa.

2) Birth. Father of Rukmī was the king Bhīṣmaka. Two children were born to Bhīṣmaka, named Rukmī and Rukmiṇī. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 62).

3) Getting a bow. Śrī Kṛṣṇa took Rukmī's sister Rukmiṇī by force and married her. Rukmī did not like this and so he confronted Śrī Kṛṣṇa. In the contest Śrī Kṛṣṇa reviled him. Rukmī got angry at this and went to Kailāsa and did penance before Śiva. Śiva appeared before him after three years, and gave him a bow for destroying the enemies. Śiva told him that it would be broken, only if it was used against Mahāviṣṇu. After getting this bow he returned to Bhojakaṭa and lived there.

4) The details regarding Rukmī, given in the Mahābhārata.

(i) Rukmī accepted the suzerainty of Sahadeva at the time of his regional conquest. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 62).

(ii) Rukmī paid tribute to Karṇa at the time of his regional conquest. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Stanza 14).

(iii) The Pāṇḍavas had sent invitation to Rukmī for the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 16).

(iv) Bhīṣmaka, the father of Rukmī, was known by the name 'Hiraṇyaromā' also. Rukmī became famous throughout all the countries. He accepted Druma, a famous Kimpuruṣa (Kinnara) as his teacher in archery. Druma presented him with a bow called Vijaya. This Vijaya was on a par with the Gāṇḍīva. Rukmī fought with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and was defeated. The place at which he was defeated by Śrī Kṛṣṇa is known as Bhojakaṭa.

After having been defeated by Śrī Kṛṣṇa, a thought arose in the mind of Rukmī to keep amity and concord with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Knowing this, the Pāṇḍavas invited Rukmī to their palace. He promised his help if ever Arjuna feared to do battle. At this Arjuna laughed and said that he was not in need of any help. After this Rukmī went to Duryodhana and promised to help him. But Duryodhana also rejected his help. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158).

5) Death of Rukmī. Discontented with everybody, Rukmī lived in Bhojakaṭa, having no contact with any body. During this period the king of Kaliṅga once approached Rukmī and advised him to challenge Balabhadrarāma for a game of dice. The challenge was made knowing that Balabhadra was not a good player. Knowing that to reject a challenge was not honourable, Balabhadra went to play the game. Rukmī won the first round of game. Staking everything, the second round of the game began and Balabhadra won the game. But Rukmī and the king of Kaliṅga did not accept the victory. All the kings who witnessed the game sided with Rukmī. Instantly an ethereal voice said "Balabhadrarāma has won the game." The friends of Rukmī did not accept the ethereal voice. They began to create a tumult in the hall. Balabhadrarāma who became furious at this ridicule took a pestle of iron and killed

Rukmī with one blow. The rest of the kings fled from the place. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

RUKMIṆĪ. The chief queen of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Birth. From the following Purāṇic statements, it could be understood that Rukmiṇī was the incarnation of goddess Lakṣmī.

(i) "Śrī Devī (Lakṣmī) by her portions, took birth in the earth as Rukmiṇī in the family of Bhīṣmaka". (M.B, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 156).

(ii) Formerly Lakṣmī Devī took birth as the daughter of Bhṛgu by his wife Khyāti. Next she took birth from the sea of Milk at the time of the churning of it by the combined efforts of the devas and the asuras, to take Amṛta (ambrosia). When Viṣṇu took birth as Āditya, Lakṣmī took birth from lotus. When Viṣṇu incarnated as Paraśurāma Lakṣmī Devī became the earth-goddess. In the incarnation of Śrī Rāma she became Sītā and in that of Śrī Kṛṣṇa she was Rukmiṇī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṃśa 1, Chapter 9).

It was in the kingdom of Vidarbha that Lakṣmī Devī took birth as Rukmiṇī during the incarnation of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. To Bhīṣmaka, the King of Vidarbha, five sons beginning with Rukmī, were born. The sixth was a daughter who was named Rukmiṇī. She grew up into a beautiful damsel. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

2) Marriage. Rukmiṇī fell in love with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Her parents agreed to her choice. But her brother Rukmī was an enemy of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Rukmī desired to give his sister to Śiśupāla. The date of the marriage was fixed and the heart was burning within Rukmiṇī. She sent a Brahmin as messenger to Kṛṣṇa.

The time of marriage drew near. The kings of Aṅga, Kaliṅga, Mālava, Kekaya, Vaṅga, Magadha, Kosala, Sālva, Cola, Pāṇḍya, Kerala and so on took their seats in the nuptial hall. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra came with their army. The army under the leadership of Balabhadra remained behind and Śrī Kṛṣṇa went alone to the nuptial hall. While preparations were being made to give Rukmiṇī to Śiśupāla, Śrī Kṛṣṇa took her in his chariot and quickly left the place. All the other kings who ran after Śrī Kṛṣṇa to fight had to confront with the mighty army of Balabhadra, who defeated the kings and returned to Dvārakā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

3) Sons. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, that ten sons were born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇī. They were Pradyumna, Cārudeṣṇa, Sudeṣṇa, Cārudeha, Sucāru, Cārugupta, Bhadracāru, Cārucandra, Cārubhadra and Cāru. But a slight difference is observed in the description of the sons of Rūkmiṇī given in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Stanzas 33 and 34.

4) Yoked to the chariot by Durvāsas. See under Durvāsas, Para 3.

5) Consoled Arjuna. After the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna visited Dvārakā. Seeing the dilapidated city without rulers and the women without husbands, he cried aloud. Rukmiṇī Devī ran to him and consoled him and seated him on a golden chair. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 12).

6) Death. After the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Rukmiṇī, with the other wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa jumped into a burning pyre and died.

"Śaibyā, Rukmiṇī, Gāndhārī, Haimavatī and Jāmbavatī jumped into the fire." (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 73).

7) The Palace of Rukmiṇī. There is a statement in the Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 28, about the palace of Rukmiṇī. "Viśvakarmā built a palace for Śrī Kṛṣṇa at the instance of Indra. The highest dome of it is covered with gold. So this dome dazzled as the peak of Mahāmeru. It was this dome that was set apart for his beloved wife Rukmiṇī by Śrī Kṛṣṇa".

RUMĀ I. A noble woman obtained from the sea of Milk at the time of its churning by the devas and the asuras to get Amṛta (Celestial honey of immortality). At the time of the churning, many beautiful and noble things were obtained from the sea of Milk. Jyeṣṭhā, Airāvata, Uccaiśśravas, Kalpa tree, Cintāmaṇi, Kaustubha, Candra (Moon), Celestial maids, nymphs of heaven, Mahālakṣmī, Tārā, Rumā and so on were some of them. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

RUMĀ II. The wife of Sugrīva. She was the daughter of the famous monkey called Panasa. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3:7:221). After driving Sugrīva away from Kiṣkindhā, Bāli took Rumā by force. After the death of Bāli, Rumā returned to Sugrīva. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Chapter 20, 21; Padma Purāṇa 4: 112:161).

There was Rumā also, among the women who came to see Śrī Rāma on his return to Kiṣkindhā after visiting Vibhīṣaṇa. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa).

RUMAṆVĀN. Son of Supratīpa, a captain of the army of Udayana. (See under Udayana).

RUMAṆVĀN II. The eldest of the five sons born to Jamadagni by his wife Reṇukā. The sons of Jamadagni were, Rumaṇvān, Suṣeṇa, Vasu, Viśvāvasu and Paraśurāma. It was Rumaṇvān that Jamadagni ordered to kill Reṇukā who was late in fetching water from the river. But Rumaṇvān did not obey his father. The angry hermit cursed Rumaṇvān. According to the curse Rumaṇvān became dull-witted like birds and beasts. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 10).

RŪPAKA. See under Pattu (Ten)

RŪPAVĀHIKA. A country in ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 43.

RŪPAVATĪ. A harlot who lived in Tretāyuga. It is mentioned in Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, that Rūpavatī and her lover Devadāsa attained salvation by adopting the life of a house-holder in the forest.

RŪPAVIDYĀ. The figure of Devī. The figure of Devī, shown as sitting with twelve hands, is called Rūpavidyā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

RŪPIṆA. A son born to the emperor Ajamīḍha by his wife Keśinī. He had two brothers named Jahnu and Vraja. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 32).

RURU I. A hermit famous in the Purāṇas.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā-Bhṛgu -Cyavana - Pramati - Ruru.

2) Birth. The beautiful Pulomā was the wife of Bhṛgu. Bhṛgu got the son Cyavana by Pulomā. Cyavana married Sukanyā the daughter of Śaryāti. A son named Pramati was born to them. The hermit Pramati married the beautiful damsel Pratāpī. Ruru is their son. He grew up to be a famous hermit. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 2).

3) Marriage. Ruru happened to see the exceedingly beautiful Pramadvarā the daughter of Viśvāvasu by Menakā. The moment he saw her he fell in love with her. The father of Pramadvarā came to know of this and he decided to give her in marriage to Ruru. Preparations for the marriage were being made. One day during that time Pramadvarā who had been running here and there joyfully, was bitten by a snake and she fell down dead. Ruru instantly reached the spot.

Ruru who was greatly sad and disappointed, got down to the Ganges and bathed. Then rinsing his mouth he took some water in his hand and said "By the favour of God I have acquired by my devotion and worship of gods, devotion and service to my teacher, by my scripture-study, my worship with Gāyatrī, my prayer, and meditation, my penance, my offerings to the holy fire, and my oblations, let her come to life. If she does not come to life, I will die in this Ganges water." Making this prayer, making the gods witnesses he poured the water down.

Immediately a messenger from heaven appeared in the sky and said that she would come to life again provided Ruru was prepared to give half of his life to her. Ruru agreed to it. Thus Pramadvarā came to life again and Ruru married her. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 2).

4) Hatred towards Serpents. A relentless hatred grew up in the heart of Ruru against serpents, because a serpent had killed his wife. He wandered about destroying every serpent he came across. Finally when he confronted Ḍuṇḍubha he was given exhortations and good advices regarding righteousness by Ḍuṇḍubhla. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 9, Stanza 19). Moreover it is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 12, that Ruru had taken a lively interest in the sacrifice of Janamejaya meant for the extermination of serpents.

RURU II. A mighty and valiant Asura. After procuring a boon from Brahmā, Ruru became arrogant and attacked the realm of gods. The Devas who were defeated by Ruru ran to the Blue mountain and prostrated before the goddess Śakti, who had been doing penance there. This goddess Śakti had been born from the matted hair of Śiva.

Ruru followed the Devas and reached the Blue mountain. When Devī saw Ruru and his mighty army a loud laugh burst out from her. From that laugh thousands of devilish figures came into existence. They completely annihilated the army of Ruru. After this Devī killed Ruru with the nail of her toe. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa).

RURUKA. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. This King was a scholar in economics and administration. (Harivaṁśa, 1 ; 13 ; 29).

RUṢĀBHĀNU. Wife of Hiraṇyākṣa, an asura. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

RUṢADRATHA. A King of the Aṅga family. He was the son of Titikṣu and the father of Paila, a member of the line of Vyāsa's disciples. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

RUṢADRU. A King in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 13, that this King stays in the palace of Yama.

RUŚAMĀ. A Priest who had studied the Vedas well. A story occurs in the 'Pañcaviṁśabrāhmaṇa', about this priest.

Once Indra and Ruśamā bet on going round the world. Both got ready and started. But Ruśamā walked round Kurukṣetra and returned, while Indra travelled the whole of the way round the world and kept the conditions. The question arose as to who won the bet. The devas gave the decision, "Kurukṣetra is the dais of Brahmā, and so Kurukṣetra contains the entire world. Therefore both Indra and Ruśamā were declared to have won the bet."

RUṢAṄGU. An ancient hermit. Once the great hermit Ārṣṭiṣeṇa came to the hermitage of Ruṣaṅgu and did severe penance. Viśvāmitra obtained Brāhmaṇatva (Brahminhood) by doing penance in this place. Towards the end of his life Ruṣaṅgu and his sons came to Pṛthūdakatīrtha and sang laudatory songs about Pṛthūdakatīrtha. Ruṣaṅgu said that those who did penance and died in this holy bath would not have to undergo miseries after death. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 39, Stanza 24).

RUṢARDDHIKA. A wicked King of the Saurāṣṭra dynasty. Mention is made about this King in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 14.

RUYYAKA (RUCIKA). A Sanskrit playwright who lived in the 12th century. He has another name 'Rucika' also. The book of criticism called "Alaṅkārasarvasva" is written by him. He was the teacher of Maṅkha, the author of Śrīkaṇṭhacarita'. Some are of opinion that Ruyyaka had written only the Sūtras in the book 'Alaṅkārasarvasva' and that the gloss or commentary was given by Maṅkha. Some of the other works of Rucika are Sahṛdayalīlā, Alaṅkārānusaraṇī etc.

ŚA (श). The letter Śa means to lie down and also Śaṁkara. 'Śam' means comfort or happiness. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

ṢA (ष). Ṣa means noble, sublime. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

SA (स). The sound 'Sa' means indirect; 'Sā, Lakṣmī (Goddess of wealth and prosperity) and 'sam' means hair. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

ŚABALA. A nāga born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Kadrū. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 7).

ŚABALĀKṢA. A divine maharṣi. He once visited Bhīṣma. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

ŚABALĀŚVA I. The thousand sons born to Dakṣa of his wife Vīraṇī, are known as Śabalāśvas. To procreate man-kind Dakṣa first created five hundred sons by his wife Asiknī and named them Haryaśvas. Dakṣa had to create the Śabalāśvas as the Haryaśvas were misled by Nārada. But, Nārada approached and told the Śabalāśvas also that it was not correct on their part to procreate children before they had studied the interior, exterior, bottom and top of the earth. Believing Nārada's advice the Śabalāśvas also set out to measure the extent of the earth and they have not yet returned. Because of this Brahmā cursed that Nārada, instead of living at one place, should always be on the move. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

ŚABALĀŚVA II. A King born in the dynasty of King Kuru. His father, Avikṣit or Aśvavān was the grandson of King Kuru. Avikṣit had, besides Śabalāśva, seven sons called Parīkṣit, Ādirāja Virāja, Śālmali, Uccaiśśravas, Bhaṁgakāra and Jitāri. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 52).

ŚABARA. A mleccha—low caste. The Mahābhārata has the following about Śabaras.

(i) Śabaras were born from the dung and urine of Nandinī, the cow of Vasiṣṭha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 16).

(ii) When Sātyaki annihilated the Kauravas the dead bodies of thousands of Śabaras were heaped on the battle-field. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 46).

(iii) In early days the Śabaras lived in the kingdom of Māndhātā, their profession being murder and looting. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 13).

(iv) Śiva had once taken the form of forest-dwellers and Śabaras. (Anuśāsana Parva. Chapter 65, Verse 17).

(v) Many Kṣatriyas lived for many years hidden in caves for fear of Paraśurāma, and as they had no association with kṣatriyas during the period, they became Śabaras. (Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 15).

ŚABARĪ. A woman of the tribe of forest-dwellers. Śrī Rāma, during his life in the forest, gave her salvation.

1) Former life. Śabarī, in her former life, was the only daughter Mālinī of the Gandharva King, Citrakavaca. An erudite scholar, Vītihotra, married her. As he was ever immersed in contemplation of Brahman his wife Mālinī, (later Śabarī) kept one hunter, Kalmāṣa, as her paramour, and her husband cursed her thus : "As you have become a lover of the hunter, you turn out to be a hunter-woman."

2) At the Suburbs of Mataṅga's hermitage.

Mālinī in tears sought redemption from the curse from her husband, and he told her that she would get absolution from her infamy and the curse from Śrī Rāma. Immediately she was transformed into a hunter-woman and she came to the suburbs of Mataṅgāśrama. She took a special liking for the place, the reason being that the flowers in the āśrama possessed a special fragrance. Once while the disciples were carrying a load of flowers for the muni (Mataṅga) a few drops of sweat from their bodies fell on the ground, and the muni blessed that the trees and creepers, which grew up from the sweat and their flowers would never fade. This is described as follows in Canto 73, Araṇyakāṇḍa of Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa.

"Oh ! Rāma ! nobody plucks and wears those flowers. They neither fade nor fall down. While the disciples of Mataṅga were carrying a load of flowers for him, they sweated on account of exhaustion and some drops of sweat fell on earth which developed themselves into flowers due to the prowess of the guru's tapas. Even today may be seen there Śabarī, who has taken to sannyāsa and who tends the flowers. She will attain heaven only after seeing you."

Śabarī lived for long there serving Mataṅga's disciples, performing tapas and learning knowledge about Brahman. At the time of the munis giving up their physical bodies they blessed Śabarī that without further delay she would meet Rāma and get redemption from the curse. They also blessed that she would possess divine eyes to see hidden things and also the past and the future. After that she was spending her days awaiting the arrival of Rāma.

It was the period of the life in the forest of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. After visiting various āśramas Rāma at last came to Mataṅgāśrama. Hearing about Rāma's visit Śabarī had gathered a lot of fruits. Now, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa came and Śabarī received them most respectfully. After herself biting each fruit to test its taste she gave the fruits for them to eat. The left-overs of Śabarī appeared as nectar to Rāma. Then Śabarī told Rāma thus: "When you go a short distance southwards there is the beautiful stream called Pampā. You cross Pampā and advance a little further and you will reach mount Ṛṣyamūka. On the top of that mountain lives Sugrīva, son of Sun, and if you enter into alliance with him you will succeed in finding out and getting back Sītā after annihilating the enemies. Oh ! Lord ! my salutations."

After speaking thus, Śabarī the great anchorite and chaste woman closed her eyes. Immediately she was transformed into Mālinī, the Gandharva damsel, and all at once a handsome Gandharva prince appeared there in a divine plane. It was Vītihotra, the husband of Mālinī. After saluting Śrī Rāma he took away his wife in a chariot to the Gandharva city. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa).

ŚABARIMALA (ŚABARI MOUNTAIN). A sacred place in South India in the eastern region of Kerala on a mountain called Śabarimala. It is not quite certain whether the name of this mountain is in any way related to Śabarī, to whom Śrī Rāma had given salvation. At any rate a very ancient temple with Śāstā as the presiding deity therein is found at Śabarimala today. It is proof positive of the great sanctity attached to the ancient temple that every year lakhs of devotees from all parts of India visit it braving dense forests, mountains and wild beasts on their way. Historical evidence about the origin of the temple or its philosophical importance is sparse, but there is a legend, more illuminating than facts of history, about Śāstā (Ayyappan) the deity installed in the temple. The legend is as follows—

In olden days the royal family of the Pāṇḍyas divided itself into two branches, one of them settling down at Velliyūr and the other at Madura. When the king of Madura one day went ahunting in the forest he met a handsome and very powerful and courageous Malayāli youth. The king immediately took a liking for him and appointed him as an officer in his army. The youth gradually rose up in military service to become the Commander-in-Chief. The other officers, who were jealous due to the rise of the youth—Ayyappan—began conspiring to drive him out. The queen became a weapon in the hands of the conspirators, and at their instance she pretended herself to be very ill and lay in a fainting fit. All the physicians acknowledged defeat in curing her. Then a physician, an agent of the conspirators, came forward and assured the king that he would cure the queen of her illness within one and a half hours if a leopard's milk was made available. The king told Ayyappan about it.

Ayyappan went into the forest and returned to the palace with many she-leopards. He rode a tiger leading the leopards. People in the royal court were frightened by the sight of the leopards. The King realised that Ayyappan was not an ordinary person. Being questioned about him by the King, Ayyappan replied that God was his father and the whole world his home. As he did not like to live any further with tale-bearers and conspirators he returned to Kerala.

Ayyappan's departure made the King sad and very restless in mind. After giving all his immovable property on rent the King followed Ayyappan to Kerala taking all his ornaments, jars and other utensils, and came at last to Pantalam. This region of Kerala was then in the control of a petty Chieftain called Kaippuzha Tampān. The King of Madura purchased some land from the Tampān, put up a palace there and lived therein with the members of his family.

Ayyappasvāmī on his way back to Kerala met Paraśurāma, who told the former that he had already, for the protection of Kerala, installed on mountains and the sea-coast idols of his (Ayyappasvāmī) and that he would install another idol of Ayyappan at Śabarimala where they had now met each other. From that day onwards Ayyappasvāmī took his abode there.

One of those days the Pāṇḍyan king living at Pantalam had a dream, and in that dream Ayyappasvāmī appeared and told him that he (Ayyappan) was living at Śabarimala and the King might meet the Svāmī if he went there. The next day morning the King with his retinue started for Śabarimala. At Śabarimala the King got the forest cleared and made a search of the ground where he found an idol installed by Paraśurāma. The King built a temple there and installed the idol of Ayyappasvāmī therein. He also got necessary purificatory ceremonies conducted in the temple by the famous tantrī (high-priest) Tāzhamaṇ. A routine programme for the conduct of affairs in the temple was fixed. As it was difficult for men to live in the forest infested by wild beasts and conduct pūjā etc. daily, it was fixed that pūjās need be conducted only for five days in every month and that Makarasaṁkrānti should be the annual festival day. From the first of Makaram (January) for five days it was to be utsava with the deity led in procession. On the fifth of Makaram every year a 'Kalabham' and on the seventh day a 'guruti' also were ordained.

On the annual festival day the temple priest, the senior pilgrim, mārārs and other employees go to Śabarimala carrying with them rice etc. for food and calling aloud 'Svāmiye Śaraṇam Ayyappa' (Oh! lord Ayyappa! you are our refuge), devotees climb the mountain today also repeating this slogan. (See under Śāstā).

ŚĀBHĀKĀ (ŚALĀKĀ). See under Dhanañjaya V.

SABHĀNARA. A King of the Bharata Dynasty. He was son of Anudruhyu, and the father of Kālanara. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SABHĀPARVA. An important section in the Mahābhārata. The main theme mentioned in this section is the building of the palace of the Pāṇḍavas. (Sabhā= palace).

SABHĀPATI. A prince who took the side of the Kauravas and fought against the Pāṇḍavas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 89, Stanza 64, that this prince was killed by Arjuna.

ŚACĪ. Daughter of Pulomā and wife of Indra. The following information about Śacī is gathered from the Mahābhārata.

(1) It was from an aspect of Śacī that Pāñcālī, daughter of King Drupada was born. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 157).

(2) Śacī is seated on the best throne in the assembly of Devas in the court of Indra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 4).

(3) She worships Brahmā also in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42).

(4) It was Śacīdevī, queen of Indra, who took Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā, during their visit to Devaloka to the Devamātā. (mother of Devas). (Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Chapter 38).

(5) When Indra, afflicted by Brahmahatyā, hid himself away from Devaloka Śacīdevī was kept under the protection of Bṛhaspati. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 20).

(6) While he was made Indra, Nahuṣa wanted to take Śacī for wife and she tried hard not to fall into his clutches. (See under Nahuṣa).

(7) Śacī was present at the birth of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 13).

SADĀCĀRA (Good conduct).

1) General information. Each country has good customary practices of its own. A man with good habits or behaviour is considered as having conquered the two worlds. The sound 'Sat' denotes 'Sādhus'. Sādhus are those who are without any bad conduct or behaviour. The habits and practices of the Sādhus are called Sadācāra. The Saptarṣis, (the seven hermits), the Prajāpatis (Lords of all creatures) and Manus (the fathers of men), were persons who were careful to keep up the good practices. Once the hermit Aurva advised Sagara, what the good usages of the people of Bhārata ought to be. The laws of good conduct according to hermit Aurva are given below :

2) The passing of excrement and urine. Every one should wake up in the Brāhmamuhūrta (Two hours before dawn). After having risen, he should go to the southwest corner of the village or house at a distance of an arrow-shot for stooling and passing urine; should not pour the water used for washing the face and the legs, in the courtyard; should not pass urine in one's own shadow, or in the shade of a tree, or facing cow, the Sun, fire, wind, teacher and Brahmin. Ploughed fields, fields where grains are ready for harvest, cattleshed, crowd, path, lakes or rivers and their banks, are places, forbidden for stooling or passing urine. When there is no danger, a wise man should pass urine, facing the north in the day and facing south at night. When passing excrement the ground should be covered with grass and his head should be covered with cloth. Should not sit long or talk much when stooling.

3) The conduct of ablution after answering the calls of nature and rinsing the mouth after meals. Soil such as taken from white ant-hill, ground thrown up by moles or rats, soil at the bottom of water, remainder of soil used by another, soil taken from the wall, soil gathered by worms and flies, ploughed soil etc. should not be used for ablution. By using soil, do the cleansing of the urethra once, the anus thrice, the left hand ten times, and both the hands together, seven times. After this use pure water (in which there is no mud or foam and which has no foul smell) and rinse the mouth. Take soil again and wash the legs with it. Rinse the mouth thrice and wipe the face twice. Then holding water in the hand, touch the apertures in the head such as eye, etc. the crest of the head, both upper arms, navel and heart. With this rinsing take bath. After bath, with the help of a mirror, tie the hair, anoint the eyes with collyrium, and wear flower garlands etc. carefully. Bathing should be done in river, rivulet, lake, jungle-stream, mountain or holy bath (tīrtha), or draw water from the well and bathe there or carry well-water home and bathe there. After the bath put on clean dress. Then take some water in the hand, offer it as oblation to gods, sages, and the manes with care. Throw water thrice for the blessing of the gods and hermits and to Prajāpati once, as ordained. In the same way, to the manes and the great ancestors also give oblation of water thrice.

After so much is done do the customary sacrificial offerings, prayer etc. to Devī. Then invite guests to the house and welcome them. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 11).

SADĀJIT. A king of the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of Kuntī and the father of Māhiṣmān. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SADĀKĀNTĀ. A river in India, Purāṇically very famous. Mention is made of this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 25.

SADĀNĪRĀ. A river in India very famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made of this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 204. Some scholars are of opinion that this river is the same as the Karatoyā of Modern India.

ṢAḌARBHAKA (S). Six sons of Marīci. Subjected to a curse they had to live many lives and ultimately they resumed their old forms as children of Devakī. (For details see under Kaṁsa, Para 2).

SADAŚVA. A king of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 12, that this king remains in the palace of Yama, glorifying him.

SADASYORMI. A king. He is a worshipper of Yama. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 11).

ṢAḌGUṆA I. The six qualities or attributes of Bhagavān (God). Aiśvaryam (prosperity), Vīryam (prowess), Vairāgyam (non-attachment or renunciation), Vijñānam (super-knowledge), Śrī (welfare and prosperity) and Yaśas (fame, reputation) are the six attributes of Bhagavān.

ṢAḌGUṆA II. Six kingly or political policies. Sandhi, Vigraha, Yāna, Āsana, Dvaidha and Āśraya are the six policies of state-craft. (Manusmrti, Chapter 8, Verse 160)

2. Vigraha. Fighting, i.e. war is vigraha. War is the result of mutual evil-doings. The king, who desires prosperity who is troubled by others and in whose favour time and circumstances are, should go in for war. The main causes of war are the following: the desire to capture kingdom, woman, position etc. haughtiness and imperiousness, obstruction to duties and rights, the interest of friends and allies, destruction to one's allies, both parties getting interested in one and the same thing etc. Enmity is engendered chiefly due to the following causes:-rivalry of co-wives, disputes about property and women, verbal controversies and wrongs committed. The following kinds of wars should not be fought:-Wars the benefit of which is meagre or futile; war which would cause harm in the present as also in future; with the enemy whose strength is not correctly known; incited by others, for others, on account of women, which would continue for long; with brahmins, where time and fate are not in favour; with him, who has powerful allies, though of temporary advantage but which will not be so in future; though of advantage in future but useless at present.

The king should always do what will be of advantage at present as also in future. If one's own army is strong and enthusiastic and when the army of the adversary is not so, one may go in for war. Also, when all circumstances are in one's favour and against the antagonist one may fight.

3) Yāna. Yāna means marching for war. One may start for war after declaring it, after making peace, after making alliances; and incidentally also.

4) Āsana. To remain quiet or doing nothing which is also of four kinds as yāna.

5) Dvaidha. To get in between the contending parties to support with words only and to remain without joining either side is dvaidha. He who takes up the stand should, on meeting both the parties, serve the stronger side. But if he finds that both the parties are making peace, and not in need of his aid, he should approach their enemy, who is more powerful than they, or he should fight by himself.

6) Āśraya. When one is attacked by a stronger enemy and if one finds no means to retaliate, one should depend upon another person, who is noble, truthful and powerful. To put on a supplicant's look, to understand the moods of that person whose help is sought and to be humble to him—these are the characteristics and traits of the dependent. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 240.

SĀDHU. An incarnation of Śiva. The Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa contains the following story about it.

When the Himālaya and Maināka mountains once began a very intense tapas, the Devas and Ṛṣis fearing great ruin to the world in case the mountains got salvation, sought Śiva's protection and prayed for a solution for the problem. So Śiva, in the guise of a brahmin named Sādhu, went to the mountains, spoke to them condemning Śiva and thus made them retract from their devotion to Śiva.

SĀDHYĀ. Mother of the Sādhyas. (See under Sādhyas).

SĀDHYA (S).

1. General. A Gaṇadevatā. These Devatās often used to play an important role in Purāṇic movements and incidents. The Sādhyas were born from the seed Virāṭ Puruṣa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 35). But according to Viṣṇu Purāṇa (Part 1, Chapter 35) the Sādhyas were the grand-children of Dakṣa-prajāpati. Of the sixty daughters of the Prajāpati by his wife Asiknī, ten were married by Dharmadeva; The Viśvadevas were the sons of Dharmadeva by his wife Viśvā and the Sādhyas were his sons by Sādhyā.

2. Other information.
(i) The Sādhyas fought with Garuḍa, who went to Devaloka for Amṛta and got defeated. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 16).
(ii) The Sādhyas feared Viśvāmitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 39).
(iii) Sādhyagaṇas participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 70).
(iv) Sādhyas took their place in planes above the palace of Drupada to witness Draupadī's wedding. (Ādi Parva Chapter 186, Verse 6).
(v) They were present at the Devayajña conducted at Naimiṣa forest. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 195, Verse 3).
(vi) They were present with various Kinds of arrows at the battle between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna on the occasion of the burning of the Khāṇḍava forest. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 226 Verse 38).
(vii) They live in Indra's court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 22).
(viii) They go to the court of Brahmā also and worship him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 44).
(ix) In the battle between Subrahmaṇya and Tārakāsura they fought on the side of the former. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 71).
(x) Once they made a prayer to Dattātreya muni. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 3).
(xi) On the occasion of the battle between Karṇa and Arjuna at Kurukṣetra the Sādhyas wished success for the flatter. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 4 ł, Verse 29).
(xii) They served as store-keepers at the yajña performed by king Marutta. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 22).
(xiii) They remain on Mount Muñjavān worshipping Śiva. (Āśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 1).

SĀDYASKA. A yajña ordained for Rājarṣis. It could be performed in one day. (Vana Parva, Chapter 204, Verse 16).

SAGARA. A king of the solar dynasty, Sagara ruled Ayodhyā.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Brahmā thus: Brahmā-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān-Vaivasvata Manu-Ikṣvāku - Vikukṣi-Śaśāda-Purañjaya-Kākutstha-Anenas-Pṛthulāśva-Prasenajit - Yuvanāśva - Māndhātā - Purukutsa - Trasadasyu-Anaraṇya-Aryaśva-Vasumanas- Sudhanvā - Traiyāruṇa-Satyavrata (Triśaṅku)-Hariścandra-Rohitāśva-Harita-Cuñcu-Sudeva-Bharuka-Bāhuka-Sagara.

2) Birth. Bāhuka, father of Sagara, was known as Subāhu also. Sagara was Bāhuka's son by his wife, Yādavī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 16). Though Sagara was a prince he was born at the āśrama of Aurva, and there was a reason for it.

Subāhu and Yādavī did not have a child for long. But, as a result of many yajñas conducted for the gift of a child, Yādavī conceived. While she was in the seventh month of her pregnancy her co-wife administered poison to her with the result that she did not further advance in pregnancy and deliver in due time. Thus she continued as a pregnant woman for seven years. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 16). The King became an old man. During this period Tālajaṅgha, king of Hehaya, attacked Ayodhyā with his army, and Subāhu, despite his old age, fought back. But the fighting grew fiercer. Subāhu found that he would not be able to defeat Tālajaṅgha and so he escaped into the forest with his wife Yādavī. They took shelter in the āśrama of sage Aurva. Subāhu expired there due to old age and Yādavī got ready to follow him in his pyre. The Muni prevented her from doing so by pointing out to her that the child in her womb was a very fortunate one and would become emperor of the seven islands when he grew up to manhood. Yādavī delivered shortly. As the poison (gara) given to her by the co-wife had immobilised her pregnancy for so long Aurva named her child Sagara. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 16 and 17).

3) To Ayodhyā. Sage Aurva conducted the Upanayana ceremony of the boy and taught him the Vedas etc. Once Yādavī wept to hear the boy address the muni 'father', and when the son asked her the reason for it she told him that the muni was not his father, who was really greater than the muni. She also told him their previous history, and Sagara decided to return to Ayodhyā somehow.

The people of Ayodhyā lived scattered here and there in fear of Tālajaṅgha, and disgusted with such an existence, they came together and took refuge with Vasiṣṭha, who told them that king Subāhu had expired in Aurvāśrama, but that his son Sagara was there in the āśrama. He further advised them to bring Sagara back and reconquer Ayodhyā. Yādavī wept at the sight of the people from Ayodhyā and they insisted upon Sagara's return to the state as their king. They waited in the āśrama for five days for Sagara. Then Sagara and his mother, with the blessings of the Sage, returned to Ayodhyā along with the people. Sagara fought Tālajaṅgha, reconquered Ayodhyā and crowned himself as king. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 20 to 23).

4) Family life. Sagara had two wives called Sumati alias Vaidarbhī and Keśinī alias Śaibyā. Sumati was the daughter of Garuḍa.

As he had no issues for long, Sagara, with his wives, went to Himālayas and began doing tapas at Bhṛguprasravaṇa mountain. After hundred years Bhṛgu appeared and blessed Sagara that one of his wives would give birth to 60,000 sons and the other to one, who would add to the glory of the dynasty. Sumati chose 60,000 sons and Keśinī the one son.

The king and the queens returned to Ayodhyā and in due course Sumati delivered the son called Asamañjasa who was to bring prosperity to the dynasty. Sumati gave birth to a lump of flesh, which developed into 60,000 children. They were put in pots of ghee and they grew up to become young persons. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 33).

Some Purāṇas contain stories somewhat different from the above about the birth of the 60,000 children. e.g. in the 9th Skandha of Devī Bhāgavata, the story is related as follows ; "Keśinī delivered the son Asamañjasa and Sumati did not deliver at all. So she did tapas for Śiva for children and because of his blessing she conceived. Sumati delivered only hundred years after continuing to be pregnant, and even that was only a piece of flesh, and she began weeping addressing Śiva, who appeared before her and cut the mass of flesh into 60,000 parts. Each piece of flesh transformed itself into a very powerful and effulgent man.

5) Loss of children. Kapila turned into ashes the 60,000 sons of Sagara. Bhagīratha revived them. (For details see under Bhagīratha).

6) Triumphal tour. Sagara ruled the kingdom well and while living happily thus with his sons, he set out on a triumphal tour. After conquering the northern regions he moved towards the south, his object being Māhiṣmatī, Kingdom of the Hehayas. He destroyed the Hehayas completely in battle. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 89 and 90).

7) Evening of life. Sagara ruled the kingdom for 300 years. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 91). His son, Asamañjasa was a tormentor of his subjects. In the evening of his life, Sagara transmitted the throne to his grandson Aṁśumān (son of Asamañjasa). The rest of his life he spent in Aurvāśrama with his wife engaged in meditation.

8) Other information.

(i) Sagara worships Yama in his court, (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 19).

SAHABHOJA. A bird in the line of the offsprings of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

SAHADEVA I. The fifth among the Pāṇḍavas.

Facts about Sahadeva are related under the headings, Dharmaputra, Bhīma, Arjuna, Nakula and Pāṇḍavas. Only those facts, which have not been so related are given hereunder.)

1) A brief biographical sketch. Sahadeva was the son of Pāṇḍu by his wife Mādrī. Two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva were born to Mādrī by the Aśvinīdevas. Along with Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīma and Arjuna, sons of Kuntī, Nakula and Sahadeva spent their childhood in the company of Sages at Śataśṛṅga mountain. Pāṇḍu died and Mādrī followed him in the funeral pyre. After that the Pāṇḍavas lived at Hastināpura under the care of Kuntī. When the 'lac-palace' was burnt down, they took themselves to the forest and ruled the kingdom with Indraprastha as capital. The Pāṇḍavas, who were defeated in the game of dice went again into the forest. Their going into the forest has been described as follows by Vidura.

Yudhiṣṭhira, covering his face with cloth and Bhīma stretching out his powerful hands moved into the forest. Arjuna followed them throwing up sand particles. Sahadeva went rubbing his face with earth, Nakula, the most handsome of men, followed them, his body smeared with dust. Pāñcālī, her face concealed in hair and weeping went behind the king. Sage Dhaumya with Kuśa grass in his hands, accompanied them chanting Vedic hymns. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 80).

Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Vidura why the Pāṇḍavas assumed these different poses and attitudes and Vidura answered him thus : Yudhiṣṭhira covered his face to show that he would not retaliate in anger though he had lost the kingdom due to cheating. Bhīma stretched out his hands to show that he was unrivalled in manual power. Arjuna threw out sand to say that he would shoot his arrows into the enemy camp like particles of sand. Sahadeva rubbed earth on his face as he did not want anybody to distinguish his face. Nakula, the most handsome of men, smeared his face with dust so that, on the way, women should not desire him.

When the Pāṇḍavas returned after twelve years' stay in exile in the forest and one year's stay incognito Duryodhana refused to allot them even a single house, and war for eighteen days between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas was fought in the field of Kurukṣetra. The Kauravas were wiped out. Yudhiṣṭhira became king and performed the Rajasūyayajña after which the Pāṇḍavas went out on the great journey and gave up their lives.

SAHASRAMUKHARĀVAṆA.

1) General. A Daitya King, who ruled Trilokapurī, a country thousands of miles away from India. Trilokapurī was an island at the centre of the seas. He was a terror to the whole world and possessed a thousand heads and two thousand hands.

2) Secured boon. This Rāvaṇa once went to Satyaloka and performed the most intense tapas for many years. Yet, Brahmā did not appear and then he began cutting his heads one after the other and offering them in the fire. Nine hundred and ninetynine of his heads were cut thus. When he was about to cut the last head also, Brahmā, fearing the end of the world, appeared and granted him the following three boons.

(i) You will not die at the hands of anyone, but a woman.

(ii) Brahmāstra, which would annihilate, will be at your disposal.

(iii) You will also possess an aerial chariot for travels as you please, Sahasramukha, who returned to his country with the boons became emperor of all Daityas and then conquered heaven, Pātāla, Kailāsa, Vaikuṇṭha and the eight regions of the world.

He then defeated Pātālarāvaṇa and wedded his only daughter Indumukhī. He got as a present a weapon called Kaṭhorakuṭhāra. He propagated in the world the customs and practices of heaven with the result that all the customs of the Devas were derogated. Good people felt harassed. In the rise of unrighteousness righteousness became helpless.

3) Curse. Once on his way to his father-in-law's house Sahasramukharāvaṇa raped a Vidyādhara woman, Cañcalākṣī, who was performing tapas of Lakṣmīdevī and Cañcalākṣī cursed him that Lakṣmīdevī would kill him.

4) Son. Vajrabāhu was Sahasramukha's son. He secured from Śiva Pāśupatāstra and an armour impenetrable by anyone. Vajrabāhu captured Indra and Subrahmaṇya killed the former.

5) Death. Sahasramukha had an army-chief named Bāṇa and both of them together did incalculable harm to the three worlds. Śrī Rāma was King of Ayodhyā at the time, and Devas and sages complained to him about Sahasramukha and as soon as the complainants left Ayodhyā, Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa came there. They told Rāma about the abduction by Sahasramukha's second son, Candragupta of Sugrīva's daughter and Vibhīṣaṇa's daughter-in-law. At once Śrī Rāma, along with Lakṣmaṇa, Sugrīva, Vibhīṣaṇa, Hanūmān and a great army of monkeys reached Sahasramukha's capital city. Śrī Rāma sent word to him through Hanūmān that Sugrīva's daughter and Vibhīṣaṇa's daughter-in-law should be returned, Indra should be released and that pardon should be begged for, for his errors. Angered at this message Sahasramukha deputed Bāṇa to fight Śrī Rāma. Bāṇa was killed in battle. (See under Bāṇa IV). Then ensued a fierce battle between Rāma and Sahasramukha, the latter aided by Candragupta. Aṅgada was about to be overpowered by Candragupta, and then the following celestial voice was heard : "Candragupta will not die as long as his wife Padmāvatī is reciting Brahmamantra imparted by Brahmā." Then Vibhīṣaṇa sent Hanūmān to the women's quarters and as a result of the latter using a 'Kūṭatantrayantra' great confusion and quarrels broke out among the women-folk, and utilising the opportunity Aṅgada killed Candragupta.

Sahasramukha fought Śrī Rāma single-handed. All tactics of Rāma proved to be of no use. Then he remembered Brahmā's boon to Sahasramukha and Cañcalākṣī's curse upon him. Immediately Śrī Rāma brought down Sītā from Ayodhyā and the latter shot the Śaktika arrow at the throat of Sahasramukha and he was killed. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarakāṇḍa), SAHASRANĀMA (N). (Sahasra = thousand; nāma = name).

Hymns containing the thousand names of Viṣṇu, Śiva and Devī are generally known as Sahasranāma. The recitation of these names is considered to be annihilative of all sins. Sahasranāma of Viṣṇu is more popular.

SAHASRĀNĪKA. A King of the lunar dynasty. (For details see under Udayana).

SAHASRAPĀDA (SAHASRAPĀT).
1) General. A maharṣi, who was transformed into a serpent by the curse of Khagama, another maharṣi. But a talk with King Ruru restored him to his former self. (For details see under Ruru, para 4).
2) Other information. Ruru desired to get some information about serpent yajña from Sahasrapāt, who answered the former that he would hear the story of Āstīka from brahmins and then disappeared. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 3).

SAHASRAVĀK (SADAHSUVĀK). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 100).

SAHIṢṆU. One of the three sons of Pulaha Prajāpati by his wife Kṣamā, the other two being Kardama and Urvarīyān. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

SAHOḌHA. A child conceived by a girl while she is unmarried but delivered after she is married. (See under Putra)

SAHYA. A mountain on the plain of Lavaṇasamudra (salt sea). Monkeys, in the course of their search for Sītā crossed this mountain, which is one of the saptakulaparvatas (seven great mountains) in India. Nahuṣa once picnicked on this mountain along with apsarā women. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 11 and 12; Vana Parva, Chapter 282; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9).

ŚAIBYA I. An ancient King of India. He was the father of Sṛñjaya and a close friend of Sage Nārada and Sage Parvata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 7).

ŚAIBYA II. King of the Śibi land. Mahābhārata gives the following pieces of information about him :—
(i) Govāsa, King of Śibi land was the father-in-law of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76).
(ii) Śaibya adorned Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 25).
(iii) Śaibya and the King of Kāśī had come to Upaplavya city with an "Akṣauhiṇī" (division of the army) to attend the marriage of Abhimanyu. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 16).
(iv) Duryodhana admitted that Śaibya was the greatest archer in the army of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 5).
(v) During the Bhārata Yuddha, Śaibya and the King of Kāśī were standing to protect Dhṛṣṭadyumna's "Krauñcavyūha". (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 56).
(vi) This Śaibya was the grandson of Uśīnara. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 64).

ŚAIBYA III. Name of a horse tied to Śrī Kṛṣṇa's chariot. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 20, 22, and 283).

ŚAIBYA IV. A Kṣatriya hero born in the Vṛṣṇi family. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 34, we read that he learnt Dhanurveda (science of archery) from Arjuna and shone in Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly.

ŚAIBYA V. A Kṣatriya King who was defeated by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. There is a reference to this Śaibya in Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38.

ŚAIBYA VI. A warrior who fought against the Pāṇḍavas on the side of Kauravas. He fought from the "Sarvatobhadravyūha" formed by Bhīṣma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 2).

ŚAIBYA VII. King of Sauvīra land. When Jarāsandha invaded Gomanta city, Śaibya was put in charge of the defence of the western gate of that city. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha). His daughter Ratnā married Akrūra. (Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 45, Verse 28).

ŚAIBYĀ I. One of the wives of King Sagara. Sagara had two wives named Sumati and Keśinī. In Devī Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha we see that Sumati had another name, "Vaidarbhī" and Keśinī had another name, "Śaibyā". Prince Asamañjasa was the son of Śaibyā.

ŚAIBYĀ II. Queen of Dyumatsena, the King of Sālva. This Śaibyā was the mother of Satyavān. (See under Satyavān).

ŚAIBYĀ III. One of the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When her husband Śrī Kṛṣṇa renounced his body, this Śaibyā jumped into the fire and was burnt to death. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 73).

ŚAIKHĀVATYA. An ancient sage. Ambā who was forsaken by the King of Sālva went and mourned over her misfortune in Śaikhāvatya's āśrama. This sage consoled her. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 175, Verse 38).

ŚAILĀBHA. A Sanātana Viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 32).

ŚAILAKAMPĪ. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 63).

ŚAILĀLAYA. A King of ancient time. He was the grandfather of Bhagadatta. After performing tapas in the tapovana at Kurukṣetra he attained Indraloka. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 10).

ŚAILODĀ. A river flowing between the two mountains, Meru and Mandara. Arjuna conquered and subdued the low class people who inhabited the valley of this river. A low-class people known as "Khasas" used to live on the banks of this river under the shade of the dense growth of bamboo trees. These low class people had brought presents of gold for Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52. Verse 2).

ŚAILŪṢA. A Gandharva. A class of Gandharvas is also known as "Śailūṣas". Some references found in the Purāṇas concerning Śailūṣas are given below :—
(i) Śrī Rāma sent Bharata and completely destroyed the class of Gandharvas called Śailūṣas who were causing trouble on the shore of the eastern ocean. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa).
(ii) During the reign of Śrī Rāma, as ordered by him, Bharata killed with his shower of arrows, the wicked Gandharva named Śailūṣa and his three crores of sons who lived on the banks of the river Sindhu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 11),
(iii) Rāvaṇa's brother, Vibhīṣaṇa had married Saramā the daughter of a Śailūṣa Gandharva. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
(iv) The Gandharva named Śailūṣa serves Kubera and remains in Kubera's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 26).

SAIṀHIKEYA (S). The Asuras (Demons) who were the sons of Siṁhikā. Two sons named Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu and a daughter named Siṁhikā were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Diti. Siṁhikā was given in marriage to Vipracitti. The sons of this couple were known by the name Saiṁhikeyas. Rāhu was the first of the Saiṁhikeyas. (Agni Purāṇa. Chapter 19). For further details see under Rāhu.

SAINDHAVA I. A disciple of the hermit Śaunaka. (See under Guruparamparā).

SAINDHAVA II. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 25, that the inhabitants of the kingdom of Sindhu were called Saindhavas.

SAINDHAVĀRAṆYA. An ancient holy place of pilgrimage in Bhārata. This holy place is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 15).

SAINDHAVAYĀNA. One of Viśvāmitra's sons, who were expounders of Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 51).

SAINYANIRYĀṆA PARVA. A sub-section of Udyoga Parva in Mahābhārata. This subsection comprises Chapters 151 to 159 of Udyoga Parva.

SAIRANDHRĪ. The pseudonym assumed by Pāñcālī, when the Pāṇḍavas lived incognito in the palace of King Virāṭa. (See under Pāñcālī).

ŚAIRĪṢAKA. A region in India, celebrated in the Purāṇas. Nakula, in the course of his triumphal march in the western regions, conquered this land also. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 6).

ŚAIŚAVA. A land famous in the Purāṇas. The Kṣatriya Kings of this country brought presents for Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 18).

ŚAIŚIRĀYAṆA. A Maharṣi. The famous Kālayavana was his son, born to him by his wife Gopālī. Śaiśirāyaṇa was the priest of King Trigarta. Once the king ordered the sage to have sexual union with his wife Vṛkādevī to test his virility. (Harivaṁśa, 1; 35; 12).

ŚAIŚIREYA. An ācārya who was the disciple of Śākalya. "Śaiś irīya Saṁhitā", a work produced by him is considered to be an authoritative treatise on the Śākalya branch of knowledge.

ŚAIŚIRINDHRA. A country in ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 57.

ŚAIVACĀPA. Śiva's bow. It was made by Viśvakarmā. He made a Vaiṣṇavacāpa and a Śaivacāpa for the purpose of a battle which was fought once between Viṣṇu and Śiva. (See the 7th sub para, 7th para under the word Viṣṇu).

Long ago when Śiva set out to break up Dakṣayāga, he was armed with this bow. After defeating the enemy and breaking up the yāga, Śiva cooled down and presented the bow to his devotee, the king of Videha. The king took the bow to his palace, kept it in his armoury and used to offer due worship to it. His descendants also continued to worship it. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa).

ŚĀIVĀLA. A town in India. There is a reference to it in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 18.

ŚAKA. A particular sect of people or caste. The following information about the Śakas is gathered from the Mahābhārata.

(i) Śakas were born from the breast of Nandinī, Vasiṣṭha's cow. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 36).

(ii) Bhīmasena, during his triumphal tour of the eastern regions subjugated the Śakas. (Sabhā Parva. Chapter 32, Verse 14).

(iii) Nakula conquered them. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 14).

(iv) King of the Śakas participated in Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 32).

(v) The Pāṇḍavas invited them to take part in the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

(vi) They did along with Sudakṣiṇa, king of Kāmboja, service in Duryodhana's army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 21).

(vii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once conquered them. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 45).

(viii) Karṇa once defeated them and conquered their country. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).

(ix) Śakas who were originally Kṣatriyas were demoted as Śūdras as they incurred the displeasure and anger of brahmins. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 21).

(x) As the Śakas and the Yavanas had helped the Haihaya kings Paraśurāma, Sagara and Bharata defeated them in war and drove them off from the country. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

ŚĀKA. A tree in the Śāka island. The island got the name from this tree. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 23).

ŚĀKADVĪPA. One of the Saptadvīpas (seven islands). Sañjaya once gave Dhṛtarāṣṭra a description of this island. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11). Jambūdvīpa, Plakṣadvīpa, Śālmalidvīpa, Kuśadvīpa, Krauñcadvīpa, Śākadvīpa and Puṣkaradvīpa are the Saptadvīpas. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

ŚĀKALA. A city made famous in the Purāṇas. Once it was the capital of the Madra kingdom. (Sabhā Parva Chapter 32, Verse 14), Modern scholars opine that the modern Siyalkot was the old Śākala.

ŚĀKALADVĪPA. An ancient kingdom referred to in the Purāṇas. Prativindhya, king of this kingdom was defeated by Arjuna. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 14).

ŚĀKALYA. A maharṣi in the lineage of gurus (preceptors). (See under Guruparamparā). He systematised the Vedasaṁhitās. It was Bādarāyaṇakṛṣṇa, who became later famous as Vedavyāsa, who first arranged in systematic order the Vedasaṁhitās. Prominent scholars hold the view that Vyāsa lived between 1300-1500 B.C. The saṁhitā text now popular systematised by Śākalya is called Śākalya śākhā (Śākalya branch).

Śākalya is reported to have saved Kaśyapa maharṣi once. When king Parīkṣit was cursed that he would die by Takṣaka's poison Kaśyapa started for his court to save the king from the calamity. But, Takṣaka met him on the way and sent him back laden with presents of gems, ornaments etc. People derided Kaśyapa, who on account of covetousness, retreated from the duty of saving the king's life and non-cooperated with him in every way. In this contingency Kaśyapa sought the help of Śākalya, who advised the former to bathe in the sacred tīrthas in the rivers Godāvarī and Sarasvatī. Kaśyapa did so and regained his old reputation.

ŚĀKAMBHARĪ. A sacred place dear to Devī. He, who fasts for three nights here, will derive the same benefits as of eating lettuce (śāka) for twelve years. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 13).

ŚAKAṬA. An asura. (See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 9, Sub Para 2).

ŚAKAṬĀLA. An intelligent minister. (For details see under Vararuci).

ŚĀKAṬĀYANA. A famous grammarian. He lived before Yāska and Pāṇini. He is considered to be the author of the well-known text on grammar called 'Uṇādisūtrapāṭha'. He is referred to as the foremost among the grammarians in the aṣṭādhyāyī of Pāṇini. (Pāṇinisūtra, 1, 4, 86 and 87).

ŚĀKAVAKTRA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 78).

ŚĀKAYANYA. A maharṣi. (For details see under Bṛhadratha).

ŚĀKHA. According to one view Śākha was the younger brother of Subrahmaṇya while there are others who maintain that he was Subrahmaṇya's son. In verse 37, Chapter 44 of Śalya Parva it is stated that Śākha was the son of the Vasu Anala and the younger brother of Subrahmaṇya and that he had two brothers called Vaiśākha and Naigameya. It is stated in Chapter 15, part 1 of Viṣṇu Purāṇa as follows:- "Āpa, Dhruva, Soma, Dharma, Anila, Agni, Pratyūṣa and Prabhāsa are the aṣṭavasus. Vaitaṇḍa, Śrama, Śānta, and Dhvani were sons of Āpa. Kāla, who annihilates the entire world is the son of Dhruva and Varccas is Soma's son. Varccas gives people the vital glow. Draviṇa, Hutahavyavaha, Śiśvara, Prāṇa and Varuṇa were the sons of Dharma by Manoharā. Anila's wife was Śivā, and two sons, Manojava and Avijñatagati were born to the couple. Kumāra, son of Agni was born in Śarastamba and he had three brothers called Śākha, Viśākha and Naigameya."

The following story about the birth of Śākha is from Taraṅga 6, Lāvāṇakalambaka of Kathāsaritsāgara: Defeated in battle by Tārakāsura, Indra decided to have no more fight with him and retired to Mount Mahāmeru. Devas and maharṣis sought asylum with Subrahmaṇya, who gave them protection. Indra came to know of it and fought with Subrahmaṇya feeling that the latter had captured his kingdom. Two sons, Śākha and Viśākha were born from the face of Subrahmaṇya wounded by the Vajrāyudha of Indra.

ŚAKRA. A synonym of Indra. (See under Indra.)

ŚAKRADEVA. A prince of Kaliṅga, who fought on the Kaurava side in the great war and got killed by Bhīma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 24).

ŚAKRAKUMĀRIKĀ. A sacred place from very olden days. Those who bathe there will attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 81).

ŚAKRAVĀPĪ. A nāga, which lived in a forest near Girivraja. The forest was near the āśrama of Gautama. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 9).

ŚAKRĀVARTTA. A holy place. He who worships Devatās and the souls of his ancestors here will attain the holy world. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 29).

SAKṚDGRAHA. A rural area in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 66).

ŚAKTA. Son of Manasvī, the great-grandson of emperor Pūru. Sauvīrī was his mother. He had two brothers called Saṁhanana and Vāgmī, both of them great in warfare. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 7).

ŚAKTI I.

(1) General. Son of Vasiṣṭha by Arundhatī. He was the first-born among the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha. Kalmāṣapāda, the Rākṣasa captured and ate Śakti and his pregnant wife Adṛśyantī spent her days in great grief with Vasiṣṭha. Parāśaramuni, father of Vyāsa, was Adṛśyantī's son. (For details see under (Adṛśyantī).

2) Other information

(i) It was Śiva, who incarnated himself as the son of Vasiṣṭha.

(ii) Gopāyana, Bharadvāja, Āpastamba and Arṇodara belong to the line of disciples of Śakti. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

ŚAKTI II. The weapon of Subrahmaṇya is called Śakti, and it was made by Viśvakarman. Viśvakarman once grilled Sūrya (sun) on his machine and reduced his glow. The glow thus released by Viśvakarman fell on the earth and Viśvakarman made with that glow the cakra (disc) of Viṣṇu, the triśūla (trident) of Śiva the Puṣpaka, aerial chariot of Kubera and the Śakti of Subrahmaṇya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 2).

ŚAKTI III. The sound 'Ś' means welfare or prosperity and 'kti' prowess. Therefore Śakti means she, who is the embodiment of prosperity and prowess or she, who grants prosperity and prowess. The definition of 'Bhagavatī' is, she who combines in herself knowledge affluence, wealth, reputation, power and the female organ. Therefore the word 'Śakti' may be taken to mean Bhagavatī and Pārvatī, and what are termed as Bhagavatī, Śakti, Devī, Ambikā, Pārvatī etc. are the manifestations of Śakti, Śiva's spouse. This Śakti exists fractionally in all Devas. When, once upon a time the devāsura war broke out the Śaktis of Devas like Brahmā emerged to help Caṇḍikā. The vehicle, ornaments, weapon etc. of each Deva, his Devī also possessed. The Śaktis (Devīs) of the Devas appeared in the following manner. Brahmāṇī, wife of Brahmā, rode on the swan wearing beads around her neck and holding the water-vessel in her hands. She was followed by Vaiṣṇavī Viṣṇu's Śakti on Garuḍa wearing yellow clothes and with the conch, disc, lotus etc. in her hands. Śāṅkarī Śiva's Śakti rode on the ox with the crescent moon and serpents as ornaments and holding in her hands the Śūla. 'Kaumārī', Subrahmaṇya's Śakti rode on Airāvata with śūla in hands. The Śakti called 'Vārāhī in the form of a great boar rode carrying a corpse, Nārasiṁhī' Śakti took the form of narasiṁha (half man and half lion). Yāmyā, Yama's śakti, rode on buffalo holding in her hands a long stick. Śaktis called Kauberī and Vāruṇī took their respective forms and in this manner all the Śaktis came to the help of Devī. This sight pleased not only the Devas, but the mother of the universe also. Along with them incarnated on earth Śaṁkara, who gives 'śaṁ' (happiness) to the world and blessed Caṇḍikā on the battle-field (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th and 9th Skandhas).

ŚAKTIBHADRA. A dramatist in Sanskrit, who lived in the seventh century A.D. He belonged to Chengannur in the Kerala State. He was a disciple of Śaṅkarācārya. The Dramatic composition 'Āścaryacūḍāmaṇi' is his work.

Śaktibhadra, after writing his drama, once read it out to Śaṅkarācārya. As the ācārya was observing silenee that day, he made no comments about the drama. Disappointed at this silence of his Guru, the dramatist burnt his work to ashes in fire. When his observance of silence was over, the Guru asked his disciple for the drama. When told about the burning of the drama the ācārya repeated from memory the whole drama. The above legend is widely prevalent in Kerala.

ŚAKUNA(OMENS).

1) General. In ancient times people in all countries used to consider Śakunas to be harbingers of good or evil things. Today also many people believe in omens. In India

Śakuna had developed as a science even in olden days. A general description about omens, good and bad, according to the Indian concept, is given below.
Mixed medicines, black grains, cotton, grass, dried cow-dung, charcoal, molasses, one whose head is shaven clean or whose body is smeared with oil or who is naked; flesh-eater; iron, dirt, skin, hair of the head, insane person, eunuch, prison, guard; women, who are either carrying or are widows; oil cake, paddy husk, ashes, skull, bone, broken vessel etc. are evil omens. Broken, fierce or murmuring instrumental music also is a bad omen.
It is a good omen to hear the voice of beckoning (come) in front of the traveller, but it is not good if the voice is heard from behind. It is good if the voice of farewell (go) is heard from behind, but is bad to be heard in the front. Disapproving or prohibitive words like "Where are you going, stop, don't go", "what is to be done by going there?" etc. will cause death. It is a bad omen to see carnivorous birds perched on the top of flag-staff etc. For vehicles to bump, weapons to break and head to get wounded by dashing against doors etc. as also for umbrella or clothes to fall down are ill omens. Praising or worshipping Viṣṇu will do away with the inauspicious results of ill omens. But, if evil omens are seen continuously the traveller should return home.
White flowers are good omens. Full pots are the best of omens. Flesh, fish, sound from afar, old man, solitary man, cow, goat, ox, horse, elephant, devas, burning fire, Dūrvā grass, fresh cow-dung, prostitute, gold, silver, gems, Orris root, mustard, medicinal herbs rooted out of soil, Bengal gram, weapon, sword, stool, royal symbols, dead body being carried without lamentation, fruits, ghee, curdled milk, milk, akṣata, mirror, honey, conch, sugarcane, auspicious words, music by devotees, loud thunder and lightning are auspicious omens.
2) Two kinds of omens. Omens are divided into two varieties, dīpta (glowing) and śānta (quiescent, mild). Glowing omens bring about auspicious results and the other inauspicious results. There are six ways or elements, which make omens dīptam, i.e. velā (time), dik (region), deśa (place), Karaṇa (action), ruta (cry) and jāti (kind). The power or effect of dīpta increases in ascending order.
To see creatures, which move about during day time as moving about during night and vice-versa is velādīpta. In the case of stars, lagnas (the dominant zodiac) and planets, those which are virulent are considered to be dīptas. With regard to stars and lagnas, those which the Sun enters into are dhūmita, those wherein the Sun is already present are jvalita and those from which the sun has left are Aṁśariṇī. These three are dīptas and the rest śāntas. (This is called velādīpta). When dik (region) is dīpta it is called digdīpta. To see forest animals in village and village-animals in forest is digdīpta. To see good brahmins at inauspicious places is deśadīpta. To see some one doing work not ordained to his caste is karaṇadīpta. To hear different horrible voices is rutadīpta. To see purely flesh-eating animals is jātidīpta. If all the characteristics of dīpta do not synchronise but differ from one another it is called śānta and if the characteristics of dīpta and śānta are mixed up it is called miśra.
3) Birds, animals etc. If the cāṣa bird (wild crow) makes sound when the king gets out of the palace, he will meet with dishonour. If the sound is heard on the left side, there will be quarrel, but food will be served. If the bird is sighted on the right side at the start of the journey, it is a good omen. If the peacock makes different sounds, threats from thieves will result. If a deer is seen in front of the king going out on a journey, death will happen to him. To see the monkey-bear, rat, tiger, lion, cat and donkey coming in the opposite direction also will bring about death. Donkey braying in awkward notes is also inauspicious. To see kapiñjala bird on the left side is an excellent omen; on the right side also it is not bad. But, behind the person, it is a bad omen. Tittiri bird also on the rear is not good.
It is always a good omen if the deer, boar and spotted deer cross the path from the left to the right side; the opposite of it is bad omen. It is a favourable omen if the ox, horse, jackal, tiger, lion, cat and donkey pass from the right to the left side. It is auspicious to see the females of the jackal etc. on the right side and the males on the left. To hear the serpent, hare, boar and wild lizard named is good, but to see them is not so. Contrary to this is the effect to see the monkey, ox etc. The result of the important and powerful omens witnessed at the start of the journey will be experienced the very same day. The omen of the intoxicated, those craving for food, children, people quarrelling and those who stand away from the limits of the road is effectless. To hear the jackal howl once, twice, thrice or four times is a good omen, but to hear it five or six times is bad, The seventh time is good.
If heard for more than the seventh time it will have no effect. Dīpta omen facing the Sun will horripilate men, cause fear in the case of vehicles and is to be greatly feared. If sāraṅga (lotus, deer, elephant, peacock, cuckoo, lion, horse etc.) is met as the first thing in an auspicious place its good effect will last for one year, and if these are met at the inauspicious place, the result will be bad. Everybody should see sāraṅga at some auspicious place every dawn.
If the crow is found crowing in fear on the left side of camps put up for the army of the King, the head of the army will have to face great threats. If the crow, perches on and pecks on the shadow, vehicle, slippers, umbrella, clothes etc. the owner of those things will die. If they are respected by the crow, honour will accrue to their owner. If the crow flies about the entrance of the house it means that he, who had left the house will return. If the crows bring and scatter red coloured and baked things in the courtyard, the owner of the house will meet with imprisonment. If the crow carries to a house something yellow in colour, gold or silver, the owner of the house will get such things. Whatever thing the crow carries away from the house, such things therein will be destroyed. If the crow vomits raw flesh in the rear of the house, the owner of it will come into possession of wealth; if soil is deposited thus, land will be acquired. If gem is deposited, extensive lands will come to the owner of the house. If the crow flies in the same direction as the one chosen by the traveller, prosperity and success will result to him and if it flies in the opposite direction not only will the traveller not achieve his object but, he will also meet with danger. If the crows come crowing against one starting on a journey, it will be hindered. To see the crow on the left side is a good omen. If it is seen on the right side, the journey will not end in success. It is very good if the crow flies in the same direction as the traveller on his left side, if on the right side the result will be of medium nature. If it flies in the opposite direction on the left side the traveller will face hindrance. If the crow flies into the house when one is about to start on the journey, it means the journey may be begun. The crow which looks at the sun with one eye and perched on one leg is surely indicative of fear for the traveller. If it is in the hollow of a tree great calamities will happen. To dream of crow with its mouth full of excretion is indicative of all-round success.

If the dog enters and barks in the house the result will be sure death of the owner of the house. But, if the dog smells on the left side of the man it is good, and if it smells on the right side, it is bad. If the dogs come against the person about to start on a journey, it will cause hindrance to him. If the dog stands blocking his path there will be threat from thieves. If it comes facing him with a piece of bone in its mouth, he will fail to achieve the object of his travel; if it comes biting a cord, the same will be the result. It is auspicious to see dog, which carries a slipper in its mouth or the mouth of which is filled with flesh. Fear will overtake him in front of whom the dog urinates and goes away. But if not a bitch and if, after urination, it goes to an auspicious place, to the shade of an auspicious tree or towards an auspicious thing, then it is a good omen. The same considerations are valid in the case of the jackal etc.

If cows cry without cause or reason, it indicates ruin to the master. If the cry is in an awkward tone, death will result. If the ox murmurs during night, it is good for the master. Ox tied to a cord also is good omen. If cows are found to treat their calves without love, it spells ruin for pregnant women. It is a good omen to see cows which have got wet and whose horns are smeared with earth. These considerations apply to buffaloes as well.

If elephants indulge in the sexual act in villages, it augurs ill to the villages. If the she-elephant delivers or gets mad in the country, i.e. not in the forest, it spells ruin to king. Ruin to the King will be the result if the elephant objects to his mounting it or runs back home or if the mad elephant is found without madness. It is an auspicious omen if the elephant places its right foot on the left foot of it and also if it holds its tusk with its trunk.

ŚAKUNI I. A serpent born in the Dhṛtarāṣṭra dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña conducted by Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16).

ŚAKUNI II. An asura who was the son of Hiraṇyākṣa and brother of Śambara, Trimūrdhā, Śaṅku and Ārya. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

ŚAKUNI III. A king born in the dynasty of Bharata, son of Duṣyanta. Śakuni was Bhīmaratha's son and father of Urudbhi. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚAKUNI IV. A son of Ikṣvāku. (For details see under Viśvakarmā, Para 2).

ŚAKUNI V. A maharṣi to whom were born nine sons called Dhruva, Śāli, Budha, Tāra, Jyotiṣmān, Nirmoha, Jitakāma, Dhyānakāṣṭha, and Guṇādhika. The first five of them led householder's life while the last four took to Sannyāsa even as children. (Padma Purāṇa Ādikhaṇḍa, Chapter 31).

ŚAKUNI VI. The notorious uncle of Duryodhana. Son of King Subala of Gāndhāra and brother of Gāndhārī. Śakuni, staying at Hastināpura, pulled the strings for all the evil actions of Duryodhana It was Śakuni's hands, which worked in the background in driving the Pāṇḍavas out of the kingdom and in denuding Pāñcālī of her clothes. It was also his evil tactics, which tore asunder all chances of conciliation with the Pāṇḍavas on their return from the forest and thus led to the great war that lasted for eighteen days. At last he was killed by Sahadeva during the war. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 28, Verse 61). A resume of the part played by Śakuni in the Bhārata story is given below :

(1) It was with his help that Duryodhana defeated Dharmaputra in the foul game of dice. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 50).

(2) He was born, due to the anger of the Devas, to destroy righteousness. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 111).

(3) He was Dvāpara re-born. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 78).

(4) It was he who took the initiative in marrying Gāndhārī to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 109 Verse 15).

(5) He was present at the wedding of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 2)

(6) He once advised Duryodhana to annihilate the Pāṇḍavas, root and branch. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 199).

(7) He was present at the Rājasūya yajña performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

(8) Even after the yajña was over and everyone had departed, he remained there for some time more with Duryodhana. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 68).

(9) It was he who first discussed with Dhṛtarāṣṭra the question of inviting Dharmaputra for a game of dice so that the wealth of the Pāṇḍavas might be extracted from them. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 49).

(10) By foul play he defeated Dharmaputra in the game of dice. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 61).

(11) It was he who cooperated with Duryodhana to invite Dharmaputra again for a game of dice fixing the bets and in defeating him in the game. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 9).

(12) He once prophesied that the Pāṇḍavas would not return after their life in forest. (Vana Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 7).

(13) While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Dvaita forest Śakuni suggested the need for leading a procession to them. (Vana Parva, Chapter 238, Verse 21).

(14) Śakuni and Duryodhana led the procession. In the forest he got wounded in fighting with the Gandharvas and he returned home. (Vana Parva, Chapter 241, Verse 17).

(15) Afterwards he once advised Duryodhana to restore the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 251, Verse 1).

(16) He too participated in the great war and on the first day of the war he fought a duel with Prativindhya. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 63).

(17) In the battle that followed, Irāvān killed five brothers of Śakuni. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 25).

(18) He then fought with Yudhiṣṭhira, Nakula and Sahadeva and got defeated. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 8).
(19) He fought with Sahadeva. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 22).
(20) Then Śakuni resorted to certain magical tricks. Arjuna successfully faced the tricks and Śakuni ran away from the battlefield. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 15).
(21) He fought with Abhimanyu. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 5).
(22) He fought with Nakula and Sahadeva. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 21).
(23) He fought with Sātyaki. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 11).
(24) Bhīmasena killed the seven mahārathis and five brothers of Śakuni. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 22).
(25) Nakula defeated Śakuni. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 269, Verse 16).
(26) He attacked the Pāṇḍava army at the instance of Duryodhana. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 170, Verse 66)
(27) Arjuna defeated Śakuni. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 161, Verse 25).
(28) On the death of Droṇācārya Śakuni ran away from the battlefield in great fear. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 9).
(29) In the fight that followed he defeated Śrutasena. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 40).
(30) Śakuni was defeated in the fighting with Sātyaki. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 48).
(31) In the fight with Bhīma he fell down. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 77, Verse 66).
(32) In the next fight he killed the Kalinda prince. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 7).
(33) Cavalry of the Pāṇḍavas attacked Śakuni and he got wounded. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 41).
(34) In the battle that followed Sahadeva killed Śakuni. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 28, Verse 61).
(35) After the war was over Vyāsa summoned the souls of those killed in the war to the surface of Gaṅgā and Śakuni's soul was present among them. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 9).
(36) After his death he joined Dvāpara. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 21).
(37) Synonyms of Śakuni used in Mahābhārata: Gāndhārapati, Gāndhārarāja, Gāndhārarājaputra, Gāndhārarājasuta, Kitava, Parvatīya, Saubala, Saubalaka, Saubaleya, Subalaja and Subalaputra.

ŚĀKUNI. A maharṣi, who lived in Madhu forest. Of the nine sons of Śākuni, Dhruva, Śīla, Budha and Tāra were house-holders and agnihotris (those who sacrificed offerings in fire). (Padma Purāṇa, Svarga Khaṇḍa 81).

ŚAKUNIGRAHA. Vinatā, in her fierce attitude or aspect is Śakunigraha. Brahmins call it Skandāpasmāra also. (Vana Parva, Chapter 280, Verse 26).

ŚAKUNIKĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 15).

ŚAKUNTA. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Vedāntin. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 50).

ŚAKUNTALĀ. Foster-daughter of sage Kaṇva.

1) Birth. Śakuntalā was a daughter born to Viśvāmitra of the Apsarā woman called Menakā. Viśvāmitra was engaged in intense tapas on the banks of river Mālinī in the Himālayas. Indra deputed Menakā to break the maharṣi's tapas. She enticed him away from his tapas and got pregnant by him. But she forsook the child on the banks of Mālinī and returned to Devaloka.

2) Childhood. Birds gathered round the forsaken orphan-child. While Śakuntas i.e. birds were petting the child Kaṇva came that way, saw the child and took it with him to the āśrama. As śakuntas had petted it, the child was named Śakuntalā.

3) As queen. King Duṣyanta of the lunar dynasty married Śakuntalā and to the couple was born the famous Bharata. This is the original story about Śakuntalā's married life. All the Indian languages contain two different versions of Śakuntalā's life. One version is that related in Vyāsa's Bhārata and the second is that contained in Kālidāsa's Śākuntala. Many scholars opine that in the matter of the Śakuntalā episode Kālidāsa has gone a step further and for the better, and therefore both the versions of the story are to be carefully studied by us.

(i) Vyāsa's Śakuntalā. Śakuntalā, now grown up as a maiden, was alone in the āśrama when King Duṣyanta, out in the forest on a hunting expedition, came there. In the absence of her foster-father Kaṇva, Śakuntalā welcomed the King. They fell in love with each other and the King married Śakuntalā according to the Gāndharva way of marriage and lived with her for a few days. Śakuntalā became pregnant. The King returned to his palace.

Kaṇva returned to the āśrama and he was pleased that what had been destined to take place had happened. In due course of time Śakuntalā delivered a boy, who was named Sarvadamana. When the child was grown up, Kaṇva sent his mother along with him to Duṣyanta's palace. The King did not recognise them, but a celestial voice convinced him that the child was his own son. The King heartily welcomed his wife and son and Śakuntalā lived in the palace as his honoured wife.

(ii) Kālidāsa's Śakuntalā. Kaṇva brought up Śakuntalā born to Viśvāmitra of Menakā in his āśrama and she had two companions called Anasūyā and Priyaṁvadā. All the three grew up and became maidens.

King Duṣyanta, who went out hunting in the forest followed a deer to Kaṇva's āśrama where he saw Śakuntalā watering the garden with her companions. Kaṇva was then away at Cakratīrtha. Duṣyanta, who fell in love with Śakuntalā, married her according to the Gāndharva rules and lived with her at the āśrama for a few days. Meanwhile Śakuntalā became pregnant, and emissaries from the palace came and the King returned with them. He left the āśrama after promising Śakuntalā that he would soon return to her. He gave her his signet ring.

Sad over the separation from Duṣyanta and immersed in thought about him, Śakuntalā was sitting there in the āśrama when Durvāsas came there. She did not see the maharṣi nor welcome him respectfully. He got angry at this and cursed her that she be forgotten by him about whom she was so intensely thinking. Śakuntalā did not hear the curse either, but her companions who heard it begged pardon of the muni on behalf of Śakuntalā and prayed for absolution from the curse. Then he said that if Śakuntalā showed the King any sign about their relationship the King would remember her. Her companions did not tell Śakuntalā about the

Days and months passed by, yet Duṣyanta did not return and Kaṇva sent Śakuntalā, in whom signs of pregnancy had become prominent, to the palace of the King in the company of Gautamī and Śāriṅgarava. Anasūyā reminded Śakuntalā to take particular care of the signet ring. On their way to the palace Śakuntalā and others bathed in the Somavāratīrtha, and nobody noticed Śakuntalā losing from her finger the ring in the tīrtha. They reached the King's palace. None noticed them. Duṣyanta did not remember having even seen her. The signet ring was missing. After leaving Śakuntalā at the palace her companions returned to the āśrama. Menakā, whose heart melted at the pathetic wailings of Śakuntalā led her to Kaśyapa's āśrama, left her there and returned to Devaloka.

The signet ring lost by Śakuntalā was swallowed by a fish, which was netted by a fisherman, who went about the streets to sell the ring extracted from inside the fish. Servants of the King took the fisherman captive. At the sight of the ring thoughts about the past dawned on the King and he remembered all about Śakuntalā. His days became sad pondering over separation from Śakuntalā.

Śakuntalā delivered a boy at the āśrama of Kaśyapa. The child was named Sarvadamana and he grew up as a courageous boy.

On his return from the devāsura war, Duṣyanta entered Kaśyapa's āśrama where he saw Sarvadamana counting the teeth of a lion he had captured. Having heard details about him from the boy the King went inside the āśrama and saw Kaśyapa and Śakuntalā. He returned with Śakuntalā and the boy to the palace with Kaśyapa's blessings. It was this boy Sarvadamana, who afterwards became Bharata, the famous emperor of India.

ŚALA I. One of the three pugilists deputed by Kaṁsa to attack Kṛṣṇa at Mathurā, the other two being Cāṇūra and Muṣṭika. Kṛṣṇa kicked Śala to death. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

ŚALA II. A serpent born in Vāsuki's dynasty and burnt to death at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 5)

ŚALA III. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great war by Bhīma. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 3).

ŚALA IV. Son of Somadatta, a King born in the Kuru dynasty. He had a brother called Bhūriśravas.

(1) Śala was present at the wedding of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 15).

(2) He was present at Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya yajña. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 8).

(3) He was a fierce warrior in Duryodhana's army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 68).

(4) He fought from the southern wing of the great vyūha set up by Bhīṣma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 57).

(5) He fought with Abhimanyu in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 37).

(6) He was killed by Śrutavarman in the battlefield of Kurukṣetra. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 10).

(7) He was one among the valiant souls brought to the surface of the Gaṅgā by Vyāsa (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 10).

(8) After death he became one with the Viśvadevas. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16).

ŚALA V. Son of King Parīkṣit of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. Suśobhanā, daughter of the Maṇḍūka King was his mother. He had two brothers called Dala and Bala. Śala did not return some horses, which he had taken as loan from Vāmadeva maharṣi. Angered at this the maharṣi created some Rākṣasas, who killed Śala. (Vana Parva, Chapter 192).

ŚALABHA I. An asura, son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Danu. He was born in his next life as Prahlāda, the Bālhīka King. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 30).

ŚALABHA II. A warrior, who fought against the Kauravas on the Pāṇḍava side. He was killed by Karṇa. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 49).

ŚALABHĀ. Wife of Atrimaharṣi. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3, 8; 74-78).

ŚALABHĪ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26).

SĀLAGRĀMA. A stone emblem of Viṣṇu.

1) Origin of the name. Sālagrāma is the kind of ammonite, used for making the image of Viṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu is known by the name Sālagrāma also. This name originated from the name Sālagrāma, which is the name of the place from where the river Gaṇḍakī, which flows through Nepal, starts. This Sālagrāma is considered to be a holy place. Mahāviṣṇu and other gods always dwell in this place. Sālagrāma is the name of Viṣṇu who dwells in Sālagrāma. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanzas 123 to 125).

2) The importance of Sālagrāma. The place Sālagrāma is at the origin of river Gaṇḍakī. There are various kinds of stone figures which are called Sālagrāmas. These Sālagrāmas themselves have orginated from portions of Viṣṇu. That is why those stones are used for making images of Viṣṇu. There is a story in the Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, stating that the derivation of these stones is from a portion of Viṣṇu.

During the early days, Sarasvatī, Lakṣmī and Gaṅgā were wives of Mahāviṣṇu. One day there arose a family quarrel among them. (See under Tulasī). As a result of this quarrel, the Devīs cursed each other. Sarasvatī cursed Lakṣmī and changed her to holy basil plant (Tulasī) on the earth. When Lakṣmī was about to depart as Tulasī, Mahāviṣṇu blessed her thus. "Look ! Lakṣmī ! you will live in the world as a holy basil and when the curse has been completed you will come back to me. On that day, a river named Gaṇḍakī, will start from your body which will be in the shape of the holy basil plant. (It is also said that the river Gaṇḍakī has taken birth from the sweat of Śiva and Viṣṇu. Refer to the word Gaṇḍakī). On the bank of that river, I will remain as a stone image. There will be so many worms with strong tusks and teeth, which will pierce the stone into the shape of Sudarśana cakra (the weapon of Viṣṇu) and will create numberless Sālagrāmas. The Sālagrāmas thus made, will be of various sizes and shapes."

3) Different classes of Sālagrāmas. Mention is made in the Purāṇas about nineteen classes of Sālagrāmas. They are given below ;

(i) Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa. With one hole, four cakras (wheels) and Vanamālā (a line like the garland) and of the colour of clouds.
(ii) Lakṣmījanārdana. This is the same as Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa, with the difference that there will be no Vanamālā.
(iii) Raghunātha. With two holes and four wheels and mark of the hoof of a calf. This also will have no Vanamālā.
(iv) Vāmana. With two very small wheels and the colour of the cloud. This too will have no Vanamālā.
(v) Śrīdhara. This is the same as Vāmana with the exception that it will be having Vanamālā. The house in which this is placed will have a prosperity and well being of its own.
(vi) Dāmodara. Will be large and round with two cakras (wheels) and with no Vanamālā.
(vii) Raṇarāma. Neither too large nor too small, but of medium size and round, with two wheels and the marks of child's kick, bow and quiver.
(viii) Rājarājeśvara. Of the size of Raṇarāma with seven cakras, (wheels), ornamented with the mark of umbrella. This will earn for the possessor kingly wealth.
(ix) Ananta. Somewhat thick with fourteen wheels, and as black as a cloud. This Sālagrāma will give men the four Puruṣārthas (objects of life) 'Dharmārthakāmamokṣa' (Duty, wealth, desire and salvation).
(x) Madhusūdana. A sālagrāma in the shape of a wheel with two wheels, and impression of cow's hoof, having the shade of cloud, of ordinary size. This will be very bright.
(xi) Sudarśana. Sudarśana will have only one cakra (wheel).
(xii) Gadādhara. This also will be having only one wheel which will not be bright.
(xiii) Hayagrīva. This will have two wheels and the face of a horse.
(xiv) Nārasiṁha. With a very wide mouth, two wheels, and awful shape. This Sālagrāma will cause instant self-renunciation.
(xv) Lakṣmīnarasiṁha. This also will be having a wide mouth and two wheels. Besides these, there will be the Vanamālā also. This will make house-holders cosy and comfortable.
(xvi) Vāsudeva. The Sālagrāma with two wheels at the region of the hole and with round shape having vividness and brightness, is Vāsudeva. This will grant all desires.
(xvii) Pradyumna. This will have only a minute wheel. The colour will be that of clouds. But on the outer side, there will be a hole in the inside of which there will be a number of cuts or dents. This will give house-holders comfort always.
(xviii) Saṅkarṣaṇa. In the Saṅkarṣaṇa two wheels will be joined face to face. The fore-part will be thinner than the hind-part. This also will do good to house-holders.
(xix) Aniruddha. The colour of this is yellow. This will be quite round and bright. This also will give comfort to the house-holder. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 46).

4). The greatness of Sālagrāma. Of these, the stones with cakras (the weapon Discus), are Bhagavān Viṣṇu in reality. Those who worship this stone with mark of cakra, need not have to take another birth. He who habitually worships Sālagrāma, should avoid arrogance and should be charitable. He who worships Sālagrāma with the mark of wheel should not covet others' wealth and women. The cakra from Dvārakā and the stone from Gaṇḍakī will bring atonement in a moment for sins incurred in a hundred births. Even if one has incurred thousands of sins, one will get remission for all of them by drinking the water of Sālagrāma. Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra will attain heaven if they become house-holders according to Vedic convention and worship Sālagrāma. On no account should women worship Sālagrāma. If by ignorance, a woman, whether she is good-natured or of a higher status, happens to touch Sālagrāma, all her merits earned by good deeds will be lost and she will go to hell. Brahmin sages say that women throwing flowers as oblation on Sālagrāma, commit the greatest sin. If a woman touches a Sālagrāma, the offering of Sandal-wood will be like poisoned rice, flowers like diamond, and meals presented to god before being eaten by the servants in the temple, will be like Kālakūṭa (the poison of Vāsuki), to Bhagavān Viṣṇu. If a woman touches Sālagrāma, she will have to remain in hell for the duration of fourteen Indras. Even the sin of Brahmahatyā (killing a brahmin) will be remitted by drinking the water of Sālagrāma and he will attain heaven. Basil (tulasī) sandalwood, water, conch tinkling bell, wheel, stone, copper pot, and name of Viṣṇu comprise 'Padāmṛta' (the celestial nectar of words) which is said to have the power of remitting sins. The merits obtained by bathing in all the tīrthas and the performing of all the yāgas (sacrifices) dwell in each drop of water of Sālagrāma. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 20).

ŚALĀKĀ. Wife of maharṣi Dhanañjaya, who belonged to Vasiṣṭha gotra. (For details see under Dhanañjaya V).

ŚALAKARA. A nāga born in Takṣaka's dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).

SĀLAKAṬAṄKAṬĀ (SĀLAKAṬAṄKĀ) I A synonym for Alambuṣā. (See under Alambuṣā).

SĀLAKAṬAṄKAṬĀ II. A giantess who was the daughter of Sandhyā. The giant Vidyutkeśa married this giantess Sālakaṭaṅkaṭā. A son named Sukeśa was born to them. (See under Vidyutkeśa).

SĀLAKAṬAṄKAṬĪ. Another name of the giantess Hiḍimbā. (See under Hiḍimbā).

SĀLAṄKĀYANA. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was an expounder of the Vedas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, about this Sālaṅkāyana.

ŚĀLI. A maharṣi in the lineage of Gurus (preceptors). See under Guruparamparā.

ŚĀLIHOTRA. A muni of ancient days. Vyāsa had once lived in his āśrama. There was a tree near the āśrama which had outlived time. A drink of the water in the pond here quenches hunger and thirst. The tree and the pond were created by the power of Śālihotra's tapas. The Pāṇḍavas, during their life in exile in the forest, visited this place in the company of Hiḍimbī and quenched their hunger and thirst by drinking water from this pond. (M.B., Southern text, Chapter 154).

Śālihotra was an adept in aśvaśāstra (science about horses). To bathe in the tīrtha called Śālisūrya created by the muni is to derive the same result as that of making a gift of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 27 and Chapter 83, Verse 107).

ŚĀLIKA. A divine maharṣi. He met Kṛṣṇa once on his (Kṛṣṇa's) way to Hastināpura and had a talk with the lord. (M.B. Udyoga Pava, Southern Text, Chapter 83).

ŚĀLIPIṆḌA. A nāga born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Kadrū (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 14).

ŚĀLIŚIRAS. A Devagandharva, son of Kasyapaprajāpati by his wife Muni. He participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 4).

ŚĀLISŪRYA. A holy spot in Kurukṣetra. It is said to have been the place where muni Śālihotra lived. To bathe at this place is to derive the same result as that of making a gift of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 10).

ŚĀLMALI. A King of the lunar dynasty. He was the grandson of Kuru and son of Avikṣit. He had seven brothers. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 52).

ŚĀLMALIDVĪPA. One of the seven islands.

1) General. Śālmali island, which is double in extent of Plakṣa island is surrounded by Ikṣurasa (sugar-cane juice) ocean on all four sides of it. There are seven mountains there which produce gems and they are seven boundaries which separate the regions. Just like this, there are also seven rivers there. The seven rivers are Yoni, Toyā, Vitṛṇā, Candrā, Muktā, Vimocanī and Nirvṛti. Mere remembrance of the seven rivers is sufficient to annihilate all sins. Here people divided into the four classes live. Brahmins, Kṣatriyas Vaiśyas and Śūdras here are called Kapilas, Aruṇas, Pītas and Kṛṣṇas. These devout people worship Viṣṇu in the form of Vāyu by sublime yajñas. Devas are ever present on this most beautiful island. A tree named Śālmali which gives mental comfort grows in this island. The island is surrounded on all four sides by an ocean of Surā (liquor). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 4).

2). Śālmali island and nāgāstra. See under Nāgāstra.

ŚĀLŪKINĪ. A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. To bathe in the Daśāśvatīrtha there, is to derive the same benefit as performing ten aśvamedhas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 13).

SĀLVA I.

1) General information. The lover of Ambā (q.v) the daughter of the King of Kāśī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 16 that this Kṣatriya King Sālva was born from a portion of Ajaka the younger brother of Vṛṣaparvā.

2) Other details.

(i) Sālva was the ruler of the city named Saubha. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 61).

(ii) He was present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186 Verse 15).

(iii) He was present at the sacrifice of Royal consecration (Rājasūya) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 9).

(iv) At the death of Śiśupāla, King Sālva became angry and besieged Dvārakā. In the battle which followed Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Sālva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 15 to 22).

(v) Sālva had several friends such as Damaghoṣa, Aṅga, Kaliṅga, Mālava, Kekaya, Vaṅga, Magadha, Kosala, Koṅkaṇa, Hehaya, Cola, Pāṇḍya, Kerala and others. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

SĀLVA II. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, stating that three Sālvas and four Madras were born to Bhadrā from the dead body of her husband Vyuṣitāśva. (See under Bhadrā II).

Here, 'Sālvas' means the rulers of Sālva. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 26 that the people of Sālva fled to the south in fear of Jarāsandha. Satyavān, the husband of Sāvitrī, was a native of Sālva. It is also mentioned that the soldiers of Sālva who joined the army of the Kauravas fought against the Pāṇḍavas. There were Sālvas on the side of the Pāṇḍavas also. Mention is made in Droṇa Parva, Chapter 154, that the Sālvas on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, attacked Droṇa, the teacher.

SĀLVA III. A king of the low castes. The details given below about this king are from Mahābhārata.

(1) This king attacked the vast army of the Pāṇḍavas in the battle-field of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 1).

(2) The elephant of this Sālva was as big as a mountain and belonged to the family of elephants called Mahābhadra. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 2).

(3) Duryodhana had honoured this low caste King Sālva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 2).

(4) Sātyaki killed this king Sālva; and Dhṛṣṭadyumna killed his elephant in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 4).

SĀLVA IV. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa a Sālva, who was a contemporary of Kuśadhvaja, is mentioned. Kuśadhvaja once approached this king Sālva and requested for some financial help. But the covetous Sālva did not give any help. So Kuśadhvaja performed a sacrifice to obtain wealth and prosperity. Sītā was born from that sacrificial fire. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

SĀLVA V. A story occurs in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, describing how Reṇukā, the wife of Jamadagni, was infatuated at the sight of a handsome Sālva, and how this event subsequently led to her death. (See under (Reṇukā).

ŚĀLVASENI. An ancient place in South India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 61).

ŚĀLVĀYANA. A king in ancient India. He ran away to South India with his brothers and attendants in fear of Jarāsandha. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 27).

ŚALYA. A king who gave advice and leadership to the Kauravas. He ruled over the Madra or Bālhīka kingdom. Mādrī, wife of Pāṇḍu was Śalya's sister. Yet, in the great war he stood firmly on the Kaurava side and died at Kurukṣetra. The following role he played in the Bhārata story.

(1) At the instance of Bhīṣma he gave his sister Mādrī in marriage to Pāṇḍu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 112).

(2) He was present at the wedding of Draupadī in the company of his sons Rukmāṅgada and Rukmaratha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 18).

(3) At the Śvayaṁvara of Draupadī he withdrew from stringing the bow, owning defeat. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 28),

(4) Bhīma defeated him at the wedding of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 189, Verse 23).

(5) During his triumphal tour of the west, Nakula befriended his uncle Śalya, and entertained him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 14).

(6) He participated in Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya yajña. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 7).
(7) Śiśupāla once opined that Śalya was nobler than Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 14).
(8) He presented a good sword and a golden jar to Yudhiṣṭhira on the occasion of his coronation. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 9).
(9) When Dharmaputra went to Hastināpura to play the game of dice, Śalya was found to have arrived there earlier. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 24).
(10) Before the great war began he visited the Pāṇḍavas and blessed them. Moreover he agreed to act as Karṇa's charioteer and render him impotent so that the Pāṇḍavas could become victorious. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 8).
(11) Śalya joined the Kauravas in the great war with an akṣauhiṇī (a particular division of soldiers). (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 16).
(12) Śalya wished that Yudhiṣṭhira won the war. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43,Verse 79).
(13) On the first day of the war he fought a duel with Yudhiṣṭhira. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 28).
(14) Śalya killed Uttara, the Virāṭa prince. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 35).
(15) He defeated Śaṅkha, another Virāṭa prince. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 35).
(16) He fought with Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 62).
(17) Bhīmasena defeated Śalya. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 27).

SAMĀDHI. The state when the soul (ātmā) and the mind become one. When the soul and the mind mingle with each other as salt and water, it is Samādhi (contemplation). (For more details see under Yoga.

SAMĀDHICHEṬṬI. A Vaiśya who became learned and abstemious by the grace of Devī. The story of this Vaiśya, who ran away from the cruel and wicked treatment that he had suffered from his wife and children, and took to spiritual knowledge by the force of circumstances was told to Janamejaya by Vyāsa. After telling several stories about the kind regard of Devī towards those who worship her with devotion, Vyāsa continued as follows :—

During the time of Svārociṣa Manu, there lived a King named Suratha. Because of his liberality and truthfulness he had very few enemies. While he was ruling over the kingdom known as Kolāpura, once the low caste people of the mountains fought a battle with the King. Though the army of the low castes was small it was the King who sustained defeat. He returned to the palace thoughtful. He had no peace of mind. So he went to the forest to get peace. After travelling for a long time on horse-back, he reached the hermitage of the sage Sumedhas. Forgetting himself in the peaceful stillness of the hermitage, the King got down from the horse and sat under a tree. The hermit Sumedhas came there and talked with the King. The King told his story to the hermit, who invited the King to live with him. Thus the King lived in the hermitage eating fruits, roots etc.

The King found it difficult to reconcile himself with the purity and simplicity of the hermit's surroundings. He always thought of his wife and children. He was troubled in mind by thinking that the money kept in the treasury would be wasted by others. Thus thinking about many things, with a troubled mind, the King was sitting under a tree near the hermitage once when he saw another man coming towards him, with a troubled mind like himself. They talked with each other. The new-comer said to the King "I am a Vaiśya. My name is Samādhiceṭṭi. My wife and children love wealth. They want to take possession of my wealth and to waste it. But I was against it. I did not favour unnecessary expenditure. They resolved to remove the obstacle from their path, and began to make preparation for it secretly. I understood it and fearing death I ran away from the house."

As soon as the king heard this story he said his own story to the Vaiśya. The Vaiśya continued. "Oh ! Still, my mind is troubled. I am worried about my wife and children. They will be put to much difficulty if I am not there to look after them. Who is there to support them without me ? All the children are lean. My wife also is likewise, lean. They are all always ill. What will they do without me ? While I think of all these things I have no peace of mind at all."

Suratha : "What a fool are you ! You yourself have said that all your children are wicked and cruel. Moreover they and their mother joining together had been trying to murder you. Why do you feel so miserable about such a wife and children ?"

When the King had finished saying thus much, Sumedhas came there. To remove the darkness of illusion from their minds, the hermit taught them the Nine-lettered Mantra (spell) with prayer and meditation. Thus giving them the mantra, the teacher hermit advised them to go to the bank of the river and select a suitable place and worship Devī with devotion and concentration of mind. Accordingly they went to the bank of the river and selected a pure and solitary place, and concentrating their minds on Devī, began to meditate and worship her taking only very little food. Thus engaged in deep meditation they spent two years. One day in a dream Devī appeared to them. She was clad in red clothes, and wore beautiful ornaments. They were full of joy on seeing the goddess. The third year of the penance was over. But Devī did not appear directly before them. In the third year they took only water. They finished the fourth year without seeing the goddess. They decided to do severe penance. Their intention was to offer their bodies to Devī. So they made a triangular cavity, with three parts each having an extension of $1\frac{1}{2}$ ft. and made the walls of the cavity firm and kindled a large fire in it. The King and the Vaiśya began to cut pieces of flesh from their bodies and offered to Devī in the fire, and with the blood coming from the body they performed sacrifice to Devī. Instantly Devī appeared before them and asked them what boon they wanted. The King wanted to get his kingdom back. Devī said. "You return home. Your enemies shall leave the kingdom. Your ministers will fall at your feet and beg your pardon. You can rule over your country for ten thousand years. After that you will take rebirth as Sāvarṇi Manu, the son of the Sun."

What Samādhi Ceṭṭi wished was a life of self-renunciation. Devī gave him the wisdom and knowledge to renounce everything he had and to live a life of complete abstinence. Then Devī disappeared. The King returned to his kingdom and resumed his rule. Ceṭṭi renounced everything and wandered about immersed in meditation on Devī. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

SĀMAGA (S). A particular line of disciples of Vyāsa. (See under Guruparamparā).

SAMANTARA. A country in India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 50.

SAMANTAPAÑCAKA. A holy tīrtha (bath) founded by Paraśurāma.

1) General information. See under Paraśurāma, Para 7.

2) Other details.
(i) Paraśurāma made here five rivers through which blood flowed. There, with hands dipped in blood, he offered oblations to the manes. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 4).
(ii) By the blessings of the ancestors of Paraśurāma this place became a holy bath. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 8).
(iii) At the ending and the beginning periods of the two yugas Dvāpara and Kali, the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas fought the great battle at this place. Because of that this place got the name Samantapañcaka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 13).
(iv) It was according to the advice of Balabhadrarāma that this place was selected as the battlefield. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 5).
(v) Duryodhana was killed at Samantapañcaka. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 40).

SAMARA One of the hundred sons of Pṛthuṣeṇa, a King of the Bharata dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SAMARATHA. A brother of King Virāṭa. He was a prominent helper of the Pāṇḍavas in the Bhārata battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 42).

SAMASAURABHA. A Brahmin who was well-versed in the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 9, that he was a guest at the snake-sacrifice of Janamejaya.

ŚAMAṬHA. A learned brahmin. He once gave Yudhiṣṭhira a description of the yajña performed by King Gaya, son of Amūrtarayas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 17).

SĀMAVEDA. See under Veda.

SAMAVEGAVAŚA. A country of South India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 16).

SAMAYAPĀLANAPARVA. A sub-section of Virāṭa Parva, consisting of Chapter 13 of Virāṭa Parva.

SĀMBA I. The son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by his wife Jāmbavatī.

1) Birth. A story about the birth of Sāmba, occurs in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 4, as follows :
Children were born to Rukmiṇī and the other wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. But Jāmbavatī alone did not give birth to children. Jāmbavatī was filled with sadness when she saw the children of her co-wives. One day she went to the presence of Kṛṣṇa and requested him to give her a son like Pradyumna. Hearing this, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to the mountain where the hermit Upamanyu did penance and making the hermit his teacher, according to his advice, did penance before Paramaśiva. He did penance for the period of a month holding a skull and a hermit's rod. He did penance in the second month, standing only on one leg and drinking water alone. In the third month Kṛṣṇa did penance standing on the toes using only air as food. When the penance was continued for six months in this state, Paramaśiva appeared as Sāmba (Ardhanārīśvara) and asked what boon he wanted. Śrī Kṛṣṇa expressed his wish. Śiva said that Jāmbavatī would get a son. Soon Jāmbavatī gave birth to a son. The child was named Sāmba.

2) Marriage. Sāmba married Lakṣaṇā the beautiful daughter of Duryodhana. Hearing about the Svayaṁvara marriage of Lakṣaṇā, Sāmba went to Hastināpura and took her by force from among the various Kings who were present there. Duryodhana and the others captured him. This news reached Dvārakā through Nārada. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrarāma went to Hastināpura and rescued Sāmba and took the bride and the bridegroom to Dvārakā. Ten sons beginning with Sumitra were born to Sāmba by his wife Lakṣaṇā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

3) Prabhāvatī abducted. Prabhāvatī was the daughter of Vrajanābha, the King of Supuranagarī. Sāmba, with his brother Pradyumna entered the city Supura in the guise of drama-actors with a view to kidnap the beautiful daughter of Vrajanābha. They produced four performances such as 'Rambhābhisāra' and three other dramas and earned the praise of everybody in Supura. In this way they got access to the palace of the King, and when the time suited, they took away Prabhāvatī to Dvārakā. (Harivaṁśa, 2 : 93).

4). The delivery of an iron rod. Once some Yādavas with Sāmba at their head abused Kaśyapa and some other hermits who came to Dvārakā. They cursed the Yādavas, in consequence of which Sāmba gave birth to an iron pestle, which caused the extermination of the Yādavas. (See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 39, Sub Para 2).

5) The curse of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Sāmba was extremely handsome, and even the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa fell in love with him. Under the circumstances Sāmba tended to become wicked. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to know of the unnatural attachment between his wives and Sāmba, from Nārada and cursed Sāmba that he would become a leper, and cursed his own wives, that they would be carried away by thieves and plunderers. Accordingly Sāmba became a leper and the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa were carried away by the Ābhīras, after the submerging of Dvārakā.
After a few years, according to the advice of Nārada, Sāmba began to worship the Sun, at a place called Sāmbapura in the basin of the river Candrabhāgā, to get recovery from leprosy. A brahmin also was brought from Śuka (Kuśa) island to perform the fast and vow correctly. (Sāmba 3; Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brāhma Parva, 66. 72; 73. 126; Skanda Purāṇa 4. 2. 48; 6. 213).

6) Other details.
(i) Sāmba was present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Chapter 185, Verse 17).
(ii) Among the Yādavas, who brought the dowry, when Arjuna married Subhadrā there was Sāmba also. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 31).
(iii) Sāmba learned archery from Arjuna. After this he was a member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 34).
(iv) Sāmba was one of the seven great chariot-fighters of Dvārakā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 57).
(v) Sāmba was present at the Rājasūya (royal consecration-sacrifice) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 16).
(vi) Sāmba was defeated in the battle he fought with Kṣemavṛddhi the minister of Sālva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 80.)
(vii) Sāmba killed the asura Vegavān in a battle. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 17).
(viii) Sāmba participated in the marriage of Abhimanyu conducted at the city Upaplavya. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 22).
(ix) Sāmba came with Śrī Kṛṣṇa to Hastināpura and took part in the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 3).

(x) When the Yādavas died by hitting one another with the iron pestle, Sāmba also was killed. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 44).

(xi) After his death, Sāmba entered the group of Viśvadevas. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16).

SĀMBA II. A Brahmin scholar. When Dhṛtarāṣṭra started for the forest towards the close of his life, the people bade him farewell. This Brahmin stood among the people and spoke words of consolation. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 13).

ŚAMBARA I. An asura.

1) General. Various Purāṇas refer to this leader of the asuras as having played a prominent part in the dev-āsura war. After many such wars he was killed by Śiva.

2) Śambara's magic power. He possessed marvellous magic powers. Once while fighting with him, the Devas were non-plussed by his magical powers, and they hid themselves in a forest. Śambara was pleased and he roamed about freely without any fear and burnt the palaces of the protectors of the world. The Devas left their homes and disappeared in disguise. The Devas began killing those whom Śambara had appointed as army-chieftains. To counter this attack by the Devas, he created three powerful asuras by his powers of magic. The three asuras called Dama, Vyāla and Ghaṭa began killing the warriors of the Devas, and the Devas told Brahmā at Satyaloka about the depredations of the asura. Brahmā encouraged them for further fighting, and the three asuras were killed and Śambara ran away and hid himself. (Jñānavāsiṣṭha Sthitiprakaraṇam).

3) Śambara in Ṛgveda. There are various references to Śambara in the Ṛgveda. He was King of the Dasyus. He had mastery over hundred cities. The forts and trenches in those cities were very strong. The forts are referred to as Aśvamayī, Āyasī, Śatabhujī etc. in the Ṛgveda. The chief enemies of the Aryans were the race of people called Paṇis in the city. There is a hint about the killing of Śambara in Sūkta 17, Anuvāka 8, Maṇḍala 1 of the Ṛgveda.

4) Other information.

(i) Śambara was Kaśyapaprajāpati's son by his wife Danu.

(ii) Daśaratha had, at the request of the Devas defeated Śambara in a war fought in Devaloka. (See under Daśaratha, Para 5).

(iii) Indra, on another occasion, defeated Śambara. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 43).

ŚAMBARA II. An asura.

He was the son of Hiraṇyākṣa and brother of Śakuni, Dvimūrdhā, Śaṅku and Ārya. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 17). Śambara, who was a great adept in magic, was killed in the company of his wife Māyāvatī, by Pradyumna, the son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (See under Pradyumna).

SAMBHALA (ŚABHALA, ŚĀMBHALA). A village famed in the Purāṇas. According to Mahābhārata Mahāviṣṇu will incarnate as Kalki in this village. (For details see under Kalki).

SAMBHAVA. A King of the Pūru dynasty, son of Ūrjā and father of Jarāsandha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SAMBHAVAPARVA. A Sub-Parva of Ādi Parva Chapters 65-139).

ŚAMBHU I. Dhruva's wife. The couple had two sons called Śiṣṭi and Bhavya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13).

ŚAMBHU II. Grandson of Tvaṣṭā, son of Kaśyapa by Surabhi. Tvaṣṭā had a son called Viśvarūpa who begot fourteen sons of whom Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapardī, Raivata, Mṛgavyādha, Sarpa and Kapālī these eleven sons of Viśvarūpa form the Ekādaśarudras. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

ŚAMBHU III. One of the three sons of Ambarīṣa, the other two being Virūpa and Ketumān. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). Śambhu never tasted meat in his life. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 66).

ŚAMBHU IV. A Rākṣasa, the son of Vidyujjihva by Śūrpaṇakhā. Śambhu, who was engaged in tapas in Daṇḍaka forest when Śrī Rāma visited the forest was attracted by the beauty of Sītā and transformed himself into a tree to enjoy her beauty with his eyes. Lakṣmaṇa, who was felling down trees to build an āśrama felled this tree also, which disappeared immediately leaving behind the dead body of a Rākṣasa. It was the corpse of the Rākṣasa and Rāma comforted Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa by revealing the fact to them. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa. Araṇyakāṇḍa).

Uttara Rāmāyaṇa contains a story of how Devavatī (or Vedavatī) daughter of Kuśadhvaja once cursed Śambhu. Devavatī was born from the mouth of Kuśadhvaja (son of Bṛhaspati) while he was learning the Vedas. Śambhu wanted to marry the child when she was grown up, but Kuśadhvaja did not consent to it, and Śambhu, in retaliation, killed Kuśadhvaja in his sleep. Next morning Devavatī awoke from sleep to see the dead body of her father. She cursed Śambhu. Her curse was a contributory cause for the death of Śambhu by Lakṣmaṇa.

ŚAMBHU V. An agni, which occupies a status equal to that of a brahmin well-versed in the Vedas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 5).

ŚAMBHU VI. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇīdevī. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33).

ŚAMBHU VII. A King of the Bharata dynasty. He was one of the eighty sons of Ugrasena. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SAMBHŪTA. A King, son of Trasadasyu and father of Anaraṇya. (Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 88, Verses 74-75).

SAMBHŪTI I. Wife of Marīci, son of Brahmā. The couple had a son called Paurṇamāsa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

SAMBHŪTI II. Wife of Jayadratha. The couple had a son called Vijaya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

ŚAMBŪKA. A Śūdra muni. During the reign of Śrī Rāma a great number of children died in the country and many parents wept before the king about the loss of their offsprings. According to Vasiṣṭha's advice Rāma enquired whether anybody indulged in actions not proper to his station in life. Śrī Rāma surveyed the country from the air in a Vimāna, and during the survey he found Śambūka, the śūdra muni hanging with his head down and inhaling smoke from a fire lit under him. Thus, having found out that the tapas by that śūdra was the reason for the children's death, Rāma killed Śambūka immediately. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarakāṇḍa).

SAMEḌĪ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

SAṀGATA (SAṄGATA). A King of the Maurya dynasty. He was the son of King Suyaśas and the father of King Śāliśūraka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

SAṀGAVA (SAṄGAVA). The supervisor of the cattle-shed of Duryodhana. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 228 that this Saṅgava helped Duryodhana in the fight which ensued at the time of the great procession conducted by the Kauravas, to the Pāṇḍavas in the forest.

SAṀGHAM (SAṄGHAM). An organisation formed in olden days for the cultivation of Śentamil (classic Tamil) literature, which took its origin in south Drāviḍa land in the 4th century B.C. The Pāṇḍyas set up three Saṅghams for the promotion of this literature, the first one in southern Madura. When the city was swept by erosion of the sea they set up the second Saṅgham at Kapāṭapura. When Kapāṭapura also was destroyed by the sea, the third Saṅgham was founded in Drāviḍa Madura. The first Saṅgham was called Mutarcaṅkam, the second Iṭaiccaṅkam and the third one Kaṭaiccaṅkam. Reliable information about the first two Saṅghams is not available. But, there are reasons to believe that a Saṅgham called Kataiccaṅkam flourished for about six hundred years from 2nd century B.C. to the close of the 4th century A.D. (History of Kerala Literature by Ullūr, Part 1, Page 47).

The Pāṇḍyan King had built at Madura a hall (maṇḍapa) for the poets and scholars of the third Saṅgham to assemble together to produce their works. Even to this day there exists a temple called Saṅghattārkovil at the south-western corner of the outer sector of the Sundareśvara temple. There the idols of Sarasvatī and of the fortynine poets of the Saṅgham are being worshipped even today. The growth and influence of the Buddhist and the Jain religions and also that of the Pallava royal dynasty, contributed to the downfall of the Saṅgham. The Saṅgham poets have written many excellent books. According to legends, Agastyam is a text on grammar of the first Saṅgham and Tolkāpyam of the second Saṅgham. There were authoritative text books on music written by the last poets of the Saṅgham. But, none of these books has been unearthed yet. Again, references are found to dramas like Muruval, Jayantam, etc. They too have not yet been found out. Five mahākāvyas (Epic poems) and five short Kāvyas also belong to Saṅgham works. Puranānūru. Akanānūru, Patiṭṭuppattu, Aiṁ kurunūru, Kalittokai, Kuruntokai, Paripāṭal and Naṭṭiṇai are included in the Saṅgham work called Eṭṭuttokai. Most of them are collections of many compositions. The authorship of the four hundred songs in Puranānūru is distributed among nearly 160 poets. Aiṁ Kurunūru contains five hundred songs by five poets. These five hundred songs were collected by the scholar, Kūṭalūr kizhār, on the orders of the Cera King, Ceralirumpozhai. Patiṭṭippattu is a collection of songs composed by ten poets in praise of the Cera Kings. But, only eight of these from two to nine are available yet. Pattuppāṭṭu comprised of the following works like Tirumurukāttuppaṭai, etc. Tirukkural, Nālaṭiyar etc. are among the eighteen works under the group Patineṇkīzhkkaṇakku. Cilappadikāram, Maṇimekhalai, Jīvakacintāmaṇi, Kuṇḍalakeśī and Valaiyāpati are the five great kāvyas and Nīlakeśi, Cūḍāmaṇi, Yaśodākāvyam, Nāgakumāra-Kāvyam and Udayakumārakāvyam (Udayaṇankatai) are the five short (laghu) kāvyas. Amongst the above kāvyas Maṇimekhalai and Kuṇḍalakeśi are Buddhist kāvyas and Cintāmaṇi and the five short kāvyas are Jain works. The last seven books might have been written after the Saṅgham period. Tiruttakkatevar, author of Cintāmaṇi, lived in eighth century A.D. Some of the songs in Puranānūru are the oldest among the works of the Saṅgham period. References to Cera Kings are found in many of these works.

SAṀGRAHA. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by the sea, the other being Vikrama. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45; Verse 37).

SAṀGRĀMAJIT. One of the ten sons of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by his wife Bhadrā. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 18).

SAMJÑĀ. Wife of Sun (Sūrya).

1) Birth. Saṁjñā was the daughter of Viśvakarman according to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa (Part 3, Chapter 2) and of Tvaṣṭā according to Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva (Chapter 66, Verse 35). Most of the Purāṇas refer to Saṁjñā as the daughter of Viśvakarman.

2) Separation from husband. Saṁjñā lacked the power to put up with the heat of Sūrya. She once went into the forest to perform Tapas after deputing her companion, Chāyā, to serve her husband. Saṁjñā left her three sons Manu, Yama, and Yamī also in the charge of Chāyā, who in the guise of Saṁjñā served Sūrya. He took her to be his wife and begot three children, Śanaiścara, (another) Manu and Tapatī of her. Chāyā once got angry and cursed Yama, son of Saṁjñā. Then it was that Sūrya realised that she was not his wife. Sūrya felt very sad at this separation from his wife and went to the forest in search of her. He knew, by the power of his meditation, that Saṁjñā was doing tapas in the guise of a mare. Then he assumed the form of a horse and begot of the mare the Aśvinikumāras and Revanta. The Aśvinīkumāras named Nāsatya and Dasra, were born through the mare's (Saṁjñā) nose. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 17).

3) Reunion. Sūrya brought Saṁjñā back with him. She complained to her father Viśvakarman, that life with Sūrya was impossible on account of his excessive heat, and so Viśvakarman ground Sūrya on his drilling machine and reduced his heat. But, only 1/8 of the heat (effulgence) could be so reduced, and it was with that fraction of effulgence that Viṣṇu's disc (cakra), Śiva's triśūla (trident), Kubera's puṣpakavimāna and Subrahmaṇya's weapon called Śakti were made. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa Part 3, Chapter 2; Harivaṁśa, Chapter 41 and Bhaviṣya Purāṇa For details see under Tapatī.

SANAKĀDI (S). Sanaka, Sanandana, Sanātana and Sanatkumāra, the four Sages.

The Sanakādis are the mental sons of Brahmā. When they stood in the form of infants they were asked to create subjects. But they were the incarnation of 'Sattva', (the attribute of purity), and so were not prepared to undertake creation. Even at the age of four or five the four of them learned the Vedas, and travelled together. They were celibates for ever. While the Sanakādis were travelling thus one day they reached Vaikuṇṭha, and cursed Jaya and Vijaya who showed disrespect towards them. (See under Jayavijayas).

It is mentioned in some places that the Sanakādis were the incarnations of portions of Mahāviṣṇu. Once Brahmā praised the incarnations of Viṣṇu.

It is clear that the Kumāras (Sanakādis) had taken incarnation before the present Brahmā began the work of creation. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1; Skandha 7; Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

SANANDANA I. A hermit who was one of the Sanakādis.

SANANDANA II. A disciple of Śaṅkarācārya. (For further details see under Śaṅkarācārya, Para 6).

SANĀTANA I. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16, that this hermit shone in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira.

SANDAMŚA. A hell. (See under Kāla).

ŚAṆḌHĀMARKA. The two ṛṣis called Śaṇḍha and Marka, who were priests of the asuras and whose presence made them invincible. The Devas enticed the two priests to their side by offering them Soma and thus rendered the asuras powerless. When the Devas after some time, began a yajña, Śaṇḍha and Marka approached them for the promised Soma, but the Devas did not keep their word, and the disillusioned Śaṇḍhamarkas were driven out of the yājñic hall. (Taittirīyasamhitā, 6, 4, 10).

SANDHĀNAKARAṆĪ. (See under Mṛtasañjīvanī).

SANDHYĀ I. The previous birth of Arundhatī, wife of Vasiṣṭha. (For more details see under Vasiṣṭha Para 1, Sub-Section 1).

SANDHYĀ II. Mother of the giantess Sālakaṭaṅkā. It is stated in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa that this Sālakaṭaṅkā. the daughter of Sandhyā was married by the giant Vidyutkeśa.

SANDHYĀ III. Time of union or conjunction. There are three Sandhyās in a day. These are morning sandhyā (Prātaḥsandhyā), noon sandhyā (Madhyāhna sandhyā) and evening sandhyā (Sāyam Sandhyā). The meeting time of night and day, is morning Sandhyā, the joining time of the first half and the second half of the day, is noon (Madhyāhna Sandhyā), and the joining time of day and night, is evening Sandhyā (Sāyam sandhyā). Brahmins should keep the three Sandhyās properly. The morning sandhyā is of three kinds. Good, Medium and Bad. When the morning stars are seen and the sunrise is approaching it is good morning; when the stars are not seen and the sun is not risen it is medium sandhyā and the morning time after the sunrise is bad Sandhyā. In sāyamsandhyā also there is this difference of time, as good, medium and bad. The time till the sunset is good; the time after the sunset and before the rising of the stars is medium and the evening after the rising of the stars is bad. In the Vedas it is metaphorically mentioned that Brahmins are trees, and the three sandhyās are their roots, the Vedas, their branches and the rites and rituals ordained in the Vedas their leaves. From this it is clear that Brahmins should on no account leave unobserved, worships at these three sandhyās. The Brahmin who does not observe these three sandhyās carefully will, in his life time, become a śūdra and after the death, will be born again as a dog. Moreover the Brahmin who does not do the three evening, morning and noon worships, will have no right to conduct any other Vedic rites.

After the sun-rise and sun-set, within three nāzhikas (a nāzhika-24 minutes) the morning and evening worship should be finished. There is atonement ordered for morning and evening prayers conducted after the stipulated time. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 11).

SANDHYĀ IV. A holy river who worships Varuṇa in his assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 23).

SANDHYĀ V. The presiding Devatā of dusk. She is called Pratīcyādevī as well. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 16).

SANDHYĀKARANANDĪ. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 12th century A. D. A poetic work of this author is "Rāmapālacarita". This book is about the king Rāmapāla, who ruled over Bengal at the end of 11th century A. D.

SANDHYĀRĀGA. The red colour seen in the sky in the evening is Sandhyārāga. Rāgiṇī the daughter of Himavān did penance to obtain Paramaśiva as husband. The Devas took her before Brahmā, who said that she was not able to bear the radiance of Śiva. Hearing this opinion Rāgiṇī got angry and Brahmā cursed her and changed her into Sandhyārāga. (See under Pārvatī).

SANDHYĀVALĪ. Sandhyāvalī was the wife of King Rukmāṅgada. (See under Dharmāṅgada).

ŚĀṆḌILĪ I. A daughter of Dakṣa. She was married by Dharmadeva and a Vasu called Anala was born to the couple. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 17).

ŚĀṆḌILĪ II. A yoginī famed in the Purāṇas. She once cursed Garuḍa as a result of which he lost his feathers. (For details see under Garuḍa).

(6) King Sumanyu once gave the maharṣi plenty of food materials. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 173, Verse 22).

ŚĀṆḌILYA II. A maharṣi born in the dynasty of Kaśyapa, son of Marīci. As Agni was born in the family of the maharṣi it came to be called 'Śāṇḍilya-gotrīya' (born in the family of Śāṇḍilya). King Sumanyu once gave him food and other edible things. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 22).

ŚĀṆḌILYA III. A King, a great devotee of Śiva. As a youth he became a philanderer with the result that the honour of women was in jeopardy. The King being a devotee of Śiva even Yama could not punish him. At last, when Śiva came to know of the immorality of his devotee he cursed the King to be turned into a tortoise for thousand years.

ŚĀṆḌILYA IV. A maharṣi, who desired to worship Viṣṇu not in the Vedic method for which purpose he even wrote a book to propagate non-vedic principles. For the above sinful action he had to live in hell and at last he was born as Jamadagni of the Bhṛgu dynasty. (Vṛddhahārītasmṛti, 180, 193).

ŚĀṆḌILYA V. A maharṣi whose Bhaktisūtras (Aphorisms on devotion) are as famous as those of Nārada. He taught bhakti in a scientific way (by Śāṇḍilya science).

SĀNDĪPANI. Preceptor of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra Rāma from whom they learned all the Vedas, art of drawing, astronomy, gāndharva Veda, medicine, training elephants and horses and archery. (For details see under Kṛṣṇa, Para 12).

ŚANI (ŚANAIŚCARA-SATURN).

1) General. Śani is the son of Sūrya by Chāyā, the maid-servant of Saṁjñā. Sūrya had three sons by Chāyā, Manu, Tapatī and Śani. (See under Chāyā).

2) Other information.

(i) Śani worships Brahmā in Brahmasabhā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 29).

(ii) Śani is very effulgent and intense in his form and character. When Śani threatens the star Rohiṇī, great disasters occur on earth. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 8).

(iii) Śani will incarnate as Manu in the coming Yuga. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 349, Verse 55).

(iv) Śani is one of the planets to be daily worshipped. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 17).

(v) In the battle between Śiva and Tripura, Śani mounted in a chariot clashed with Narakāsura. (Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

SANĪYA. A country in south India famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 63.

SAÑJAYA I. Minister of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

1) Birth. Sañjaya, who was equal to a hermit, was born as the son of Sūta from a portion of Gavalgaṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 93).

2) The boon of Sañjaya. Sañjaya who was born within the circle of the friends of the Kauravas, became the minister of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. The great work that Sañjaya did in Mahābhārata was, telling Dhṛtarāṣṭra every thing that was taking place in the battle-field without leaving even the smallest events in the order of their occurrence. Sañjaya was able to do this because of the boon granted by Vyāsa.

When the armies of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas pitched their camps on either side of the battlefield, Vedavyāsa came to Hastināpura and saw Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Dhṛtarāṣṭra heard about the preparations on either side for the battle. He did not like to go to the battle-field and see for himself the events of the battle. He said so to Vyāsa. Then Vyāsa called Sañjaya to him and said "Sañjaya shall see all the events of the battle directly. He shall have such a divine inward eye." Vyāsa continued. "O king! Sañjaya has inward eyes. He will tell you everything about the battle. He will be knowing all. Whenever he thinks of it he will see everything that takes place in the day and in the night in open, and in secret. No weapon will cut him and no weariness will affect him. He is the son of Gavalgaṇa and will come away unhurt from the battle."

Because of this blessing Sañjaya used to inform Dhṛtarāṣṭra of all the events in the battle at the time of the occurrence. Sañjaya informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the news up to the death of Duryodhana. When Duryodhana was killed the cry of Aśvatthāmā grew louder. Sañjaya who heard this cry early in the morning, ran to the battlefield with a broken heart. With the death of Duryodhana the boon of inward eye given to Sañjaya by Vyāsa was lost. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 2; Sauptika Parva, Chapter 9).

3) Other details.
(i) Sañjaya stood as the host in the Rājasūya sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira, and received the guests and showed them hospitality. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 6).
(ii) When the Pāṇḍavas were defeated in the game of dice and were sent to the forest Sañjaya came to Dhṛtarāṣṭra and reviled him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 81, Verse 5).
(iii) Vidura got angry because the Pāṇḍavas were sent to live in the forest, and leaving the Kauravas he also went to the forest. Knowing that Vidura was in the Kāmyaka forest, Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent Sañjaya and brought Vidura back. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 5).
(iv) Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the others vowed at the Kāmyakavana to kill Duryodhana. Sañjaya gave Dhṛtarāṣṭra a detailed description of that Vow. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 15).
(v) Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent Sañjaya to learn about the welfare of the Pāṇḍavas who had returned after completing the forest life and Pseudonymity. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 1).
(vi) Sañjaya went to the court of the Pāṇḍavas and gave the message of Dhṛtarāṣṭra to them. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 25).
(vii) Sañjaya who had returned from the court of the Pāṇḍavas, informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the news and reproached him much. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 11).
(viii) Sañjaya repeated the message of Arjuna in the court of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48).
(ix) Sañjaya told Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who the prominent helpers of Yudhiṣṭhira, were. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 50).
(x) Sañjaya advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra to put Duryodhana under control. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 54).
(xi) Sañjaya gave Duryodhana a description of the horses and the chariots of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 7).
(xii) Sañjaya repeated the message of Arjuna to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 66).
(xiii) Sañjaya described to Dhṛtarāṣṭra the greatness of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapters 68-70).
(xiv) Sañjaya told Dhṛtarāṣṭra the fact that the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas had pitched their tents in the battlefield of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 159, Verse 8).
(xv) At this time Vyāsa came there and gave Sañjaya the boon that he would see directly every thing that took place in the battlefield and would inform Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 10).
(xvi) Sañjaya informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the good qualities of the earth, the island of Sudarśana, the death of Bhīṣma, and so on. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva; Droṇa Parva).
(xvii) Sañjaya gave the names of every one who was killed on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 5).
(xviii) Sañjaya reported to Dhṛtarāṣṭra about those who died on the side of the Pāṇḍavas also. (Karṇa, Parva, Chapter 6).
(xix) Sañjaya told Dhṛtarāṣṭra about those who were alive on the side of the Kauravas. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 7).
(xx) Sātyaki took Sañjaya as a captive. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 57).
(xxi) Due to the blessings of Vyāsa Sañjaya escaped from the captivity of Sātyaki. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 39).
(xxii) Sañjaya consoled Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Strī Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 23).
(xxiii) Yudhiṣṭhira entrusted Sañjaya with the duty of post-war-reconstructions. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 11).
(xxiv) Towards the close of his life Sañjaya went with Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī to the forest. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 8).
(xxv) On the first day of this journey to the forest, they reached the basin of the river Ganges. On that day Sañjaya made the bed for Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 19).
(xxvi) Sañjaya introduced the wives of the Pāṇḍavas to the hermits. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 25).
(xxvii) On reaching the forest Sañjaya observed complete fast for two days. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 13).
(xxviii) Sañjaya always walked close behind Dhṛtarāṣṭra and in places of ups and downs he led the King by the hand. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 16).

SAÑJAYA II. A prince of the country called Sauvīra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 10, that it was this prince Sañjaya who carried the flag and walked in front of Jayadratha, on his journey to carry away Pāñcālī. In the fight which ensued Arjuna killed this Sañjaya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 27).

SAÑJAYA III. Another prince of the country of Sauvīra. Vidulā was the mother of this prince. This prince once ran away from the battle-field and by the instigation of his mother went to the battlefield again. This story occurs in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 1 6.

SAÑJAYANTĪ. An ancient city of South India. Sahadeva, during his regional conquest of the south sent his messengers to this country and conquered it easily. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 70, that Sahadeva got tribute from this country.

SAÑJAYAYĀNAPARVA. A sub-section of Udyoga Parva in Mahābhārata. This comprises Chapters 30 to 32 of Udyoga Parva.

SAÑJĪVA. A character in the Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).

SAÑJĪVANAMAṆI. The jewel in the head of serpents. There is a tradition among the poets that this jewel is the basis of the serpent's life. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 42, stating how Babhruvāhana brought Arjuna to life by Sañjīvanamaṇi. (For details see under Babhruvāhana).

SAṄKALPA. One of the sons born to Dharmadeva by his wife Saṅkalpā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

SAṄKALPĀ. A daughter of Dakṣa. Dharmadeva married the following ten daughters of Dakṣa, i.e. Arundhatī, Vasu, Yamī, Lambā, Bhānū, Marutvatī, Saṅkalpā, Muhūrtā, Sādhyā and Viśvā.

ŚAṄKARA I. A synonym of Śiva.

ŚAṄKARA II. A simpleton, who was killed by his wife. This brahmin had a very mean wife called Kalipriyā. After killing her husband she left the place with her paramour. But, wild animals killed him on their way in the forest. In all repentance Kalipriyā returned home and after worshipping the corpse of her husband she observed Kārttika vrata at the instance of certain women. Thereby she got absolution from sin and attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Brahmakhaṇḍa, Chapter 10).

ŚAṄKARĀCĀRYA.

1) General. The spiritual and philosophical preceptor of India. Śrī Śaṅkara was born in the village of Kālaṭi on the banks of the holy river Periyār, also called Cūrṇā and Pūrṇā. According to certain scholars he was born in 509 B.C. while certain others contend that he saw the light of day in 84 A.D. Yet others place his date of birth in various periods between 509 B.C. and 84 A. D. Whatever that may be, the great ācārya is believed to have lived only for 32 years.

4) In the presence of the preceptor. Śaṅkara, who then was not even seven years old, started for the north in quest of a preceptor, and on the banks of the Narmadā he saw Govinda - bhagavatpāda, the disciple of Śrī Gauḍapāda. The Bhagavatpāda was sitting in a cave surrounded by many wise people. Śaṅkara approached and requested him to admit him as a disciple and grant him sannyāsa. Śaṅkara's prayer was granted.

5) Controlled flood. A wonderful thing happened while Śaṅkara was living at the āśrama. The Narmadā was in spate and the huts on its banks were about to be submerged in water. People got alarmed. Then Śaṅkara put his kamaṇḍalu (vessel which sannyāsins keep with them for water) and chanted the Jalākarṣaṇa Mantra. (hymn to attract water). At once the water which had flooded the banks flowed back into the river. People and their huts were saved. Afterwards his Guru asked Śaṅkara to go to and live in Kāśī and write Bhāṣyas (commentaries) on the Prasthānatrayam, i.e. the Brahmasūtras, the Upaniṣads and the Gītā.

6) Padmapāda. Accordingly Śaṅkara went to Kāśī. It was there that he took as his first disciple Viṣṇuśarman, a young man from the Cola region of the country. Śaṅkara called him Sanandana. Afterwards other disciples also came in. But, gradually jealousies cropped up in the ranks of the disciples. The other disciples of Śaṅkara thought that the latter was partial towards Sanandana and showed special affection and regards to him. Śaṅkara then decided to prove to the others that Sanandana was a disciple of exceptional talents and merits. One day Śaṅkara was bathing with his other disciples in the Gaṅgā, and he called Sanandana who was on the other side of the river to go to him. Sanandana walked on the surface of the water to his Guru, and as he took each step a lotus flower appeared beneath and held him up from sinking into the water. From that day onwards he came to be called Padmapāda, and his colleagues also realised his greatness.

7) Hastāmalaka. Hastāmalaka was one of the best disciples of Śaṅkara. There is a story about his becoming Śaṅkara's disciple. He was born dumb. His father, Divākara took Hastāmalaka to Śaṅkara believing that due to the blessing of the great Guru his son would gain powers of speech. Śaṅkara asked the dumb boy, 'who are you?' and the boy answered, 'I am the soul, which has no relationship with the parts and attributes of body and mind and which is also entirely different from them'. There were certain verses, which the boy recited as answer to Śaṅkara's question and each verse ended with 'nityopalabdhisvarūpohamātmā' (I am the ātman and eternal knowledge, consciousess, is its characteristic). The boy's answer pleased Śaṅkara, who took him as a disciple of his. The boy was given sannyāsa under the name Hastāmalaka the meaning of which word is he who is in possession of knowledge like the gooseberry in one's palm.

8) Toṭakācārya. Toṭakācārya was a disciple, who came soon after Hastāmalaka. The name Toṭakācārya has a story behind it. This disciple approached Śaṅkara with his request for discipleship in verse praising the latter. The verses were composed in the difficult toṭaka metre. The verses attracted Śaṅkara very much and he took the applicant as disciple. His real name was Kalānātha, but the Guru named him Toṭakācārya in view of his verses in that metre.

9) The Caṇḍālaguru. There is a story about Śiva going to Śaṅkara at Kāśī in the guise of a Caṇḍāla and Śaṅkara receiving him. One morning Śaṅkara, after bathing in the Gaṅgā, was returning to the Viśvanātha temple. A Caṇḍāla with his hunting dogs and a pot of liquor was advancing from the opposite direction of Śaṅkara, who asked the former to move away from his path. Immediately the Caṇḍāla asked, which, the body or soul, is to remove itself from the path? The body of everybody is composed of blood, flesh, bones etc; the constitution of it also is the same. But, the Ātman is universal and omnipresent. Whom-which of the two-are you asking to move away from your path? Śaṅkara realised from the above answer that the Caṇḍāla was an extraordinary person. In fact, it was Siva, who had disguised himself as a Caṇḍāla. Śaṅkara prostrated before him. Śaṅkara thought about God saying that he who had attained Brahman and the consciousness of oneness with all, was his Guru, whether he be a Brahmin or a Caṇḍāla.

10) Derisive of the grammarian. Śaṅkara has composed a hymn named Mohamudgara, in which he ridicules a grammarian. One day walking along a street in Kāśī Śaṅkara saw a grammarian learning by rote rules of grammar, and then he composed the very sweet and beautiful poem—Bhaja Govindam—to reveal the foolishness of the grammarian repeating the useless rules of grammar. By the very first verse of the poem Śaṅkara revealed the following truth : "Oh ! fool ! worship Govinda (Bhaja Govindam) meditate upon Him. You meditate upon Govinda realising the truth that when death approaches, the grammatical sūtra "Ḍukṛñ Karaṇe" will not come to your aid."

11) Saw Vyāsa. Śiva, when he appeared in the guise of a Caṇḍāla to Śaṅkara, had asked him to visit Badarikāśrama, and accordingly he went there and visited Vyāsa. It was there that Śaṅkara met his supreme preceptor, Govindapāda. He returned to Kāśī with the blessings of Vyāsa and Govindapāda and engaged himself in the writing of books.

12) Śaṅkara's age. There is a legend about Śaṅkara's life. Brahmā had allotted to him only eight years' life. Before Śaṅkara left his house at Kālaṭi, a batch of sannyāsins including Agastya and Nārada came to the house. The sannyāsins, who were pleased with the reception accorded to them blessed Śaṅkara to live for sixteen years instead of the eight Brahmā had permitted him.

While Śaṅkara was writing books at Muktimaṇḍapa at Maṇikarṇikā Ghat in Kāśī Vyāsa came there one day in the guise of an old man, and there ensued a lengthy discussion between the two. Padmapāda recognised Vyāsa in the old man and told him and Śaṅkara thus: "How would there be peace and happiness in the world, if Śaṅkara, the incarnation of Śiva and Vedavyāsa, the incarnation of Viṣṇu quarrelled with each other?" As soon as his identity was revealed thus, Vyāsa admitted that Śaṅkara's Bhāṣya on the Brahmasūtras was correct and blessed him to live for thirtytwo, instead of sixteen years.

13) Controversy between Śaṅkara and Maṇḍanamiśra. Pandits (scholars) view the controversy or discussion between Śaṅkara and Maṇḍanamiśra as the most important event in Śaṅkara's life. Three incidents, Śaṅkara's meeting Kumārilabhaṭṭa, his defeating Maṇḍanamiśra and his entering the dead body of another person—may be found in connection with the above controversy.

A: Meeting with Kumārilabhaṭṭa. Śaṅkara's object was to expose the defects and draw-backs in Pūrvamīmāṁsā (the ritual part of the Vedas). Kumārilabhaṭṭa was the most competent person for a discussion on the subject. Śaṅkara, for this purpose, went to Prayāga from Kāśī. But, Kumārilabhaṭṭa was not in a condition fit for discussion. He was slowly burning himself to death in a heap of paddy husk set on fire. He courted this punishment voluntarily to atone for a wrong he had committed. Years back he had put on Buddhistic attire and studied the secrets of Buddhistic religion from its preceptors with the object of refuting that religion. Kumārilabhaṭṭa had great faith in Karmakāṇḍa, and he therefore, decided that it was his duty to make atonement for the wrong he had purposely done according to injunctions laid down in Karmakāṇḍa. Śaṅkara was very sorry to find Kumārilabhaṭṭa in this condition in which discussion could not be held with him on the defects of Pūrvamīmāṁsā. Kumārilabhaṭṭa directed Śaṅkara to the great scholar, Maṇḍanamiśra at Māhiṣmatī for a discussion on Pūrvamīmāṁsā.

B. Maṇḍanamiśra defeated. When Śaṅkara reached Maṇḍanamiśra's house a ceremony connected with obsequies was being conducted there. The door for entry to the house was closed. Śaṅkara, by his yogic power entered the home and revealed the object of his visit to Maṇḍanamiśra, who agreed to the proposal of Śaṅkara. Accordingly a debate began between the two. Bhāratīdevī, wife of Maṇḍanamiśra and an erudite scholar in her own title acted as the arbiter in the discussion. Before the debate started she put a garland of flowers on the neck of both the contenders and announced that he would be considered as defeated in the debate the garland on whose neck began fading first. The debate continued for a number of days and the garland on Maṇḍanamiśra's neck began showing signs of fading. According to the terms and conditions of the debate Maṇḍanamiśra acknowledged defeat. He accepted Śaṅkara's discipleship.

C. Parakāyapraveśa (Entering the dead body of another person). But, Bhāratīdevī argued that it was not enough that Śaṅkara had defeated her husband in debate. She challenged him to defeat her as well, and Śaṅkara accepted the challenge. Many topics dealt with in the various Śāstras were debated upon and Śaṅkara won all those debates. Ultimately Bhāratīdevī raised certain points connected with the science of sexual love in the course of her arguments. Śaṅkara admitted that he did not possess sufficient mastery over the subject as he had taken himself to sannyāsa even from infancy. But, he told her that if he was allowed necessary time for it he would debate on that topic also.

Bhāratīdevī granted him time for it and the debate was adjourned.

Śaṅkara prepared himself for the study of the science of sexual love. Just at that time a King called Amaruka died. After asking his disciples to take especial care of his body Śaṅkara entered by yogic power the dead body of Amaruka. The dead King came back to life and his people felt very happy about the mysterious happening. Śaṅkara, who had thus entered the body of King Amaruka, lived in the palace enjoying all royal pleasures. He gained practical experience in the matter of sexual love from the queens in the palace. People found the resurrected King Amaruka to be better and more intelligent. The ministers suspected that the soul which dwelt in the body of the king was of some one else. Under the impression that it might be that of some yogin the ministers deputed agents to various parts of the country to find out if there was anywhere the dead body of a yogī, and they found out Śaṅkara's body. It was about to be burnt on the pyre when the disciples of Śaṅkara met King Amaruka at the palace and informed him about these developments. Immediately Śaṅkara quitted his royal body and entered his own body now lying on the funeral pyre. He prayed to Śrīlakṣmīnarasiṁha and came out from the burning pyre.

Śaṅkara returned immediately to Maṇḍanamiśra's house and the debate was started again. Bhāratīdevī realised that Śaṅkara could not be defeated in topics related to the science of sex. Thus Śaṅkara gained absolute victory in his debate with Maṇḍanamiśra, who then requested the former to grant him sannyāsa and accept him as a disciple. Śaṅkara did so. Bhāratīdevī too followed her husband in accepting sannyāsa.

14) Mother's death. Śaṅkara now knew that it was time for his mother's death. According to his promise to her that he would be by her side at the time of her death Śaṅkara returned to Kālaṭi. His mother expired, and he made arrangments for cremation. But his relations did not cooperate with him and argued that it was against the injunctions in the Śāstras for a son, who had taken to sannyāsa, to perform the cremation etc. of his mother. At last, Śaṅkara had to cremate his mother by himself without others' help. He made a pyre with plantain stems in the compound of his house, and cut his mother's corpse into pieces, carried the pieces to the funeral pyre and thus cremated the body.

15) Triumphal tour. After the cremation of his mother Śaṅkara set out on his triumphal tour of the country. He is believed to have travelled throughout India three times. Wherever he went he gained friends and also made enemies. It was during these tours that he established the four maṭhas (centres) in the four regions of the country. Śṛṅgeri in the south, Jaganātha in the east, Dvārakā in the west and Badarīnātha in the north were the four chief maṭhas established by Śaṅkara and they continue to function even to this day.

The Śiva, Viṣṇu and Devī temples and other Hindu religious institutions to be found in India today very eloquently proclaim the achievements and unique reputation of Śaṅkara. It is traditionally believed that Śaṅkara brought five liṅgas from Kailāsa and installed them in the five great temples. Muktiliṅga in Kedāra, Paraliṅga in the Nīlakaṇṭha temple in Nepal, Mokṣa liṅga at Cidambaram, Bhogaliṅga in Śṛṅgeri and Yogaliṅga in Kāñcī are the five liṅgas installed by Śaṅkara. The 'five-in-one' method of worship was also propounded by him. According to this system Āditya, Ambikā, Viṣṇu, Gaṇanātha and Maheśvara are conjointly worshipped, special importance being given by the worshipper to his special deity. Śaṅkara appointed one disciple of his each in each of the maṭhas as its head and these maṭhas play the most important role in the maintenance and propagation of the Advaita philosophy. The heads of these maṭhas during various periods have been reputed Vedāntists and noble souls. Jyotirmaṭha in Badarikāśrama, Govardhana pīṭha in Jagannāthapurī, Śāradā pīṭha in Śṛṅgeri and Kāmakoṭipīṭha in Kāñcī are the most important of the Śrī Śaṅkara pīṭhas. Having thus completed his philsophic mission or object in life Śaṅkara entered mahāsamādhi at the age of thirty-two. Some scholars believe that he disappeared in a cave at Kedāra while certain others hold the view that he ascended the Sarvajñapīṭha (the omniscient state) at Kāñcī and spent his closing days there.

16) His works. The literary compositions of Śaṅkara may be classified into four divisions, viz, Bhāṣyas (commentaries), original works, hymns to various deities, and mantras.

ŚAṄKARASVĀMĪ. Father of Upavarṣa. (See under Upavarṣa).

ŚAṄKARĪ. Wife of Varatanu, the brahmin. (See under Varatanu for the reason why the couple had no children in their next life).

SAṄKARṢAṆA. Balabhadra Rāma. (To know about the derivation of the name see under Balabhadra Rāma).

SĀṄKĀŚYA. A King of ancient days, who lived in Yama's court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 10).

ŚAṄKUKARṆA I. A muni, who lived at the sacred Kapardīśvara tīrtha in Vārāṇasī. There lived a brahmin in the temple there performing tapas. One day a lean and bony ghost, hungry and panting came to the brahmin. To the brahmin's question the ghost replied thus ; "In my previous life I was a rich brahmin. I looked after my family well, but did not worship Devas, guests or cows. Nor did I do any pious deed. But, one day I happened to worship Lord Viśvanātha and touch his idol. Within a short period after that I died. You will please tell me the means, if any, for me to attain heaven."

Śaṅkukarṇa answered the ghost as follows :—"There lives no man on earth, who is more fortunate than your good self, who could touch and prostrate before Lord Viśvanātha. That good fortune has led you to me. You bathe in this holy tīrtha and you will lose your ghosthood. The ghost, accordingly dived in the water and immediately rose up to heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 34).

ŚAṄKUKARṆA II. A nāga born in the Dhṛtarāṣṭra dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña conducted by Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 15).

ŚĀNTI III. Name of the Indra of the fourth Manvantara (Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 29).

ŚĀNTI IV. A maharṣi. Son of Aṅgiras, he was called Ātmeyu also. He had participated in the Yajña conducted by Uparicaravasu. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 336, Verse 8; Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 20; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 130).

ŚĀNTI V. A maharṣi who was a disciple of the Ṛṣi called Bhūti, who did once go to participate in a yajña conducted by his brother Suvarccas, leaving matters connected with his āśrama with Śānti, who discharged his duties quite well in the absence of his master. One day when agni became very scarce in the āśrama he praised Agnideva, and noticing that the Deva was pleased Śānti requested him to bestow a son on the maharṣi. Accordingly a son was born to Bhūti, who later on became famous as 'Bhautyamanu.' Bhūti, who was pleased with the devout life of his disciple (Śānti) taught him Sāṅgaveda. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa).

ŚĀNTIDEVĀ (ŚĀNTIDEVĪ). Daughter of King Devaka. She was married by Vasudeva. (Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 96, Verse 130).

ŚĀNTIKALPA. One of the five saṁhitā sections of the Atharvaveda composed by muni Muñjikeśa, the other four sections being nakṣatrakalpam, vedakalpam, saṁhitākalpam and āṅgirasakalpam. Nakṣatrakalpam contains rules for the worship of the stars; Vedakalpam contains the rites regarding Brahman, the Ṛtvik; saṁhitākalpam contains the rules about mantras, and the Āṅgirsakalpam deals with black magic and śāntikalpam contains rules about propitiating deities by offerings of horse, elephant etc.

ŚĀNTPARVA. An important Parva of the Mahābhārata (See under Mahābhārata).

SANTURODHA. A king of the Pūru dynasty. He was the son of Matināra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SAṄU. A country of ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva Chapter 9, Verse 43).

SANYĀSA (SANNYĀSA) One of the four stages of Brahminical life. The four stages are Brahmacarya (Religious student), Gārhasthya (householder), Vānaprastha (Forest-dweller)and Sannyāsa (hermit or sage). (For further details see under Āśrama).

Duties of a hermit. Manu has ordained that one should perform sannyāsa (renunciation) at the fourth stage of life renouncing every tie with the world. After becoming a hermit he should travel daily alone. He should enter villages only for food. He should have renounced wealth. He should not acquire any wealth. He should be a sage filled with knowledge. He should have a skull as the pot for taking alms. He should sleep under trees. He should wear poor cloth and should be solitary. He should consider everybody as equal. Having become a hermit he should not delight in death or life.

A hermit should put every step looking straight down to the earth. He should drink water filtered by cloth. Words and deeds should be pure and true. The shells of water-gourd (pumpkin), wooden pots and earthen pots are the Vaiṣṇava sign ofhermits. A hermit should beg for food daily from houses where no smoke comes out, where pestle is placed and where there is no charcoal, and after all have taken food and the pot for preparing food is placed upside down.

It is said that the food got by hermits by begging is of five types. They are Mādhūkara (collected alms), asaṁklpta (unlimited), Prākpraṇīta (prepared much earlier), Ayācitam (got by not begging) and tātkālika (for the time being). In whichever stage of life he may be, he should be staunch in that stage and should perform the duties with honesty.

If by ignorance a hermit engaged himself in killing animals by day or night, to remove the impurity and get purity, he should bathe and perform six prāṇāyāmas (restraints of the breath) daily. The hermit should discard his body made of five elements.

The signs of duty are, resolution, forbearance, selfrestraint, not robbing, cleansing, control of sense-organs, modesty, knowledge, truth, not resorting to anger, and so on. Hermits are of four grades, such as Kuṭīcaka, Bahūdaka, Haṁsa and Paramahaṁsa, the last-mentioned being the noblest grade. The hermit who wears one or three daṇḍas (rod) will be freed from ties of birth and death.

The five Yamas or restraints are not killing (Ahiṁsā), truth, not stealing, celibacy and not receiving. The five Niyamas or religious duties are cleansing, joy or contentedness, penance, self-study and meditation on God. The sitting postures suitable for hermits are Padmāsana etc. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 161).

SANYASTAPĀDA. A famous Purāṇic region in India. The king of this kingdom, fearing Jarāsandha, ran away to the south with his son. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 28).

SAPTACARU. A holy place. The reason for giving this place the name Saptacaru is given in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82 as follows:

The word 'Caru' means sacrifice. Once devas (gods) and men together put the fat parts of sacrificial animals, as burnt offerings in the sacrificial fire, each singing seven verses from the Ṛgveda. By this sacrifice they obtained more prosperity than the fruits of giving one lakh of cows as alms or performing hundred Rājasūya sacrifices or thousand horse-sacrifices.

"The wise said that it was an endless gift to the manes. The gods, the manes, the Gandharvas, the celestial maids, the gaṇas, the yakṣas, Kinnaras, the siddhas, the Vidyādharas, the people of the earth, the Rākṣasas, the daityas, the Rudras, Brahmā, all these joined together with vow and fast taken for a thousand years and performed a sacrifice each exalting Viṣṇu by singing seven verses from Ṛgveda. Keśava was much pleased at the caru and gave them Āṣṭaiśvaryasiddhi (the eight miraculous attainments) and everything they wished. Thus giving them all kinds of prosperities, the god Mukunda disappeared in this place as lightning in the clouds. Therefore this place became famous everywhere by the name Saptacaru."

SAPTADVIJA (S). The seven Brahmins who killed and ate on the way the cow brought for the teacher. These seven Brahmins were the disciples of a teacher in Kuṇḍinapura. Once owing to a severe famine people were in a very difficult situation. The teacher sent these seven disciples to beg for a cow from his son-in-law who had a very large number of cows. They did accordingly. The son in-law gave them a cow for his father-in-law. The disciples began the return journey with the cow. When they reached half-way they became so weary and tired of hunger and walking that they could not proceed a step further. When they reached the stage of death, those celibates killed the cow according to the Vedic rites, and ate the flesh. Carrying the remaining flesh they reached the house of the teacher and told him all the truth. As they had tried to be righteous as far as possible, the teacher only felt proud of his disciples. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañcukālambaka, Taraṅga 1).

SAPTADVĪPAS (SEVEN ISLANDS).

1) General information. The seven islands are Jambūdvīpa, Plakṣadvīpa, Śālmalidvīpa, Kuśadvīpa, Krauñcadvīpa, Śākadvīpa and Puṣkaradvīpa. Each of these islands is surrounded by sea. The sea that surrounds Jambūdvīpa is the Lavaṇa sea (salt sea), the Plakṣa dvīpa is surrounded by the sea of Sugarcane-juice, Śālmalidvīpa by the sea of liquor, Kuśadvīpa by the sea of ghee, Krauñcadvīpa by the sea of curd Śākadvīpa by the sea of milk and the Puṣkaradvīpa by the sea of pure water. In the centre of all, lies the Jambūdvīpa and in the centre of this island, stands the golden mountain meru. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 2).

2) Origin. There is a story about the origin of these seven islands and the surrounding seas, in Devī Bhāgavata Skandha 8.

Two famous sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda were born to Svāyambhuva Manu. Priyavrata and his children ruled the country for a period of eleven arbudas, that is a hundred million years. Though he was aged so much the power of his mind and body did not show any sign of weakness. At this time he saw once the sun travelling on the first side of the earth, and began to think. "When the sun is walking on one side of the earth, the other side must naturally be dark. Will it happen so in our time? In all places at all times it should be bright and there should be no darkness." Thinking thus he got into a chariot as bright as the sun and travelled round the earth seven times. During these travels the wheels of the chariot made seven furrows on the earth. These furrows became the seven seas and the beds between the furrows became seven islands.

3) Sovereign powers. Priyavrata made his seven sons sovereigns of the seven islands. These seven sovereign rulers were Agnīdhra, Idhmajihva, Yajñabāhu, Hiraṇyaretas, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Medhātithi and Vītihotra.

SAPTAGAṄGA. An ancient holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 16, that if one goes to this place and gives offerings to gods and the manes and worships them, one would attain heaven and become a deva (god).

SAPTAGODĀVARA. A holy place near the temple of Śūrpāraka. Those who bathe in this would attain heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 44).

SAPTAJANĀŚRAMA. A holy place where seven hermits called the Saptajanas, went to heaven by standing head downwards in water. This was the place through which Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva went to Kiṣkindhā. Sugrīva told Śrī Rāma about the hermitage of Saptajanas as follows :

"Oh ! Rāghava ! This vast area is the hermitage where rest could be taken, as sweet fruits and pure water could be obtained and the forest looks like a garden. Here the seven hermits called Saptajanas, who did penance and took vow and fast by standing in water always, with heads downwards, did live in days of old." (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 13).

SAPTAJIT. One of the daughters born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. (Matsya Purāṇa 6 : 19).

SAPTAKṚT. An eternal god concerned in Śrāddha (offerings to the manes). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 36).

SAPTAMĀTṚ (S). (SEVEN MOTHERS).

1) General information. Saptamātṛs are the seven goddesses named Brahmāṇī, Vaiṣṇavī, Māheśvarī, Kaumārī, Vārāhī, Indrāṇī and Cāmuṇḍī.

2) Origin. Some are of opinion that the Saptamātṛs are connected with Śiva. Their names reveal that they were born from the bodies of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and such other gods. There is another story that when Śiva and Viṣṇu joined together and tried to kill the asura named Andhaka and failed, they created the seven mothers to kill the asura. From each drop of blood of Andhakāsura that fell on the ground an asura arose. These seven mātṛs joined with Yogeśvarī, the creation of Śiva, drank the blood of the asura without allowing it to fall on the ground and so it became easy for Śiva to kill the asura.

There is a story in Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 56, about the birth of the Saptamātṛs, as follows : In olden days a fierce war broke out between the devas and the asuras. When the fierce asuras Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa were killed the famous asura named Raktabīja entered the battlefield with an akṣauhiṇī of army (21870 chariots, so many elephants, 65610 horses and 109350 infantry). Seeing this immense army of the asuras drawing near, Kauśikī, Maheśvarī and Kālī made a loud roaring sound. Then from the mouth of Maheśvarī, Brahmāṇī came out seated on a swan and wearing rosary and water pot. From her eyes Maheśvarī with three eyes came out seated on a bull and wearing great snakes as bangles and ear-rings and holding a trident. From the loins came out Kaumārī, seated on a peacock and holding a lance. The beautiful Vaiṣṇavī came out from her hand, seated on Garuḍa, holding a conch, discus, club, sword, the bow Śārṅga and arrow. From her posterior came out the horrible Vārāhī (Boar) with a great pestle, seated on the Nāga (serpent) Śeṣa, and furrowing the ground with her fierce tusks. From her heart came out the awful Nārasiṁhī (woman-lion) with fierce claws, who at the shaking of her mane displaced the planets and the stars, and from her foot Cāmuṇḍī came out. (See under Palālā).

SAPTANĀGA (S). (Seven serpents). The Saptanāgas are Ananta, Takṣaka, Karka, Padma, Mahāpadma, Śaṅkhaka and Gulika. All of them should be consecrated in temples as wearing Brahma-string and having the face with the expanded hood of a serpent. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

SAPTARĀVA (SAPTAVĀRA). One of the famous children of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 11).

SAPTARṢIS. (The seven hermits). A group of hermits. There are seven hermits in this group. The Saptarṣis in each Manvantara (age of Manu) are different. As there are fourteen Manvantaras before a great deluge, by that time ninetyeight Saptarṣis will be born and dead. The father of the Saptarṣis in each Manu's age will be different. The Saptarṣis of the present Manu's age, Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Vasiṣṭha, Pulaha and Kratu are the mental sons of Brahmā. (For further details see under the word Manvantara).

SAPTARṢIKUṆḌA. A holy bath (tīrtha) situated within Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 73 that those who bathe in this tīrtha will obtain the merit of good actions.

SAPTASĀLA (S). The cursed forms of the King Maṇibhadra's seven sons who were sorcerers. Due to the curse of Agastya they became seven palm trees (sālas). They obtained liberation from the curse during the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Śrī Rāma. (For detailed story see under Maṇibhadra II).

SAPTASAMUDRAS. (The seven seas). See under Saptadvīpa(s).

SAPTASĀRASVATA.

1) General information. A holy place situated within Kurukṣetra. This is a holy bath dedicated to Sarasvatī. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 61, that during his pilgrimage Balabhadrarāma visited this holy bath.

2) Origin. A story occurs in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 38 about the origin of this tīrtha. It is given below:—

Once Brahmā performed a sacrifice on the island of Puṣkara. All the devas (gods and goddesses) attended the sacrifice. Among the rivers, Sarasvatī alone did not come at first. Then Brahmā remembered Sarasvatī and she appeared under the name Suprabhā. Thus she appeared before the hermits who were doing penance in that place assuming seven different figures. From that day onwards the place became famous under the name Saptasārasvata. (See under Sarasvatī).

SAPTĀŚVAS. The seven horses of the Sun. The chariot of the Sun is nine thousand yojanas long and its shaft is eighteen-thousand yojanas long. The length of the axle is fifteen million seven lakhs yojanas. The wheel is secured to this axle. The entire wheel of 'Time' (Kālacakra) stuck fast in the undiminishing figure of 'year' with three naves of the wheel, five spokes and sixty rings. The chariot is drawn by seven horses. They are the seven Vedic metres with their theory. They are Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagatī, Triṣṭup, Anuṣṭup and Paṅkti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 8).

SAPTOPĀYAS. (The seven expedients). See under Caturupāyas.

ŚARABHA I. A nāga born in the Takṣaka dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 8).

ŚARABHA II. A nāga born in the Airāvata dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 11).

ŚARABHA III. A notorious Dānava, son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Danu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 26).

ŚARABHA IV. A maharṣi, who worships Yama in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 14).

ŚARABHA V. Brother of Dhṛṣṭaketu, King of Cedi. He was a friend and supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. During the aśvamedha he helped Arjuna to lead the yājñic horse. (Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 3).

ŚARABHA VI. A brother of Śakuni. He was killed in the great war by Bhīma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 24).

ŚARABHA VII. Vīrabhadra incarnated himself as Śarabha to defeat Narasiṁhamūrti. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudrasaṁhitā).

ŚARABHAṄGA. A Maharṣi, who lived in the Daṇḍaka forest during the 'forest-life' of Śrī Rāma. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Canto IV). When Śrī Rāma visited Śarabhaṅga's āśrama, Indra too came there, but went away saying that he would meet the maharṣi after the great mission of Rāma was over. The maharṣi told Rāma that he was waiting to see him and did not accompany Indra to Devaloka as he wanted to go there only after seeing Rāma. Rāma answered the Maharṣi that he would take upon himself all the spiritual assets and good results of the actions of the Maharṣi, and wanted him to point out a place for them (Rāma and others) to live. Śarabhaṅga directed them to the āśrama of Sutīkṣṇa, and after that ended his life by leaping into the fire and attained Brahmaloka.

ŚARABHAṄGĀŚRAMA. A holy place. Those who visit the place purify their families. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 42).

ŚĀRADAṆḌĀYANI. A Kekaya King. His wife, Śrutasenā was the younger sister of Kuntī. As the couple did not get a child even very long after their marriage, the King got performed, with Śrutasenā's permission, the 'Puṁsavana' yajña with the result that three sons (Durjaya and others) were born to them. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 111).

ŚARADVĀN. A muni, the son of Gautama. From his very infancy he preferred learning the dhanurveda (science of archery) to the other Vedas. While a brahmacārin (Religious student) he performed tapas and secured divine arrows. Afterwards, having been overcome by the charms and appeals of an apsarā woman named Jānapatī, Śaradvān had seminal emission from which were born Kṛpa and Kṛpī. (For details see under Kṛpa).

ŚĀRADVATĪ. An apsarā woman. She attended the birthday celebrations of Arjuna.

ŚARAGULMA. A monkey in Rāma's army. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, 41, 3).

SARAKATĪRTHA. A famous sacred place in Kurukṣetra. He who takes his bath here on Caturdaśī day of the dark half and worships Śiva will have all his desires fulfilled and will attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83). Within this tīrtha there are a crore of other tīrthas called Rudrakoṭi, Kūpakuṇḍa etc. The sacred place to the east of it is said to belong to Nārada.

ŚARALOMĀ. A maharṣi, the father of Dāśūra. Vasiṣṭha once told Śrī Rāma the story of Dāśūra to prove that the world is all an illusion.

Dāśūra was the only son of Śaralomā, a muni, who performed tapas in the plains of the mountain in Magadha. Dāśūra too did tapas in another part of the mountain. While the father and the son were living happily the father entered samādhi and the son wept over the loss of his father. Then a forest-nymph comforted him with celestial advice.

Dāśūra performed his father's obsequies. He began thinking that the earth was impure and that the top of trees was pure and decided to do tapas in such a manner that he got power to sit on the branches and leaves of trees. Accordingly he made a big pit of fire and began making offerings of flesh cut from his body into the fire. Agnibhagavān (Fire-deity) appeared and asked him to choose the boons he wanted. Dāśūra told Agni as follows: "Oh Lord; I do not find any pure spot on this earth, which is full of created living beings. You should therefore, grant me the power to live on the tops of trees." Agni granted him the boon.

Dāśūra then climbed a big tree in the forest and occupied, without the least fear, a tender leaf at the top of the topmost branch of the tree. He there assumed the Padmāsana (the lotus seat for meditation). His mind was functioning actively as it had not been turned inwards into true knowledge. With his mind in such a state he performed yajña. He continued performing yajñas like gomedha, aśvamedha etc. mentally for ten years. Then self-illuminating knowledge arose in his mind. and he saw a beautiful forest-nymph seated beautifully attired at the end of the tender leaf on which he was sitting. She was looking very sad, her head bent down. Dāśūra asked her, who she was so much beautiful and attractive as to evoke love even in Kāma (the God of love). She answered him in a sweet voice as follows: "Very rare desires in life may be got if great men are requested for. I am the forest-nymph of this forest beautified by the tree you sit on and by trees and creepers equally beautiful. An assembly of the forest-nymphs has been held to celebrate a festival for the worship of Kāmadeva on trayodasī in the śuklapakṣa of the month of Caitra. I too went there, and I, who am childless, felt sorry in mind to see the others petting their children on their laps. But, why should I be sad when you, who can give supplicants anything they wish for, are here? You should, therefore, bless me with a child or else I will end my life in fire."

Dāśūra blessed her to have a son within a month. He told her also that it would be difficult for the son to acquire knowledge as he was got on the insistence that she would die in fire unless she got him. He did not grant her request for permission to live with him; he went into the forests leaving her behind him.

The son of the forest-nymph became twelve years old. Then, one day, she took the child to the muni; left it with him and went away. One day the father began telling the son a story, on the top of the tree, and Vasiṣṭha, who was going by the sky in invisible form to bathe in Kailāsagaṅgā, heard the story. Vasiṣṭha hid himself on the tree and listened to the story.

It was the story of king Svottha that the muni was telling his son as follows:—"He was famous for his noble qualities and unique prowess. He possessed three bodies, which possessed capacity to rule the country. One of the three bodies was the best, the other midway between good and bad and the third bad. The very origin of the King was in the wide and extensive sky; like birds he lived in the sky. He built a city in the sky with fourteen streets and three divisions or sectors. There were also forests, woods and mountains for games in the city; seven big tanks, wavy-white with creepers of pearl and two lamps, spreading heat and coolness, burning always. The King, who went about all his time in this vast city, built in it many movable inner dwellings, and they were divided between the upper and lower parts of the city. They were thatched with a kind of black grass. Each inner house had nine doors, some of them windows, which admitted air always. In each house five lamps burned, the lamps resting on three pillars and a white piece of wood. Each house was glitteringly plastered and had courtyards. A particular sect of bhūtas, who ever feared light, guarded the houses. When the houses created thus by magic moved from one place to another, King Svottha enjoyed, like birds in nests, playing various games therein. The king, who possessed three bodies, used to go out after playing for some time with the guards, and run about like one possessed of a desire to occupy houses, newly built, and then reach the city, which was like a Gandharva city. Frail and unsettled in mind, the king, off and on, developed a will to die, and accordingly he died. Just as waves come up in the sea, the king used to be born again from the sky and to attend to worldly affairs. At times he used to repent about and weep over his actions asking himself what he, the fool, was doing and why he should be sad like that. At other times he used to feel elated and enthusiastic. Briefly put, he used to be, by turns drinking, walking, jumping, expanding, contracting, feeling, drowsy and then exuberant. The great and handsome king was actually, like the sea, rendered restless by wind, possessed by various moods.

The father was describing a philosophy of life figuratively to his son, but the boy understood nothing. Then, as requested by the son, the father explained to him the meaning of the story as follows:

Svottha was concretised conception born out of the ultimate sky. Conceptions originate and die automatically. The whole visible world is imaginary. The world is there only when there is conception and in its absence no world exists. Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and Indra are only parts of that conception. It is conception itself, which creates the world of three cities in nothingness or vacuum. On account of the blessing (will) of that fundamental Caitanya (awareness, life) the formless conception attains Brahmanhood (the universal self) and engages itself in the process of creation. The glittering city said to have been created in the sky is the fourteen worlds, the gardens in it are forests and woods, the play hills therein are mountains like the Himālayas, Meru etc. The two eternal lamps of heat and cold of the story refer to the Sun and Moon. The creepers or garlands of pearl refer to rivers. Special gems have been described as tendrils of lotus and fire in the ocean and the seven seas are described respectively as lotus and the seven tanks. The statement that in this three-tiered city the king of conception built play-houses referred to the creation of individual bodies. The houses were connected as those in the upper, middle and lower parts to denote living beings in the three worlds, Devaloka, Manuṣyaloka and Pātāla. Movement is the journey of bodies due to the flow of Prāṇa (breath). Pieces of wood refer to bones and the plastering is skin. Black grass said to have been used for thatching is hair on the head. The nine doors are the nine openings in the body. Windows refer to the ear, nose etc. The hand arms etc. are roads and the five sense organs, lamps. The guards, who shun and quit light, are the egoes which run away from knowledge and discretion. The king of conception or imagination born from non-materials finds enjoyment in the house of the body, but the enjoyment is only ephemeral. Imagination develops a moment and is extinguished, like the lamp, the next moment. The place or status of conceptions in the body may be compared to that of waves in the ocean. When desire takes place for things conceived it returns to the 'body-house', which is to be born, and it ends or perishes on achievement. Rebirth due to desire (will-power) is never for happiness, but is for unending sorrow and pain. The wide world causes sorrow because it is felt to be real. Absence of this feeling ends the sorrow as night swallows clouds. Lamentation is the appeal or expression of the mind remembering forbidden practices in life and ānanda happiness, is the proud state of mind remembering noble practices. The three bodies of the king according to the three states-the best or highest, the middle one and the low-denote the three attributes (Sattva rajas-tamo guṇas) Causative of the existence of the world. The lowest of the attributes (tamoguṇa) or conceptions according to them, getting more and more pain-giving on account of uncultured action lead one to lower forms of life like the worm, tree, grass etc. Conception of real knowledge and truth is realisation of duty, righteousness and wisdom. It is next to the state of salvation called Deveśvara state. Rājasa (the middle attribute) guṇa functions as material activities in the form of attachment to wife, son, wealth etc. When one has rejected the forms of guṇas (conceptions) and the very conception is thus annihilated, one attains the supreme state. Therefore, Oh ! son ! you reject all external perceptions, control the mind by itself and completely annihilate all internal and external conceptions. Whether you live in heaven, on earth or in pātāla and do intense tapas for thousands of years, unless conception is eliminated you will not attain salvation.

After hearing the above explanation about the illusions in life, from his hiding place Vasiṣṭha went away. (Jñānavāsiṣṭha, Canto 17).

SARAMĀ I.

1) General. Bitch of the Devas. Śyāma and Śabala, sons of Saramā, were two prominent messengers of Yama and they possessed four eyes each. The offsprings of these dogs are called Sārameyas. The Ṛgveda and Mahābhārata contain a story about Saramā cursing Janamejaya. (For details see under Śrutaśravas III).

2) Other information.

(i) Saramā worships Brahmā in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 40).

(ii) Saramā is a graha (Evil spirit) of Subrahmaṇya which enters the womb of pregnant women and steals the babies. (Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 34).

(iii) Saramā after having once drunk milk from dasyus lied about it to Indra, and he punished her. (Varāha Purāṇa).

(iv) Indra once deputed Saramā to find out the place where the Paṇis had hidden the cows on condition that he would feed her children. Saramā found out the place and informed Indra about it thus earning for her children their livelihood. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Chapter 5).

SARAMĀ II. Wife of Vibhīṣaṇa and daughter of the Gandharva called Śailūṣa. Saramā consoled Sītā weeping under the Aśoka tree in Laṅkā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa, Canto 33, Verse 1).

SARAMĀ III. Daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati by his wife Asiknī. She was married by Kaśyapa maharṣi and from her were born the ferocious animals on earth. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

SĀRAMEYA I. A King of the dynasty of Bharata. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that Sārameya was the son of Svavalka. (Śvaphalka).

SĀRAMEYA II. The son of the dog Saramā. (See under Saramā II).

SĀRAMEYĀŚANA. A hell. (See the section Naraka under Kāla).

ŚARAṆA. A serpent born in Vāsuki's dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 6).

SĀRAṆA I.

1) General information. A Kṣatriya of the Yadu clan. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 17, that he was the son of Vasudeva by Devakī and the brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Subhadrā.

2) Other details.

(i) This Sāraṇa was one of those who took the dowry to Hastināpura at the marriage of Arjuna and Subhadrā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 32).

(ii) Sāraṇa shone in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 30).

(iii) Sāraṇa participated in the Rājasūya sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 15).

(iv) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Hastināpura from Dvārakā to take part in the horse-sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira, Sāraṇa also accompanied him. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 4).

(v) Sāraṇa was the foremost of those who disguised Sāmba the son of Jāmbavatī as a woman, and abused the hermits. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 15).

SARAṆYĀ. A wife of Sūrya. (Ṛgveda, 10, 17, 2).

ŚARĀRI. A monkey, who accompanied Hanūmān to the southern regions in search of Sītā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Canto 44).

SĀRASA I. A child of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 11).

SĀRASA II. A son of Yadu. He founded the city Krauñcapura on the banks of the river Veṇā in South India. (Harivaṁśa, 2, 38, 27).

ŚARĀSANA. See under Citraśarāsana.

ŚARASTAMBA. A sacred place in ancient times. He who bathes here will attain the state where he is served by apsarās. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 28).

SĀRASVATA I. See under Apāntaratamas.

SĀRASVATA II. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 7, that Sārasvata was the son of Dadhīca. Dadhīca once happened to see the celestial maid Alambuṣā and became excited, and seminal discharge occurred to him. The semen fell in the river Sarasvatī. The river became pregnant and delivered a child. This child grew up and became the famous hermit named Sārasvata.

After the death of the hermit Dadhīci, due to scarcity of rain a great famine occurred which lasted for twelve years. When the famine became unbearable all the hermits on the basin and banks of the river Sarasvatī began to migrate to other places leaving all their possessions behind, to save their lives. But Sārasvata alone remained on the banks of Sarasvatī, living on fish obtained from the river, engaged in meditation and study of Vedas.

After twelve years the famine ended and the country became prosperous as before. The hermits who had gone to other places began to come back to their hermitages. The desire to study Vedas grew up in their minds. But there was not a single person, well-versed in the Vedas, except Sārasvata. So all the hermits accepted him as their teacher. Thus Sārasvata taught the Vedas to Sixtythousand hermits, who had returned to their hermitages. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 50).

In course of time the place where the hermitage of Sārasvata stood, became famous under the name Sārasvata tīrtha. Tuṅgakāraṇya is another name of this place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 43-50).

In ancient days there were two schemes of study known as 'Kāṇḍānukramapāṭha' and 'Sārasvatapāṭha' for the Taittirīya-collection (Saṁhitā). But today the Kāṇḍānukramapāṭha has become quite extinct. The following is a description, given in Saṁskāraratnamālā stating how the 'Sārasvatapāṭha' attained so vigorous a vogue.

Once owing to the curse of the hermit Durvāsas, the river Sarasvatī took birth as a woman in the house of a Brahmin, who belonged to the Gotra of Ātreya. Later from that same Brahmin she conceived and gave birth to a son named Sārasvata. The river Sarasvatī herself, taught her son the Vedas completely, and then sent him to Kurukṣetra to do penance. As a result of the penance Sārasvata got an original Kramapāṭha (serial lessons) of the Taittirīya saṁhitā. He taught those serial lessons to his disciples. In course of time these serial lessons got the name Sārasvatapāṭha. which earned metaphysical and philosophical importance.

SĀRASVATA III. A hermit who lived in the western regions. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 201, Verse 30, that this Sārasvata was the son of the hermit Atri.

SĀRASVATA IV. Mention is made in Padma Purāṇa, Svargakhaṇḍa, about another hermit Sārasvata, who taught the Vedas to several disciples in Tuṅgakāraṇya.

SĀRASVATA V. The people who lived in a particular region of Western Bhārata. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SARASVATĪ I. Goddess of learning.

1) Birth. Sarasvati is the daughter of Brahmā. Kāmadeva was born from Brahmā's heart; Krodha (anger) was born from his eyebrows; Lobha, from his lower lip, Sarasvatī, from his face; the Sindhus from his genitals, and Nirṛti, from his anus.

The following story about the birth of Sarasvatī is from Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 43 :—

Brahmā got ready for creation, and while in meditation sattvaguṇa (sublime quality) began swelling up in his mind wherefrom a girl was born. Brahmā asked her who she was. She answered : "I am born from you. You fix for me a seat and duties." Then Brahmā told her that her name was Sarasvatī and ordained that she should stay on the tip of everybody's tongue. You dance especially on the tongues of learned people. You should also exist on earth in the form of a river, and assuming a third form you should live in me too." Sarasvatī agreed to this.

2) Curse of Sarasvati. See under Gaṅgā.

3) Misled Kumbhakarṇa. When Kumbhakarṇa requested Brahmā for a boon, Sarasvatī, at the instance of the latter, lodged herself in the tongue of Kumbhakarṇa and made him ask for Nidrāvatva (Sleep), something different from what he really desired to get Viz. Nirdevatva (absence of Devas).

4) Received Baḍavāgni. (all-consuming fire). Baḍavāgni was born at the quarrel between the Bhārgavas and Hehayas. Baḍavāgni is flames of Aurva, the Bhārgava. (See under Aurva). It was Sarasvatī who took the Agni to the ocean. As a result of this, Sarasvatī, became a river in India. The story is told in the Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇa as follows:-

The world was about to be burnt in Baḍavāgni, which originated from Aurva, when Indra requested Sarasvatī thus: "Oh ! Devi ! you should deposit this agni in the western ocean; or else the world will be consumed in its flames." To this Sarasvatī told Viṣṇu as follows: "I am not a free person. I will do nothing without the permission of my father. Therefore, please think of some other means."

The Devas, who understood Sarasvatī's nature, went to Brahmā with their case. Immediately he called Sarasvatī to him and asked her to deposit Baḍavāgni in the western ocean for the safety of himself and the Devas. Unable to disobey her father, Sarasvatī, with tears in her eyes, agreed to do so. Then Gaṅgā followed her and she told the former that she (Gaṅgā) would see her flowing northwards when she reached the eastern region surrounded by Devas.

Sarasvatī sent back her companions like Gaṅgā, Yamunā Manoramā, Gāyatrī and Sāvitrī who followed her. Then she appeared at the āśrama of Uttaṅka under the Plakṣa tree in the presence of the Devas. Just as Śiva carried Gaṅgā, the Plakṣa tree bore Sarasvatī and immediately did Śiva give to her Baḍavāgni in a pot. Because of his blessing the agni did not burn her hands. She went towards the north with the pot and came to Puṣkariṇī, and she stopped there to redeem the sins of people. It is believed to this very day that those who drink water from the Puṣkara will attain Brahmaloka.

From Puṣkara Sarasvatī flowed towards the west and reaching a date-garden not far off from Puṣkara it rose up again where Sarasvatī is known as Nandā as well. There is also another reason for the name Nandā. Once upon a time there was a King called Prabhañjana. While hunting in the forest he saw a deer inside a cluster of shrubs and he shot an arrow at it. Then the deer told the King: "What a crime is this ! You have wounded me, who am feeding my child. I have heard that the King shall not kill a deer while it is engaged in drinking, sleeping or mating. May you, who have done this cruel act, be transformed into a tiger and roam about this thorny forest." Saying again and again that he did not notice that the deer was feeding its child, the King begged for absolution from the curse. Taking pity on the weeping king the deer told him that he would be redeemed from the curse when he had talked with the cow called Nandā, which would go there after a hundred years.

According to the above curse the king got transformed into a tiger and spent hundred years eating wild animals. After hundred years were over a herd of cows came there grazing under the leadership of a cow called Nandā. Beautiful Nandā used to walk ahead of the other cows and graze alone at a secret place in the forest. There was a mountain called Rohita there, on the banks of the river. The northern side of the mountain was a dense forest infested by cruel animals. There lived there a very cruel and terrible tiger as big as a mountain. A generous person called Nanda was feeding the cows with grass etc. Nandā, the cow, got separated from the herd and came to the river when the tiger ran after it asking it to stop. Crying aloud the cow said: Oh tiger; I have a child, which has not begun even tasting grass and it is awaiting the return of its mother to the cow-shed at dusk. I shall go and take leave of the child and return so that you may eat me." Taking pity on the cow the tiger granted its prayer. It returned duly to the tiger at dusk. The tiger, taken by surprise, by the honesty of the cow enquired of it its name, and the cow answered that it was named Nandā by its master, Nanda. As soon as the name was uttered Prabhañjana was released from his old curse and he became the former king. Dharmadeva then appeared there and asked her to choose the boon she liked and she replied as follows:— "I, with my child, must attain the ultimate place and position, and let this place become a sacred place for munis. Also, let this river Sarasvatī, come to be known as Nandā, by my name." Nandā immediately ascended to heaven and Prabhañjana returned to his palace. River Sarasvatī came to be called Nandā from that day: After flowing through the above-mentioned date-garden towards the south for some distance Sarasvatī (Nandā) flowed again towards the north. She reached the ocean and deposited therein the pot of Baḍavāgni. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa).

5) Sarasvatī as Brahmā's wife. The Purāṇas mention three wives of Brahmā, Sarasvatī, Sāvitrī and Gāyatrī. But, the three are, according to Matsya Purāṇa, one and the same person. The Matsya Purāṇa mentions:— Brahmā created, from his own effulgence, a woman, who became famous under the names Śatarūpā, Sāvitrī, Gāyatrī and Brahmāṇī. Brahmā fell in love with his daughter and noticing the fact she turned away to the right side of her father. Then did a face appear on his right side. To avoid the amorous looks of the father, she slided off to both his sides, and faces appeared on those sides of Brahmā. Then Sarasvatī jumped up to the sky and a fifth face appeared on his head, turned upwards. Finding escape impossible she yielded to the desire of Brahmā and they enjoyed honey-moon for a hundred years. To them was born a son called Svāyambhuva or Virāṭ.

At one place in Skanda Purāṇa, Sāvitrī and Gāyatrī are referred to as different individuals. (See under Sāvitrī).

6) Idol of Sarasvatī. Sarasvatī, clad in white clothes, sits on a white lotus. She holds in her hands a string of beads, book and Vīṇā. She is depicted in sitting, standing and dancing postures. She is conceived as Śakti related to Viṣṇu as also to Śiva. In certain old works in Bengal, Sarasvatī, instead of Bhūmidevī, is to be seen along with Viṣṇu. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50, enjoins that idols of Sarasvatī in temple should hold in its hands book, string of beads and Vīṇā.

7) Other information.

(i) It was on the banks of Sarasvatī that Vyāsa performed tapas and Śuka was born. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

(ii) There are various references to Sarasvatī in the Ṛgveda.

(iii) Sarasvatī shines forth in Indra's court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 19).

(iv) Once Sarasvatī advised the muni called Tārkṣya (Vana Parva, Chapter 185).

(v) During Tripuradahana (burning of the city of the Tripuras) Sarasvatī served as a passage for the chariot of Śiva to advance. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 34).

(vi) Muni Yājñavalkya once thought of Sarasvatī and she appeared before him wearing ornaments of vowels and consonants and sounding 'Om'. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 14).

SARASVATĪ II. River Sarasvatī, flowing through north India is, according to Purāṇic conception, Sarasvatī devī who has assumed the form of a river. (See under Sarasvatī I). The following information about river Sarasvatī famed in the Purāṇas is from the Mahābhārata.

(i) King Matināra once performed a yajña on the banks of river Sarasvatī. At the close of the yajña Sarasvatīdevī appeared and chose the King as her husband, and a son called Taṁsu was born to the couple. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 26).

(ii) River Sarasvatī is one of the seven tributaries of river Gaṅgā and its source is under the Plakṣa tree. One who drinks its water will become free from sin. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 19).

(iii) Sarasvatī worships Varuṇa in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 19).

(iv) The Pāṇḍavas, while travelling in the forest, crossed the river. (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 2).

(v) Śrī Kṛṣṇa conducted a yajña in the plains of river Sarasvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 14).

(vi) Kāmyaka forest is on the banks of Sarasvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 41).

(vii) It is a holy river. If one bathes in it and worships one's ancestors one will attain Sārasvataloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 66)

(viii) Dadhīca had his āśrama on the banks of the river. (Vana Parva, Chapter 100, Verse 13).

(x) The river disappears in Vināśanatīrtha and reappears at Camasodbheda. (Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 3).

(xi) It is the source of Agni. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

(xii) There are many holy places on the plains of the river. They are described in Chapters 35-54 of Salya Parva.

(xiii) River Sarasvatī once carried Vasiṣṭha in its flow. (See under Vasiṣṭha).

(xiv) Viśvāmitra cursed Sarasvatī. (See under Vasiṣṭha).

(xv) Sarasvatī returned to Dadhīci maharṣi the son born to her by him and he blessed her. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 51).

(xvi) Balabhadrarāma once extolled the greatness of Sarasvatī. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 33).

(xvii) Arjuna appointed the son of Sātyaki as the master of a particular region on the banks of the river. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 71).

SARASVATĪ III. Wife of Manu. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14).

SARASVATĪ IV. Wife of Dadhīci maharṣi. The couple had a son called Sārasvata. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 101, Verse 9).

SARASVATĪSĀGARASAṄGAMA. The point where Sarasvatī joins the ocean. It is considered to be a holy place. Candra regained his brilliance once dimmed by the curse of Dakṣa by bathing at this holy place. (For details see under Candra IV, Para 6).

SARASVATĪSAṄGAMA. A sacred place. Brahmā and the maharṣis once worshipped Viṣṇu here. He who bathes here will attain Brahmaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 151).

SARASVATYARṆUĀSAṄGAMA. A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. One who bathes here and fasts for three nights will be freed from the sin of Brahmahatyā (killing of a brahmin). (Vana Parva, Chapter 83).

ŚARAVAṆA. The place where Subrahmaṇya was born. (See under Subrahmaṇya).

ŚARAVINDU (ŚAŚABINDU). A famous King born in the dynasty of Bharata, son of Duṣyanta. His father's name was Citraratha. He was a great ascetic and a powerful emperor. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). He had no less than ten thousand wives and lakhs of children by each wife.

SARAYŪ I. A river very famous in the Purāṇas. The most important things associated with the river are given below :

(i) Seven tributaries of Gaṅgā originate from the golden peaks of the Himālayas and Sarayū is one of them. Those who bathe in the river will be absolved from sins. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 20).

(ii) The river exists in Varuṇa's court worshipping him. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 8).

(iii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhīma, on their way to Girivraja from Indraprastha crossed this river. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 28).

(iv) It was at Gotāra (or Gopratara) in this river that Śrī Rāma drowned himself to death and attained Viṣṇupāda. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 70).

(v) This river is the source of Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

(vi) Vasiṣṭha once blocked the course of Gaṅgā on its way to Kailāsa at Mānasasarovara. But, Gaṅgā broke the obstruction and flowed on, and Sarayū is the stream that started from there. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 23).

(vii) It is one of the rivers to be remembered both at dawn and dusk. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 21).

(viii) The city of Ayodhyā is situated on the banks of Sarayū. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 5, Verse 5).

SARAYŪ II. Wife of the Agni Vīra. The couple had a son called Siddhi. (Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 11).

ŚĀRDŪLA. A spy of Rāvaṇa. It was he, who informed Rāvaṇa about the arrival of Rāma. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa, Canto 30).

ŚĀRDŪLĪ. Daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Krodhavaśā, who had ten daughters including Śārdūlī. Tiger, leopard etc. were born from Śārdūlī. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

SARGA (CREATION). Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 refers to various sargas as follows.

The first creation is that of greatness (Mahatva) i.e. Brahmā. The second creation is that of tanmātras called bhūtasarga. The third is Vaikārikasarga also called Aindriyikasarga. These three kinds of creation are called Prākṛta sṛṣṭi (natural creation) and that is conscious and intelligent creation. The fourth is mukhyasarga. Mukhyas mean immovables. The fifth is tiryagyonisṛṣṭi. Since it functions side-long it is called tiryaksrotas. The sixth is the creation of Ūrdhvasrotas, called devasarga. The seventh is the creation of arvāksrotas, called mānuṣasarga. The eighth, anugrahasarga, is both sāttvic and tāmasic. Thus, vaikṛtasargas are five in number and prākṛtasargas three. The ninth sarga is the Kaumāra sarga, which is both vaikṛta and Prākṛta. The fundamental or root cause of the universe is the above nine creations of Brahmā. Prākṛtasarga is of three types, nitya (eternal), naimittika (casual) and dainandina (daily). Nityasarga is the creation after interim deluges.

SARIDDVĪPA. One of the prominent sons of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101).

SĀRIKA. A hermit who was a prominent member of the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13.

SĀRIMEJAYA. A King in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 19, that this King was present at the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Draupadī.

ŚARĪRA. (BODY). Body is constituted of the five elements, earth, water, fire, air and sky (ether). What is solid or hard in the body is earth; liquid, is water; hot or burning, fire; what gives motion to the body is air and what are pores in the body is sky.

Body is that which exists and functions with the five organs of knowledge eye, ear, nose, tongue and skin, and the five organs of action like Upastha (sex organ), Pāṇi (hand), Pāda (leg) and Vāṇī (speech). The body depends on the six tastes, sweet, sour, saltish, bitter, hot and astringent. (Kaṭu, amla, madhura, lavaṇa, tikta and kaṣāya). The body is composed of seven internal elements (dhātus) of seven colours, white, red, dark (black), black and white, yellow, brassy and faint-white (Pāṇḍura). Vātapittakaphas (wind, bile and phlegm) are intertwined in the body. Since the body is formed of vital fluids from the sex organs of the father and the mother it is dviyoni (males with male and females with female organs of reproduction). The body exists by four kinds of foods, bhojya, bhakṣya, khādya and lehya. After coitus, within one night, the male and female semen and blood combine into one body in the womb (Kalala). Within seven days it becomes foamy (budbuda). After a fortnight it becomes solid (piṇḍa) and after one month hard (kaṭhina). During the second month the head of the child is formed; in the third month its feet: in the fourth its ankles, stomach and waist are formed. In the fifth month is formed the back (Pṛṣṭha) and face, nose, eyes and ears are formed in the sixth month. During the seventh month life enters the child's body. By the eighth month all the signs of the human being are completed in the child. If the vitality and effulgence of the mother are more than those of the father the off-spring will be female and vice versa; if both are in exactly equal proportions the child will be a eunuch, neither male nor female. If the parents were sad and worried during the time of the mother's conception, the child born would be either blind, lame or a pigmy. If the semen is cleft into two by wind (in the womb) the mother would give birth to twins. In the ninth month the child will be gifted with knowledge and it will remember to what caste it belonged and what all good and evil actions it did in its previous life.

SĀRISṚKKA. Son of the bird Mandapāla. (See under Khāṇḍavadāha, Para 8).

SĀRÑJAYA. A Sṛñjaya King. Mention is made about this King who had been the support of the Bharadvājas, in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 6, Anuvāka 47, Sūkta 25.

ŚARKA. A son of King Kuśāmba. Śarka had a brother called Gāni. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 57).

ŚARMAKA. A famous rural region in the northeast of India. Bhīmasena conquered the region during his triumphal tour. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13).

ŚARMI. A brahmin scholar. (See under Parṇaśālā).

ŚARMIṢṬHĀ. Daughter of Vṛṣaparvan, King of the asuras. (For details see under Devayānī).

ŚĀRṄGA. Śrī Kṛṣṇa's bow. The following facts about the bow are gathered from the Mahābhārata.

(i) When Kṛṣṇa exhibited his Viśvarūpa (cosmic form) in the assembly of the Kauravas he had held in one hand this bow. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 131, Verse 10).

(ii) Kṛṣṇa's Śārṅga is on a par with Indra's bow called Vijaya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 4).

(iii) Śārṅga is one of the three divine bows. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 5).

(iv) Śārṅga was made by Brahmā and presented to Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Southern text, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 141).

ŚĀRṄGAKOPĀKHYĀNA. The story of the Śārṅgaka bird. (See under Khāṇḍavadāha).

ŚĀRṄGARAVA. A maharṣi. He was one of the officiating priests at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 6).

SARPA. A son of Tvaṣṭā. According to Agni Purāṇa the sons of Tvaṣṭā were called Ekādaśarudras; But according to Mahābhārata, Sarpa, one of the Ekādaśarudras is the son of Sthāṇu and the great-grandson of Brahmā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 2).

SARPABALI. An offering made by Hindus in South India to propitiate serpents. Serpents are pleased by songs by Pulluvan and Pulluvatti (Male and female members of a Hindu sub-caste). To draw Kalams (drawings on floor conveying certain esoteric meanings), to make offerings and for the Pulluvars to sing—these form important elements of Sarpabali. The bali has a connection with the story of Khāṇḍavadāha. The legend behind the bali is that a Pulluva woman saved Takṣaka, who escaped to the ocean after the Khāṇḍava forest was burnt down. Songs by Pulluvan and Pulluvatti are unavoidable items in Sarpabali.

Drawing the Kalam is a very important item in Sarpabali. It is drawn on a platform made of puṭṭumaṇṇu (small heaps of earth thrown up by earthworms and termites), the platform being demarcated by four pieces of arecanut wood. The platform is covered with silk and tender coconut leaves are hung all around it. The Kalam is drawn with rice powder, and other coloured powders. The husk of paddy burnt into charcoal is powdered and with it serpents are sketched first on the maṇḍapa (platform). The nāga drawings are tinted with colours. The (colour) powders are collected in coconut shells and sprinkled on the drawings through holes in shells. Pulluvas exhibit wonderful artistic talents in making the drawings.

When the kalam is drawn worship of nāga is begun compulsorily by a male member of the house, and he is technically called 'Kalattil Kaimal'. He has been observing 'vrata' during two days previous to the pūjā (worship). Having taken his bath and wearing an additional cloth across his shoulders (Uttarīya) he comes with water in a jar. Four lamps should be burning on four sides of the kalam. Also, paddy, rice, tender coconut, milk, fruit etc. should be placed on its four sides. As directed by the Pulluvan the 'Kaimal' conducts the worship by offering flower, water etc. The Kaimal is to sit on each of the four sides of the kalam and do the pūjā. Then wicks (made of cloth) should be lighted, water sprinkled on it and with that the Kaimal should go around the kalam thrice. With the wicks placed on a leaf with paddy underneath it and also with burning camphor he should go round the kalam. Then the Pulluvan playing on the Vīṇā in front and a male member of the house with a vessel containing milk, a female member holding a lamp, two girls holding brass plates and the Kaimal and all of them following the Pulluvan go round the Kalam thrice and proceed to the serpents' temple in the compound, pray and return. After all these persons are seated, the Kaimal washes the feet of and puts flowers on the heads of the two girls, who had held the brass plates; seats them on two pieces of round wood in the kalam. The girls will have mirror etc. in their hands. They should concentrate their eyes on the heads of the serpents. Now begins the Pulluvan pāṭṭu (song by Pulluvan). At the time of the worship they will be beating tunes on a brass pot, music being made on the Vīṇā.

'Pulluvan pāṭṭu' is the most important item in the whole programme. The songs relate to the burning of the khāṇḍava forest, Kāliyamardana (suppression of the nāga king) etc. One Pulluvan sings songs and a second one repeats them. A minimum of two Pulluva males and two females are required for the purpose. As the songs acquire momentum the girls begin to shake their heads and to wipe off the kalam. Then the girls are asked questions and they answer. Within a short time the girls will swoon and fall on the ground. They are brought back to consciousness by water being sprinkled on them and by fanning. This is in general the nature of a Sarpabali.

SARPADEVĪ. Sarpadevī, also called nāgatīrtha, is a sacred place in Kurukṣetra. A bath here is as beneficial as the performance of an agniṣṭoma yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83).

SARPAMĀLĪ. A maharṣi gifted with divine powers. He had a talk with Śrī Kṛṣṇa on the latter's way to Hastināpura. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

SARPĀNTA. A bird born in the line of Garuḍa's children. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

SARPASATRA. See under Janamejaya, Part 5.

SARPĀSYA. A Rākṣasa. He was the commander-in-chief of the army of Khara and Dūṣaṇa, who had clashed with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa at Pañcavaṭī. Khara and Dūṣaṇa had twelve reputed army-chiefs, including Sarpāsya. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Canto 27).

SARVA. Another name of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 12).

SARVĀ. A Purāṇic river. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 36),

SĀRVABHAUMA I. A king of the Bharata dynasty. He was the son of Vidūratha and the father of Jayatsena. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SĀRVABHAUMA II. A son born to King Ahaṁyāti of the Lunar dynasty, by Bhānumatī, daughter of Kṛtavīrya. This Sārvabhauma married Sunandā, daughter of the King of Kekaya. (M.B Ādi Parva, Chapter 95).

SĀRVABHAUMA III. An elephant born in the family of the Diggajas (Eight elephants supporting the globe). Mention is made about this elephant in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 121, Verse 26.

SĀRVABHAUMA IV. An incarnation in the Manvantara (Manu's age) of Sāvarṇi Manu. Sārvabhauma was begotten by Devaguhya and was born of Sarasvatī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

SARVADAMANA. Bharata, the heroic son of Śakuntalā. (For details see under Bharata I).

SARVADEVATĪRTHA. A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. He who bathes there will derive benefit equal to that of gifting away thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 88).

SARVAGA. Son of Bhīmasena by his wife Balandharā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 77)

SARVAKĀMA. Son of King Ṛtuparṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SARVAKĀMADUGHĀ. A daughter of Surabhi. She holds up the northern region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 10).

SARVAKARMĀ. Son of King Saudāsa. When Paraśurāma killed the Kṣatriyas it was Parāśaramuni, who saved Sarvakarmā from death. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 76).

SARVAPĀPAPRAMOCANAKŪPA. A Kūpa (well) which drives away all sins. It is a tīrtha. He who bathes in its waters will never have to face evil fate. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 126).

SARVARTUKA. A beautiful forest near mount Raivataka. (M.B. Southern text, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38)

SARVASĀRAṄGA. A nāga born in Dhṛtarāṣṭra dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 18).

SARVASENA. A king of Kāśī whose daughter Sunandā was married by emperor Bharata. The couple had a son called Bhumanyu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 32).

SARVATEJAS. A King born in Dhruva's dynasty. Vyuṣṭa was his father. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

SARVATOBHADRA. Varuṇa's home. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 10).

ŚARYĀTI I. A son of Vaivasvata Manu.

1) General. Ikṣvāku, Nābhāga, Dhṛṣṭa, Śaryāti, Nariṣyanta, Prāṁśu, Nṛga, Diṣṭa, Karūṣa and Pṛṣadhra were sons of Vaivasvata Manu. Śaryāti had a son called Ānarta and a daughter called Sukanyā, who was married by the aged and blind Cyavana, and a son named Pramati was born to the couple. (See under Cyavana).

2) Other information.

(i) Śaryāti lives in Yama's court worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 14).

(ii) Cyavana performed for Śaryāti his yajña at which the Aśvinīkumāras, in disobedience of Indra, drank Somarasa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 124).

(iii) Two famous Kings, Haihaya and Tālajaṅgha were born in Śaryāti's dynasty. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 6).

ŚARYĀTI II. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was the son of Prācinvān and father of Ahaṁyāti. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 14).

ŚARYĀTIVANA. A sacred forest. Arjuna, in the course of his 'dream-trip' to Kailāsa in the company of Śrī Kṛṣṇa crossed this forest also. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 82).

ŚAŚABINDU. See under Śaravindu.

ŚAŚĀDA I. Son of Vikukṣi, the King of Ayodhyā. Purañjaya was Śaśāda's son. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Chapter 1).

ŚAŚĀDA II. A son of Ikṣvāku. His real name was Vikukṣi. (For the detailed story as to how 'Vikukṣi' became 'Śaśāda' see under Vikukṣi).

ŚAŚAKA. A caste. Karṇa, during his triumphal tour, defeated the King of the Śaśakas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 21).

ŚAŚALOMĀ. A King very much reputed in the Purāṇas. He did tapas at Kurukṣetra and attained heaven. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 14).

ŚAŚAYĀNA. A sacred place. In the waters of river Sarasvatī at this place the full moon reflects in the form of a śaśa (hare). A bath here will make a man as bright and lustrous as the moon. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 114).

ŚAŚIKA. A rural area in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 46).

ŚAŚIKALĀ. Daughter of Subāhu, King of Kāśī. She was married by a prince Sudarśana who had been driven out of his kingdom by Yudhājit.

As she became a young woman Śaśikalā heard about Sudarśana, who lived in the forest with his mother and fell in love with him. One night Devī appeared in dream to her and told her that marriage with Sudarśana would take place, and at those words of Devī she awoke from sleep and began laughing. Though her mother asked Śaśikalā about the reason for her laughing thus, she answered not, but continued laughing. One day while she was picnicking in the Campaka forest, an old brahmin came there and described to her about the great personality and beauty of Sudarśana, who then was staying with his mother at Bharadvājāśrama. Śaśikalā's heart yearned to be with Sudarśana.

Sudarśana, after the death of his father Dhruvasandhi, lived with his mother Manoramā and her father. But, Yudhājit killed Manoramā's mother also. It was after this that Sudarśana and his mother took refuge in the āśrama of Bharadvājamuni. One of those days, Niṣāda, King of Śṛṅgiverapura and a friend of Sudarśana's father (Dhruvasandhi) came to Bharadvājāśrama and presented a chariot, which possessed mysterious powers, to Sudarśana. The munis were pleased at this and imparted to Sudarśana the Kāmarājamantra, which gave one who practised it all that one desired, and after the above incident Sudarśana began slowly to come out of the āśrama. He went about the forests in the chariot presented by Niṣāda, and he was astonished to find many an armed soldier surround him wherever he went. This happened because of the mysterious powers of the chariot.

It was at this time that King Subāhu decided to conduct the Svayaṁvara of his daughter Śaśikalā. Kings from all lands came. Śaśikalā told her mother in secret about her desire to marry Sudarśana, and the mother in turn told about this to the father. But, he was not for it. Then Śaśikalā sent a messenger secretly to Sudarśana to request him to be present at the Svayaṁvara, and Sudarśana and his mother started for the palace of the King of Kāśī and when they reached it, kings like Yudhājit had already come there. A rumour was spread that Subāhu, insultingly ignoring all the crowned heads, was going to marry his daughter to Sudarśana, a mere beggar. The assembled Kings, therefore, got themselves ready to pick a row with Subāhu, but, he pacified them with the assurance that the Svayaṁvara of Śaśikalā would formally be conducted and her husband could then be selected by herself. That night Śaśikalā's parents tried their best to divert her heart away from Sudarśana, to no purpose and the same night she was duly married to him. By the next morning news about the marriage became public and all the Kings, who had come for the Svayaṁvara decided in conference to kill Sudarśana on his way back home with his wife, and abduct Śaśikalā. Accordingly on the fourth day after the wedding when Sudarśana and Śaśikalā were returning to Ayodhyā escorted by the army allotted to them by Subāhu, King Yudhājit and his followers attacked them from their hiding place. In the battle that ensued Devī appeared and helped Sudarśana, who defeated the enemies. People of Ayodhyā received with enthusiasm the victorious Sudarśana and he was crowned their King. In later years he became famous as emperor Sudarśana.

ŚĀSTĀ. The presiding deity (idol installed) in the Śabarimala temple.

1) Birth. Śiva fell in love with Mahāviṣṇu in his assumed form as Mohinī and Śāstā was the result of their union. (Kambarāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa). This story occurs in the 8th Skandha of Bhāgavata and the Asura kāṇḍa of Skanda Purāṇa, but only the Skanda Purāṇa refers to the child by name Śāstā.

2) Other information.

(i) In the battle between Indra and the asura called Śūrapadma the former deputed Śāstā for the protection of Śacīdevī. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

(ii) Śāstā is supposed to have two wives called Purāṇā and Puṣkalā and a son called Satyaka. (Aṣṭottaraśatakam about Śāstā; also see under Śabarimala).

ṢAṢṬHĪDEVĪ.

1) General. A Devī born out of 1/6 part of original nature (Mūlaprakṛti). Since she was born out of 1/6 part, she is called Ṣaṣṭhīdevī. Also called Devasenā, Ṣaṣṭhīdevī is the patron-devī of children. She grants them life. She protects them as the real mother and always remains by their side. She has earned Siddhis by the practice of yoga, is the best among the aṣṭamātṛs (eight mothers) and is the wife of Subrahmaṇya.

2) Blessings of the Devī. She is foremost among the devīs, who bless children. There is a story in the ninth canto of Devī Bhāgavata revealing the importance of Ṣaṣṭhīdevī.

Though Priyavrata, son of Svāyambhuva Manu was at first averse to marriage he, at last, married, on the insistence of Brahmā, a woman called Mālinī. For long he had no issues and sad at heart he got a putrakāmeṣṭi yajña performed by Kaśyapaprajāpati as a result of which Mālinī got pregnant, and delivered in the twelfth year. But, the child was still-born and Priyavrata set out with the corpse for the burning ghat. But, he could not make up his mind to give it up and so decided himself also to court death. Then he saw a divine plane stop there with a woman in it, who spoke to him as follows: "I am Devasenādevī, the mental daughter of Brahmā and wife of Skandadeva. It is I, who grant son to the sonless, wife to the wifeless, husband to the husbandless, wealth to the poor and the results of their actions to all." So saying the Devī took from Priyavrata the corpse of his child and brought it back to life.

ṢAṢṬHĪHRADA. A sacred place. Bathing here is more beneficial than gifting away food. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 36).

ŚAŚOLŪKAMUKHĪ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 22).

ŚĀŚVA. An ancient King in Bhārata. It is said in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter I, Verse 17, that this King remains in the palace of Yama and glorifies him.

ŚĀTA. A great yakṣa friend of Vaiśravaṇa. (See under Dīpakarṇi for the story about how Śāta became a cursed Yakṣa).

ŚATABALA. A peepal tree on the peak of mount Kumuda. From the branches of the tree milk, butter-milk, ghee, juice of Sugar-cane etc. descend carrying with them divine rice, clothes, ornaments etc. to the Kumuda mountain and flow in rivers towards the north. The people in those places get their rice, clothes ornaments etc. from the river. Mīnākṣīdevī praised by Devas has her abode here. Those who drink milk etc. flowing in the river will not be affected by hunger, thirst and signs of old age. Nor will any danger overtake them. They will live long. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

ŚATABALI. A great monkey under the leadership of Sugrīva. He was the leader of the monkeys deputed to the northern regions to look for Sītā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa Canto 43).

ŚATABHIṢAK. A star.

He who gives gifts of fragrant materials like sandalwood on the day of this star will, after death, live with the apsarās and enjoy fragrant smell. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 30).

ŚATACANDRA. A brother of Śakuni. In the battle of Kurukṣetra he fought on the side of the Kauravas and got defeated by Bhīma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 23).

ŚATADHANUS (ŚATADHANVĀ). A Yādava king. (For details see under Kṛtavarmā Para 2).

ŚATADRŪ. The Purāṇic name of the Indian river now called Sutlej. Grief-stricken over the death of his son, Vasiṣṭha once jumped into this river, which, realising that the maharṣi was as powerful as fire, divided itself into many branches and flowed in various directions, and hence the river came to be known as Śatadrū. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 176, Verse 8). Once in talking about sublime rivers to Śiva, Pārvatī mentioned this river also. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Verse 18). Śatadrū is also one of the ten rivers referred to in the Ṛgveda.

ŚATADYUMNA. A King in ancient India, son of Cākṣuṣa Manu by his wife Naḍvalā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13). Naḍvalā had ten brilliant sons including Śatadyumna. Śatadyumna once gifted away a house of gold to the brahmin called Mudgala and thereby attained heaven. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 32).

ŚATAGHAṆṬĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

ŚATAHRADĀ. Mother of the Rākṣasa called Virādha. His father's name was Jaya. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa).

ŚATAJIT I. A King of the Yādava dynasty. Śatajit, son of Sahasrajit, had three sons called Mahāhaya, Veṇuhaya and Hehaya. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚATAJIT II. Son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Jāmbavatī. Śatajit met with his death in the quarrels among the Yādavas at Prabhāsatīrtha. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚATAJYOTI. Son of King Subhrāṭ. The King had one lakh sons. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 44).

ŚĀTAKARṆI I. See under Mandakarṇi.

ŚĀTAKARṆI II. Son of King Pūrṇotsaṅga. He ruled the country for fiftysix years. (Matsya Purāṇa).

ŚATĀKṢĪ. Another form of Devī. (For details see under Durgama).

ŚATAKUMBHĀ. A sacred river, considered to be the source of agni. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

ŚATALOCANA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

ŚATAMUKHA I. (ŚATAMUKHA RĀVAṆA). Father of Indumukhī, the wife of Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa. Śatamukha had defeated Pātāla Rāvaṇa in battle. He gave the eternal weapon called Kaṭhorakuṭhāra as dowry for his daughter's wedding. (See under Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa).

ŚATAMUKHA II. An asura, a great devotee of Śiva. He did very intense tapas for hundred years making offerings of his flesh in the fire. Śiva, who was pleased with his tapas, granted him many boons. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

ŚATĀNANDA I. Priest of King Janaka. He was the son of Gautama by Ahalyā. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278). Śatānanda felt elated that Śrī Rāma restored to Ahalyā her old sanctity and also that his father Gautama received back his mother and lived with her. It was Śatānanda, who acted as high-priest at the wedding of Sītā with Rāma.

ŚATĀNANDA II. A maharṣi, who possessed divine gifts. He once paid a visit to Bhīṣma. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 8).

ŚATĀNANDĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

ŚATĀNĪKA I. A King born in the dynasty of Yayāti. He was the son of Bṛhadratha and father of Durdama. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚATĀNĪKA II. Son of Nakula. The Mahābhārata contains the following information about this Śatānīka.

(i) To Nakula was born of Draupadī a son called Śatānīka. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 123).

(ii) This Śatānīka was born from an aspect of Viśvadeva. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 127).

(iii) Once upon a time there was in the Kaurava dynasty a Rājarṣi called Śatānīka and it was to perpetuate that name that Nakula named his son 'Śatānīka'. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 84).

(iv) This Śatānīka defeated in the great war Jayatsena, Duṣkarṇa and Citrasena. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 42; Chapter 79, Verse 46 and Droṇa Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 12).

(v) Śatānīka fought with Vṛṣasena, Śrutakarmā, the son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Aśvatthāmā. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 7; Karṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13 and Chapter 85, Verse 14).

(vi) He killed Bhūtakarman and the prince of Kaliṅga in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 23; Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 21).

(vii) He died in the great war hit by the arrow of Aśvatthāmā. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 57).

(viii) He is referred to by the following names also in the Mahābhārata, viz. Nakulaputra, Nakuladāyāda, Nākuli.

ŚATĀNĪKA III. A prince born as the son of Janamejaya (Parīkṣit's son) of his wife called Vapuṣṭamā. He married the princess of Videha and to the couple was born a son called Aśvameghadatta. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 88). He had also another son named Sahasrānīka. (Kathāsaritsāgara). (See under Udayana).

ŚATĀNĪKA IV. A well-known Rājarṣi born in the Kuru dynasty. It was to perpetuate his name that Nakula called his son Śatānīka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 84).

ŚATĀNĪKA V. A brother of Virāṭa, the King of Matsya. He was called Sūryadatta too. Further he was the commander-in-chief of the army of Virāṭa. When Virāṭa's cows were lifted by the Kauravas, Śatānīka went to war against them along with the Trigartas, who wore golden helmets on their heads. (Virāta Parva, Chapter 31). He was an ally of the Pāṇḍavas in the great war. He was wounded in the war by Bhīṣma and killed by Śalya. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 30; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 27).

ŚATĀNĪKA VI. Younger brother of the Virāṭa king. He was killed by Droṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 18).

ŚATAPATRAVANA. A forest on the western side of Dvārakā. The mountain called Sukakṣa is at the centre of the forest. (Sabhā Parva, Southern text, Chapter 33)

ŚATAPARVĀ. Wife of Śukrācārya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 13).

ŚATARATHA. A King in ancient India. He lives in the court of Yama and worships him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 26).

ŚATARUDRA. The story of Śatarudra was imparted to Śrī Rāma by Vyāsa to show that all life is mere illusion or different complexes of the mind. Śatarudropākhyāna is the story of a contemplative sannyāsin. Whatever subject or object he conceived in his mind used to assume its form as water changes into waves, and it was a boon or great asset, which his heart had acquired as a result of its purity. He confined himself to his āśrama and thought about things one after the other.

To start with, Śatarudra thought to himself that he was a 'dream person' called Jīvaṭa. While picnicking in the streets of a 'dream-built city' the 'dream person' overcome by the effect of liquor remained in an unconscious state for some time. He also felt immediately to be a brahmin learned in the Vedas. 'Jīvaṭa', who transformed himself thus into a brahmin slept during day-time overcome by exhaustion on account of work. At once he dreamt himself to have been transformed into a feudal lord or tributary King, who, after taking his meals went to sleep when he dreamt that he was changed into a great King. The King, who ruled the country peacefully changed himself one day in dream into a celestial woman. The next dream was that the woman, while in deep sleep after a hilarious sexual act, was turned into a she-deer. The she-deer, in dream turned into a creeper, and it duly bore leaves, flowers and fruits. The creeper felt that it entwined and climbed some trees. Then he (Jīvaṭa) went into deep sleep, absolutely unaware of himself, for some time. Then he dreamt himself to have changed into a beetle. The beetle felt attracted towards a lotus flower and got captured therein. An elephant from the forest nearby entered the 'lotus pond', plucked and tore into pieces the lotus flower. As the beetle had got fixed in its mind and imagination the picture of the elephant it became a tusker elephant after its death. While roaming about in the forest the elephant fell into a deep pit and the King's men captured and listed it in the army. A number of beetles gathered round the elephant to suck its ichor (madajala). Because it thought about the beetles the elephant, after its death in battle, again became a beetle, which imagined about the swan in the lotus-pond. The beetle one day got captured in the lotus-flower and became a swan on being killed by the elephant. Thus the beetle, after taking many births and forms, became ultimately Brahmā's vehicle, the swan. While the swan once moved about the surrounding places of mount Kailāsa it saw Rudra and imagining itself to be Rudra (Rudroham—I am Rudra) attained Rudrahood. While living happily with all the paraphernalia of Rudra he remembered his past lives, and wondering about the many continuous dreams of his, in solitude he thought like this :—"The power of Māyā (illusion) which rules over everything in the world is really wonderful. How curious and peculiar is the cunningness or trickeries of Māyā in creating, like mirage, the illusion that things, which did not really exist, existed. Mistaking Māyā or mirage as the truth and the fact, I roamed about in many a material desert. In one form of life I was born as Jīvaṭa, in another, King: in yet another, swan etc. and now I have attained Rudra-hood. Hundred Caturyugas and thousand years have passed in this 'show" Now, I will return and personally see all past episodes and I shall identify them all with myself after bestowing knowledge on them.

Having made up his mind like this, Rudra descended to the state of the old Sannyāsin. He infused life and vitality into the dead body of the sannyāsin that was there. The Sannyāsin remembered his old illusions and hallucinations. He had attained Rudrahood after crossing various stages from being Jīvaṭa. Then both of them together came to the Jīvaṭa stage,awoke the 'dream-person' by giving him mind and vitality. Afterwards the three of them, who assumed single form by the composition of different personalities, attained various stages like brahmin etc., awoke them too and added them to themselves (the three). Thus there came about to be hundred persons formed from aspects or fractions of Rudra, and at the instance of the real Rudra they returned to their homes and lived there happily with their sons, relations etc. Those hundred persons are the Śatarudras. (Jñānavāsiṣṭha, Śatarudropākhyāna). In Verse 13, Chapter 150 of Anuśāsana Parva, Mahābhārata also is found references to the Śatarudras.

ŚATARŪPĀ. Wife of Svāyambhuva Manu, who took his sister Śatarūpā herself as his wife. The couple had two sons called Priyavrata aud Uttānapāda and two daughters Prasūti and Ākūti. Prasūti was married to Dakṣaprajāpati and Ākūti to Ruciprajāpati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 7).

ŚATASAHASRA. A well-known sacred place in Kurukṣetra. Bathing here is productive of the same result as gifting away thousand cows. This place is thousand times more beneficial than other places. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83).

ŚATASĀHASRAKA. A holy place at Rāmatīrtha on the river Gomatī. He who bathes here and takes food as per śāstraic injunctions will get results equal to those of giving in gift a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 74), ŚATAŚĪRṢĀ. Wife of Vāsuki, King of the nāgas (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 17).

ŚATAŚṚṄGA I. A muni, who lived on Mount Śataśṛṅga. It was this muni, who cursed Pāṇḍu that he would die on his coming into physical contact with his wife. (For details see under Pāṇḍu and Mahābhārata).

ŚATAŚṚṄGA II. A Rākṣasa, who had three sons called Saṁyama, Viyama and Suyama. (Śānti Parva, Southern text, Chapter 98).

ŚATAŚṚṄGA III. A mountain where Pāṇḍu once practised austerities. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 50). The Pāṇḍavas were born here and they were named in the presence of Munis who lived there. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122). Also, here it was that Pāṇḍu died. Once in the course of a dream-trip of Arjuna in the company of Kṛṣṇa to Kailāsa they saw Śataśṛṅga also. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 32).

ŚĀTĀTAPA. Author of a Smṛti in prose and poetry in six chapters.

SĀTAVĀHANA. A King. Guṇāḍhya, author of Bṛhatkathā was a minister of this King. (See under Guṇāḍhya).

ŚATAVANI. A Rājarṣi. His son was known as Śātavaneya. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 59).

ŚATAYŪPA. A Kekaya Rājarṣi. He abdicated the throne in favour of his son and went to perform tapas in Kurukṣetra forest where he saw Dhṛtarāṣṭra and others and spoke about the rules to be observed in "forest life". (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 8). His grand-father's name was Sahasracitya (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 60).

ŚATĀYUS I. One of the six sons of Purūravas by Urvaśī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 24).

ŚATĀYUS II. A warrior, who fought on the Kaurava side against the Pāṇḍavas. He fought from the 'waist' position of the Vyūha made by Bhīṣma and courted death. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 22; Śalya Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 19).

ŚAṬHA. An asura, son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Danu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 29).

SATĪ. A birth of Devī Pārvatī. (For more details see under Pārvatī).

SATKṚTI. A king of the solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhāgavata Skandha 9, that he was the son of Jayatsena.

ŚATODARĪ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 10).

SATRĀJIT. A King of the Yādavas. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata Skandha 9, that he was the son of Nimna and the brother of Prasena. (To know the previous birth of Satrājit see under Satyabhāmā). Śrī Kṛṣṇa married Satyabhāmā the daughter of Satrājit. In connection with the jewel Syamantaka, Kṛtavarmā caused Satrājit to be murdered. (More details about Satrājit occur under the entries Prasena, Kṛtavarmā, (Para 2) and Satyabhāmā).

ŚATRUGHNA. A brother of Śrī Rāma. He and Lakṣmaṇa were the sons of Sumitrā, and Śrutakīrti was his wife. As ordered by Rāma he killed Lavaṇāsura, who lived in Madhu forest, and established there the city called Madhurāpurī. After the death of Śatrughna two sons of his lived in Madhurāpurī, and after the disappearance of the solar dynasty the city went to the Yadus. (For details see under Śrī Rāma and Hanūmān, Para 10).

ŚATRUJIT. A prince, the son of Dhruvasandhi by his second wife Līlāvatī. (See under Dhruvasandhi).

ŚATRUMARDANA. The third son of King Ṛtadhvaja by his wife Madālasā. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 23, Verse 26).

ŚATRUÑJAYA I. A Sauvīra prince, who followed Jayadratha with a flag. Arjuna killed him in a battle consequent to the Svayaṁvara of Draupadī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 27).

ŚATRUÑJAYA II. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. The following facts about him are gathered from the Mahābhārata.

(i) Duryodhana deputed him for the protection of Bhīṣma in the great war. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 8).

(ii) He attacked the five Kekaya kings. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 56).

(iii) Bhīma killed him. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 29).

ŚATRUÑJAYA III. A warrior and a brother of Karṇa who fought on the Kaurava side and got killed by Arjuna. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 31 Verse 62).

ŚATRUÑJAYA IV. Another warrior, who fought on the Kaurava side whom Abhimanyu killed. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 181).

ŚATRUÑJAYA V. A son of Drupada. In the great battle Aśvatthāmā killed him. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 56 Verse 151).

ŚATRUÑJAYA VI. A King of Sauvīra. Kaṇika, the son of Bharadvāja, taught him political science and all other cunning ways. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 140).

ŚATRUNTAPA. A King, who fought in Duryodhana's army. Arjuna killed him on the occasion when the Kauravas lifted Virāṭa's cows. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 11).

ŚATRUSAHA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīma killed him in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 9)

ŚATRUTAPANA. An asura, the son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Danu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 29).

SATVADANTA. A Yādava prince. This Satvadanta was one of the sons born to Vasudeva by his wife Bhadrā. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 96: 71).

SĀTVATA I. A King of the Yadu dynasty and son of Devakṣatra, Sātvata had seven sons called Bhaja, Bhaji, Divya, Vṛṣṇi, Devapṛṣṭha, Antaka and Mahābhoja. Sātvata was one of the Sātvatas and the men born in his dynasty are called Sātvatas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 30).

SĀTVATA II. Another name of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

SĀTVIKA. A brahmin, who was turned into a Rākṣasa due to a curse after he had entered heaven. His story has been told by sage Śaunaka to Bharata, brother of Śrī Rāma.

It was Bharata, who led the yājñic horse towards the north in connection with the Aśvamedha yajña performed by Śrī Rāma after he was crowned King. The horse, which started on its journey from Ayodhyā reached, after six months, Hemakūṭa on the limits of India. As soon as it got into a beautiful garden it was rendered stationary as though paralysed. All attempts to make the horse move failed. Śatrughna and some soldiers tried to lift the horse by its legs, to no purpose. Hanūmān bound its legs with his tail and pulled, again to no purpose, and surprised at this failure of his he spoke to Śatrughna and others thus. "It was only just now that I pulled out with my tail the Droṇa mountain so very easily; but this small horse does not stir at all. May be, it is all fate." Following Hanūmān's speech, Śatrughna asked Sumālī the explanation for this state of the matter, but the latter could not find one for it. Then it was decided to find out a maharṣi and ask him for the explanation. The soldiers accompanied by Bharata went in search of a maharṣi, reached Śaunaka's āśrama and submitted the case to him.

The maharṣi remained in meditation for some time and the condition of the horse became vivid in his mind. Then he spoke as follows:— "There was once a brahmin named Sātvika in Gauḍa (?) land on the banks of river Kāverī. Once he began performing tapas. He spent three days. drinking only water the first day, consuming air the next day and fasting completely the third day. He continued his tapas repeating the above course until one day he entered samādhi (expired). He got into a decorated plane sent from Devaloka, went to the peak of mount Meru and thence came to river Jambū, which flowed from the great Jambū tree on the mountain. There in Jambū were many maharṣis, who had acquired merit by bathing in the golden water of the river, enjoying all comforts in the company of apsarā women. Sātvika, one day, haughty with the thought that he was the master of the maharṣis, did something which quite displeased the latter, and they cursed him. When he prayed for absolution from the curse they told him thus: "When you paralyse the feet of Śrī Rāma's horse, you will happen to hear Rāma's story and then you will be redeemed from curse."

On Śaunaka informing them thus that it was the brahmin transformed into a Rākṣasa, who had paralysed the legs of the horse, Bharata returned to the horse and recited the story of Rāma and immediately an effulgent person came there in a plane and said, "Oh. intelligent King! I have now heard the story of Rāma and so have become pure; so, please let me go to heaven." After saying this he returned. Bharata and others were pleased to know that the visitor was Sātvika brahmin. The horse became free from its paralysed condition. The party resumed its journey. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātālakhaṇḍa, Chapters 47 and 48).

SATYA I. A hermit. Mention is made about this hermit who shone in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira, in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 10.

SATYA II. An Agni (fire). This Agni Satya was the son of the Agni Niścyavana. He was a worker of Kāladharma (The god of Death). He reduces the pain of living beings who are suffering. So this Agni Satya got the name Niṣkṛti also. This Agni brightens the houses and gardens where people stay. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 13, that this Agni had a son named Svana.

SATYA III. A warrior who served in the army of the King of Kaliṅga. This warrior fought against the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Bhārata. This warrior who stood as the wheel-guard of Śrutāyus the King of Kaliṅga, was killed by Bhīmasena in the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 77).

SATYA IV. A hermit in the country of Vidarbha. This hermit who was a brahmin was a believer in ahiṁsā also. Once he performed a sacrifice without any killing. His wife Puṣkaradhāriṇī helped him in the sacrifice. Dharmadeva came there in the form of an antelope to test the non-killing principle of Satya. The animal came near Satya and said : "I am a deva (god) belonging to the Śukra-clan. I dwell in this forest as an antelope, due to the curse of Dharmadeva. Kill me and complete this sacrifice."

Though Satya heard this, he did not wish to kill the animal. At last the antelope decided to go and walked eight steps and then returned. Due to the delusive arts of the antelope Satya saw there celestial maids and the aeroplanes of Gandharvas. The antelope said that if he was killed he would attain heaven. A desire arose in Satya for killing and forthwith he lost all the attainments he got by penance. (M.B. Śānti Parva. Chapter 272).

SATYA V. Another name of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 75).

SATYA VI. The son of Vitatya, born in the dynasty of the King Vītahavya. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 62, that this Satya had a son called Santa.

SATYĀ I. A wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Mention is made about this wife in Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38.

SATYĀ II. The wife of the Agni called Śaṁyu. So beautiful a woman as Satyā is said to have not existed in any of the three worlds. Bharadvāja was the son born to Śaṁyu by Satyā. Bharadvāja had three sisters. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 4).

SATYA (S). A group of Devas (gods). This group of devas lived in the third Manvantara. The name of the then Manu was Uttama and the King of the devas was the Indra Suśānti. There were then five Devagaṇas (groups of Gods) each consisting of twelve devas. Those gaṇas were Sudhāmās, Satyas, Japas, Pratardanas and Vaśavartis. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 1).

SATYABHĀMĀ. The wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Introduction. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa himself said about the previous birth of Satyabhāmā. There was an occasion for saying that.

Once Nārada came from the world of the gods to Dvārakā. He had brought with him some flowers of the Kalpaka tree. Nārada gave all those flowers to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa divided them among his wives, but he had forgotten Satyabhāmā. Being unable to subdue her sorrow and anger she got into her bedroom and wept and sighed and lay there. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to know of this. He took Satyabhāmā with him on the back of Garuḍa and went to the world of Gods. They reached there and asked Indra for some Kahlāra flowers. Indra refused to give. Garuḍa got ready to uproot the tree. Then Indra wielded his thunderbolt. To honour the weapon thunderbolt, Garuḍa left a feather of his there and returned to Dvārakā. Because of the hitting of the thunderbolt, the peacock, mongoose and jungle crow were born from Garuḍa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa who won the war, returned with Satyabhāmā mounted on Garuḍa, to Dvārakā. The Kalpaka tree brought from the world of gods, was planted in the garden in front of the palace of Satyabhāmā. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Kalpaka tree became her own, Satyabhāmā became proud. At that time Nārada came there. She asked Nārada what she should do so as to have Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Kalpaka tree with her in all births. Nārada said that, for that, she had only to do Tulāpuruṣadāna. She instantly placed Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Kalpaka tree in the balance and all the things placed in equal weight were given to Nārada himself. Nārada received them and went to the world of Gods. Satyabhāmā became overjoyed. She asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa, what good deeds she had done to earn so much happiness. Śrī Kṛṣṇa described the previous birth of Satyabhāmā. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 90).

2) Previous birth of Satyabhāmā. Towards the close of the Kṛtayuga, there was a Brahmin named Devaśarmā who was born of the clan of Agni in Māyāpurī. This Brahmin was well-versed in the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas. In the old age a daughter named Guṇavatī was born to him. He gave his daughter to his disciple Candraśarmā.

Once Devaśarmā and Candraśarmā went to the forest to bring Darbha (poa) and Samit (butea). While they were walking here and there in the Mango grove in the Himālayas a giant closed with them. Because of terror their bodies were stiffened and so they could not run. The fierce giant killed both of them. The escorts sent by Viṣṇu came and took both of them to Vaikuṇṭha. Guṇavatī cried aloud when she heard that her father and husband were killed by a giant. She lamented for a long while and then fainted and fell down. When she came to herself she began to cry again. At last she sold the furniture and conducted the funeral rites of her father and husband. After that she lived by manual labour. She observed fast and the vow of Kṛttikā and Ekādaśī.

Guṇavatī, who was weak and lean because of old age and fever once walked slowly to the river Ganges to bathe. When she got into the river she shivered because of cold. Then an aerial chariot came down from the sky. The messengers of Viṣṇu took her in the chariot, to Vaikuṇṭha. The celestial maids fanned her with the whisk of yak. After this Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Śrī Kṛṣṇa to destroy the wicked. Those who were the dependants of Viṣṇu in Vaikuṇṭha took birth in Dvārakā. Devaśarmā the father of Guṇavatī took birth as Satrājit. Candraśarmā became Akrūra. Guṇavatī became Satyabhāmā. Because of the goodness earned by the fast of Kṛttikā, she had become a beloved one of Viṣṇu. Because she made a grove of holy basil (tulasī) at the gate of Viṣṇu in the previous birth the Kalpaka tree came to her garden in this birth. Because she lighted lamps in Kārttika month Mahālakṣmī lives permanently in her house. Because she did fast and vow in Kārttika imagining Viṣṇu as her husband, she became the wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa in this birth. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 91).

3) Family life. See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 16 and Naraka Para 4).

4) Other details.

(i) The sons Bhīma and others were born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Satyabhāmā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 276).

(ii) Narakāsura stole the ear-rings of Aditi, the mother of the devas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā went to fight with Narakāsura. They killed him and recovered the ear-rings and gave them back to Aditi. At that time Aditi blessed Satyabhāmā thus : "Till Śrī Kṛṣṇa forsakes his body you will not be affected by old age. Moreover you will always have a divine fragrance and good qualities." (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

(iii) Satyabhāmā had a beautiful white palace in Dvārakā. The steps of the palace were paved with jewels. To those who pass over its steps, hot season will appear to be cold. (M.B. Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38),

(iv) When the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Kāmyaka forest at the time of their forest lifc, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā paid them a visit. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 11).

(v) At this time Satyabhāmā asked Pāñcālī about the means and ways to bring the husband over to her side. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 238, Verse 4).

(vi) When Arjuna came to Dvārakā, after Śrī Kṛṣṇa had forsaken his body, Satyabhāmā lamented with the other queens for a long time. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 13).

(vii) After this Satyabhāmā went to the forest for penance. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 74).

SATYADEVA. A prominent warrior of the army of Kaliṅga. He took part in the Bhārata-battle and served as the guard of the wheel of King Śrutāyus of Kaliṅga and was killed by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 74).

SATYADEVĪ. The daughter of King Devaka. This Satyadevī was one of the seven wives of Vasudeva. (Matsya Purāṇa, 44-73).

SATYADHARMĀ I. A King of the lunar dynasty. He was a helper of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 25).

SATYADHARMĀ II. A brother of Suśarmā, the King of Trigarta. Arjuna killed him in the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 36).

SATYADHṚTI I. A son of Śatānanda. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278, that this Satyadhṛti had two children called Kṛpa and Kṛpī.

SATYADHṚTI II. A warrior who fought in chariot on the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the Battle of Bhārata. The following information is given about him in Mahābhārata.

(i) Bhīṣma considered Satyadhṛti as one of the prominent fighters in chariots. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 18).

(ii) This Satyadhṛti had been present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 10).

(iii) This Satyadhṛti who was the son of Sucitra continued helping Ghaṭotkaca the son of Hiḍimbī, during the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 13).

(iv) Satyadhṛti was an expert in the wielding of all weapons, especially in archery. He was a scholar in the Vedas and Vedāṅgas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23).

(v) In the Bhārata-battle he was killed by Droṇācārya. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 34).

SATYADHṚTI III. The son of the King Kṣemaka. In the Bhārata-battle he fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 58).

SATYAHITA. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was son of Ṛṣabha and the father of Sudhanvā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SATYAJIT I. A King belonging to the dynasty of Yayāti. He was the son of Sunīta and the father of Kṣema. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SATYAJIT II. A brother of Drupada, the King of Pāñcāla. He appears in the story of Mahābhārata for the first time at the battle between Drupada and Arjuna. When the education of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas was over, Droṇa asked his pupils to bring Drupada tied as teacher's gift. An attempt was made to bring Drupada before Droṇa, in which attempt Drupada and Arjuna confronted each other. In this fight it was Satyajit who stood as the right hand of his brother Drupada. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 42). Arjuna defeated this Satyajit. Immediately Satyajit ran away from the battle-field.

After the marriage of Pāñcālī, Pāṇḍavas and Drupada became relatives. With this Satyajit also came to be on good relation with the Pāṇḍavas. In the battle of Bhārata this Satyajit was the bodyguard of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17). In the battle which followed Droṇa killed Satyajit. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 4).

SATYAKA. A king of the Yādava clan. He was the father of Sātyaki. Satyaka also took part in the festivals conducted on the Raivata-mountain by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the others. It is stated in the aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 6, that Satyaka conducted offerings to the manes in respect of Abhimanyu.

SATYAKĀMA (SATYAKĀMA JĀBĀLA). A noble hermit. There is a story as given below, in the Chāndogyopaniṣad about the greatness of this hermit.

As his father died in his boyhood, Satyakāma was brought up by his mother Jābālī. Whan it was time to begin education, the boy told his mother, "Mother, I would like to be educated under a teacher, in the Vedas. But I don't know what clan I belong to. What answer shall I give, when the teacher asks me about my clan ?" His mother Jābālī replied. "I also do not know much about the clan of your father who married me when I was a girl. From that day onwards I was engaged in house-keeping. I did not ask your father about the clan. In my younger days I gave birth to you. Shortly after that your father died. Tell your teacher that you are Satyakāma the son of Jābālī."

Having heard this Satyakāma went in search of a teacher. At last he reached the hermitage of the sage Gautama and told him every thing. The hermit was attracted by his truthfulness and behaviour. Believing that Satyakāma was a Brahmin boy, Gautama accepted him as a disciple. The hermit entrusted the boy with four hundred lean cows to look after. The boy accepted the work, and said to the hermit. "When this becomes a group of thousand fat cows, I will bring them back." He lived in the forest looking after the cows. The Devas sympathised with him. Vāyu (wind), the Sun, Agni (fire) and Prāṇa together gave him divine knowledge and wisdom. After this Satyakāma returned to the hermit Gautama with thousand fat cows. Seeing the boy whose face shone with the light of God, the hermit was amazed. "Who gave you divine knowledge ?" asked the hermit. Satyakāma told the hermit all that took place. Fully satisfied with the boy, Gautama imparted to him knowledge about the universal Soul (Paramātmā) and Satyakāma became a noble hermit.

Satyakāma got several disciples of whom Upakosala was prominent. He approached Satyakāma as a student. For twelve years he served his teacher and kept up the fire in the firepit for burnt offering, without being extinguished throughout the twelve years, and worshipped the fire god. Yet the teacher did not impart knowledge to him. The teacher's wife recommended to her husband that Upakosala should be given learning. But the teacher was silent. Upakosala took a vow and fast before the burnt-offering fire pit. Agni Deva felt pity for him and informed him that God is all-pervading and that his teacher would show him the way to God. When he came to the teacher, his face was seen shining. Satyakāma asked Upakosala for the reason. Upakosala told the teacher what the fire god had told him. Immediately Satyakāma taught his disciple the path of yoga (union) by knowledge of the Sāṅkhyas.

SATYAKARMĀ I. A king of the family of Bharata. He was the son of Dhṛtavrata and the father of Anuratha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SATYAKARMĀ II. The brother of Suśarmā the king of Trigarta. Though he took a vow in the Bhārata battle that he would kill Arjuna, what happened was that he was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 17; Śalya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 39).

SATYAKETU I. A king of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Dharmaketu and the father of Dhṛṣṭaketu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SATYAKETU II. A king of Pāñcāla. Mention is made in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Śloka 73, of a Pāñcāla King Satyaketu who fought with Paraśurāma.

SATYAKETU III. A king belonging to the Pūru dynasty. This Satyaketu was the son of King Sukumāra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SĀTYAKI (YUYUDHĀNA). A Yādava, who was a warrior of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty and a friend of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Brahmā - Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas - Āyus - Nahuṣa - Yayāti - Yadu - Sahasrajit - Śatajit -Hehaya - Dharma - Kuni - Bhadrasena - Dhanaka - Kṛtavīrya - Kārttavīryārjuna - Madhu - Vṛṣṇi - Yudhājit - Śini - Satyaka - Sātyaki.

Śini was the younger son of Yudhājit. Sātyaki alias Yuyudhāna, a companion of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and a great friend of the Pāṇḍavas, was Śini's grandson.

2) His relation to other prominent Yādavas. The dynasty of Anamitra, first son of Yudhājit, became famous through Prasena, Satrājit, Śvaphalka and Akrūra. Of the four sons of Andhaka, predecessor of Kṛṣṇa, Kukura and Bhajamāna deserve special mention. Āhuka, in the dynasty of Kukura had two sons named Devaka and Ugrasena. Devakī, daughter of Devaka, became wife of Vasudeva and mother of Kṛṣṇa. Kaṁsa was the son of Ugrasena. Śūra, seventh in the line of Bhajamāna, son of Andhaka had twelve children. His first son Vasudeva was Kṛṣṇa's father. Śrutakīrti, Śrutaśravas, Śrutadevī and Rājādhidevī the four daughters of Śūra were married respectively by Dhṛṣṭaketu, king of Kekaya, Damaghoṣa, king of Cedi, Vṛddhaśarman, king of Karūṣa and Jayasena, king of Avantī. Dhṛṣṭaketu was a great ally of the Pāṇḍavas. Śiśupāla was the son of Damaghoṣa, and Dantavaktra the son of Vṛddhaśarman. Śiśupāla and Dantavaktra, the third human incarnation of Jaya and Vijaya were war-crazy and haughty persons. Vinda and Anuvinda, sons of Jayasena, were great friends of the Pāṇḍavas. As Kuntī, daughter of Śūra became the adopted daughter of Ugrasena, she became also the niece of Vasudeva and Kṛṣṇa's father's sister. Kuntī married Pāṇḍu and she delivered four sons, Karṇa, Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīmasena and Arjuna.

3) Other information I. The following facts about Sātyaki are extracted from the Mahābhārata.

SATYATAPAS (UTATHYA) I. A brahmin boy who was changed into a cobra by the curse of a saint called Godila. The original name of this youth was Utathya. Later he came to be known as Satyatapas. The story of this Śatyatapas is given in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 3, as follows:-

In days of old, there was a Brahmin named Devadatta in Kosala. His wife was called Rohiṇī. Though much time elapsed no child was born to them. At last Devadatta performed the sacrifice called Putrakāmeṣṭi, on the banks of the river Tamasā. Several saintly persons took part in the sacrifice. Suhotra was detailed as Brahmā, Yājñavalkya as officiating priest, Bṛhaspati as sacrificer, Paila to recite Vedas and Godila to sing Sāman hymns. The singing of Godila, an expert singer, caused horripilation to everybody in the sacrificial hall. But in the middle of singing he had to take breath, and there occurred a solecism in his voice. Devadatta did not like it. He warned Godila, who instantly became angry and said to Devadatta. "Since you called me Cobra, the son born to you will become a cobra."

Devadatta became miserable and begged Godila by holding his feet to pardon him. He gave liberation from the curse that his son would be a cobra and said that he would become a sage.

The wife of Devadatta became pregnant and gave birth to a son. He was named Utathya. In the eighth year, the ceremony of investiture with the Brahmā string was performed and the boy commenced education. The teacher began to teach the Vedas. From that day onwards the boy became self-conceited. All the attempts made by the teacher to change his behaviour were futile. His father tried the four expedients in vain. Thus twelve years elapsed. The boy did not even learn the evening prayer. Everybody thought that he was a cobra. All scoffed at him. His own people disliked him; with this, self-renunciation took root in his boyish mind and he left his home and went away. He reached the banks of the Ganges and made a hut there and lived there observing rigorous celibacy, and vow of truth. Thus the boy-hermit began severe penance.

He had learned no rites or rituals according to the Vedas. He would rise early in the morning, and after cleaning the teeth he would take a dip in the Gangetic waters, without any spells or actions and return to the hut. He would eat anything that came by. He would cause no harm to anybody, though he had no power to do good to anybody. Everybody in the neighbourhood began to realize that he was a boy who would on no account utter falsehood. So all began to call him Satyatapas. Satyatapas had no peace of mind. Life seemed to be a burden to him. He became thoughtful day and night. Thus he spent fourteen years there. People firmly believed in his truthfulness. So they named him Satyavrata. Once a forester came near his hut. He sent an arrow at a hog, which ran into the hermitage with the arrow sticking on its body. Blood was oozing from its wound. The jungle-dweller also came into the hut following the hog. Seeing Satyavrata the man asked "Where is the hog that I had shot?" Satyavrata who knew that killing animals was a sin, kept silence to save the beast. Devī was pleased at the moral courage and truthfulness of Satyavrata. It is said that the moment the hog got into the hermitage, the Sārasvata syllable 'Ai' arose from the tongue of Satyavrata. The moment he had pronounced the rootsound of Sarasvatī, 'Ai', by the grace of Devī, he became a poet like Vālmīki. Looking at the forester Satyavrata said :

"Yāḥ paśyati na sa brūte
Yo brūte sa na paśyati /
Aho ! vyādha, svakāryārthin
Kam pṛcchasi punaḥ punaḥ //

"He who sees does not speak. He who speaks, does not see. Selfish hunter, whom do you ask again and again?" When the forester heard these words of Satyavrata, the bow and arrow fell from his hands. With self-renunciation he went away from the hermitage. The fame of the great poet Satyavrata spread everywhere. His father also heard about this from others. He came to the bank of the Ganges and took his son home. Even today Brahmins sing about the fame of that hermit on the New moon days.

SATYATAPAS II. A hermit. Once he cursed a celestial maid who had tried to hinder his penance, to become a phoenix tree. Later this hermit liberated her from the curse. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa, Chapter 178).

SATYAVĀN II. See under Ṛtambhara.

SATYAVĀN III. One of the commanders of the army of the Kauravas. Mention is made about this commander in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 30.

SATYAVĀK I. A son of Cākṣuṣa Manu. Ten sons including Satyavāk, were born to Cākṣuṣa Manu by his wife Naḍvalā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

SATYAVĀK II. A Deva Gandharva. This Gandharva was the son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Muni. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 43).

SATYAVARMĀ. A brother of Suśarmā the King of Trigarta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 17).

SATYAVATĪ I. The mother of Vyāsa.

1) A short history. Satyavatī was the daughter of the celestial maid Adrikā. Because of a curse she lived as a fish in the river Ganges. Once the semen of King Uparicaravasu happened to fall in the Ganges and this fish swallowed it in consequence of which it became pregnant. A fisherman caught this fish and cut it. He got two human babies, male and female from the stomach of the fish. The fisherman gave the two infants to the King who took the male child. This child later became the Matsya King. The female child had the smell of fish. The King called her Matsya-Gandhī (She who has the smell of fish) and gave her back to the fisherman, who took the child to his hut and brought her up as his daughter. As the child was dark in complexion the fisherman called her Kālī. Thus the girl was known by two names Kālī and Matsyagandhī. Later she got the name Satyavatī also.

The fisherman was engaged in the work of ferrying people across the river. Matsyagandhī helped her father in this work. She became a full-bloomed young woman. One day the hermit Parāśara came by that way and when he saw Matsyagandhī, he fell in love with her. She ferried the hermit across the river. In the middle of the river Parāśara created an artificial fog inside which Parāśara took Matsyagandhī as his wife. From that moment Matsyagandhī became Kastūrīgandhī (she who has the smell of Kastūrī (musk). Kālī became pregnant and delivered instantly. Parāśara left the place after having blessed her that she would not lose her virginity.

The son born to Kālī, immediately grew up to be a youth. After promising his mother that he would come to her when she thought of him, the youth went to the forest for penance. The name of the son was Kṛṣṇa. This Kṛṣṇa later became famous by the name Vyāsa. Satyavatī again engaged herself in helping her father.

One day Śantanu, a King of the lunar dynasty came to the forest for hunting. The fragrance of musk emanating from the body of Kastūrīgandhī spread throughout the whole forest. The King walked on through the forest tracing the origin of the smell of musk and reached the fisherman's hut. The King fell in love with Satyavatī. The King had a son named Bhīṣma by his first wife Gaṅgā. Bhīṣma made it easy for the King to marry Satyavatī. Two sons Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya were born to Śantanu by his wife Satyavatī. Citrāṅgada was killed in his boyhood. Vicitravīrya became a youth and married Ambikā and Ambālikā the daughters of the King of Kāśī. Vicitravīrya met with untimely death before a child was born to him. When Satyavatī saw that the family was about to become extinct, she thought of her son Vyāsa, who instantly arrived at the palace. From Vyāsa, Ambālikā got the son Pāṇḍu and Ambikā, the son Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Both the sons Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu got married. Pāṇḍu died. The death of her son struck heavily at the heart of Satyavatī. She did not wish to live much longer after this. She mentioned about the fearful things yet to happen. Then taking her daughters-in-law Ambikā and Ambālikā with her, Satyavatī went to the forest to do penance and finally attained heaven. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 127). (For further details see under Adrikā, Vyāsa and Śantanu).

2) Names. Dāśeyī, Gandhakālī, Gandhavatī, Kālī Satyā, Vāsavī, Yojanagandhā and such other words are used in the Mahābhārata as the synonyms of Satyavatī.

SATYAVATĪ II. The sister of Viśvāmitra. (See under Jamadagni; Para 2).

SATYAVATĪ III. A princess of the country of Kekaya. She was the wife of Triśaṅku and the mother of Hariścandra. (Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 12).

SATYAVATĪ IV. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 15, that one Satyavatī was the wife of Nārada.

SATYAVRATA I. Another name of Triśaṅku. (See under Triśaṅku).

SATYAVRATA II. The Brahmin boy Satyatapas. (See under Satyatapas).

SATYAVRATA III. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is seen that he was known by other names also such as Satyasena, Satyasandha, Sandha etc. (See under Satyasandha).

SATYAVRATA IV. Brother of Suśarmā, the King of Trigarta. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, that this cursed warrior took in vain a vow in the battle of Bhārata that he would kill Arjuna.

SATYAYUGA. Another name of Kṛtayuga. (See under Kṛtayuga).

SATYĀYUS. One of the six sons born to Purūravas by Urvaśī. The six sons were Āyus, Śrutāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SATYEṢU I. Brother of Suśarmā the King of Trigarta. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, and Śalya Parva, Chapter 27, that this Satyeṣu was killed by Arjuna in the Bhārata-battle.

SATYEṢU II. A Rākṣasa (giant). Mention is made about this giant who had ruled over the world in ancient days and had to go, leaving this world due to fate, in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 51.

SATYEYU. A King born in the dynasty of King Pūru. This Satyeyu was one of the ten sons born to Raudrāśva by the celestial maid Ghṛtācī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

According to the statement that occurs in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, the father of Satyeyu was Raudrāśva and mother, Miśrakeśī. The son Satyeyu was born to Raudrāśva by the celestial maid Miśrakeśī.

SAUBALA. A Vaiśya. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 2, that King Dhṛtarāṣṭra had two wives, one a Kṣatriya woman, named Gāndhārī, the daughter of the King of Gāndhāra and the other a Vaiśya woman named Saubalī, the daughter of Saubala.

SAUBHA. The aerial chariot or Vimāna of the King of Sālva. This was also called Saubhanagara. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Sālva, this Vimāna was smashed by the power of his weapon, the Cakra (Discus). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 33).

SAUBHADRATĪRTHA. A holy place on the coast of the southern sea. (For further details see under Padmatīrtha and Vargā).

SAUBHĀGYAGAURĪ. A particular kind of image of Devī Pārvatī. When the image of this goddess Pārvatī is fixed and consecrated as having the posture with one of the left hands touching the head and shoulder and the other hand holding a mirror, one of the right hands holding fruit and the other one being held high, it is called Saubhāgyagaurī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

SAUBHĀGYASUNDARĪ. A feminine form of Nārada. (See under Tāladhvaja I).

SAUBHAPATI. The King Sālva. As he had been in possession of an aerial chariot called Saubha, he is said to have got this name.

SAUBHARA. A fire. This agni (fire) was born from a portion of Varcas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 6).

SAUBHARI I. A hermit who had performed penance, sitting on the banks of the river Kālindī. (For detailed story see under Garuḍa, para 11).

SAUBHARI II. A hermit who had put up his hermitage on the Vindhya. At the time of the horse-sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira, Arjuna called on this hermit Saubhari. On that occasion the hermit told Arjuna about the previous history of Caṇḍī, who had been cursed by the hermit Uddālaka. It is mentioned in Jaimini Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 96, that Arjuna later redeemed Caṇḍī from the curse.

SAUBHARI III. A hermit famous in the Purāṇas. A Purāṇic story about this hermit's marrying the fifty daughters of Māndhātā is given below.

Saubhari saw two fishes engaged in coition, while he was doing penance on the banks of the Yamunā. This sight aroused matrimonial thoughts in the hermit's mind. He instantly approached Māndhātā and informed him of his desire to marry a princess.

Māndhātā did not like to give his daughter in marriage to the old hermit. Concealing his thought, he told the hermit as follows:— "Out of my fifty daughters, she who wishes to be your wife, shall be given to you." Saubhari, who had already read the thought of Māndhātā entered the harem in the shape of a handsome fine youth, and all the fifty damsels liked him. Thus Saubhari married all of them, and begot hundred sons of each of them.

This matrimonial life lasted for some time. At last the hermit grew weary of this life. Discarding everything, Saubhari went to the forest. His wives, who also had become disinterested in worldly enjoyment, followed him. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 4, 2, 3; Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa 262; Garuḍa Purāṇa, 1, 138).

SAUDĀSA. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was known by the name Kalmāṣapāda also. (For details see under Kalmāṣapāda).

SAUGANDHIKA. A flower-garden of Kubera. It is assumed that Vāyu (the wind-god) carried fragrance from this garden and remained in the palace of Kubera, praising him. This garden was full of sweet-scented lotus (Saugandhika-flower). (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter, 10).

SAUGANDHIKAVANA. A holy place. It is assumed, that the gods such as Brahmā and others, hermits, Siddhas, Cāraṇas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras, Big Nāgas, and so on dwell in this place. All the sins of a man are washed away, the moment he visits this holy place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 4).

SAUHṚDA. An ancient country in South India, famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 59).

SAUMADATTI. Bhūriśravas the son of Somadatta. (See under Bhūriśravas).

SAUMANASA I. One of the eight elephants supporting the globe. (See under Aṣṭadiggajas).

SAUMANASA II. The peak of a mountain. It was on this golden peak, with a girth of one yojana and an elevation of ten yojanas, that Bhagavān Viṣṇu placed the first of his three steps during the incarnation as Vāmana, the second step being on the peak of Meru and the third on the head of Mahābali.

"There is a golden peak called Saumanasa, with girth of one yojana and a height of ten yojanas. It is said that in days of yore Mahāviṣṇu placed the first of his three steps on this peak the second being on the peak of Meru." Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. Kiṣkindhā kāṇḍa, Sarga 40).

SAUMYĀKṢADVĪPA. An island famous in the Purāṇas (Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

ŚAUNAKA I.

1) General. A renowned ācārya. He is believed to be the author of the famous works — "Ṛgveda Anukramaṇī", "Āraṇyakam", "Ṛkprātiśākhya", etc.

The famous Āśvalāyanācārya was Śaunaka's disciple. Ācāryas like Kātyāyana, Patañjali and Vyāsa belonged to his class. Śaunaka's real name was "Gṛtsamada". It was because he was the son of Śunaka that he got the name "Śaunaka".

2) Birth. Śaunahotra, the son of the sage Śunahotra, once performed a yāga. Indra attended that yāga. At that time Śaunahotra rescued Indra from an attack of the Asuras. Indra who was pleased at this, blessed Śaunahotra that he would be born in his next birth in the Bhṛgu family under the name "Śaunaka".

3) Genealogy In Vāyu Purāṇa his genealogy is given in two forms.

i) Ruru (Pramadvarā) - Śunaka - Śaunaka - Ugraśravas

ii) Dharmavṛddha — Śunahotra — Gṛtsamada — Śunaka — Śaunaka. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 92, 26).

4) Important works. Śaunaka is believed to be the author of numerous works. The most important of them are given below:—

(1) Ṛkprātiśākhya (2) Ṛgvedacchandānukramaṇī (3) Ṛgvedarṣyanukramaṇī (4) Ṛgveda Anuvākānukramaṇī (5) Ṛgvedasūktānukramaṇī (6) Ṛgvedakathānukramaṇī (7) Ṛgvedapādavidhāna (8) Bṛhaddevatā (9) Śaunakasmṛti (10) Caraṇavyūha and (11) Ṛgvidhāna. Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 252 mentions that Śaunaka had written a work on the science of architecture.

5) Disciples. The chief disciple of Śaunaka was Āśvalāyana. Once Āśvalāyana wrote and dedicated to his Guru (master) two treatises entitled "Gṛhyasūtra" and "Śrautasūtra" to please him. After reading it, Śaunaka destroyed his own work on "Śrautaśāstra". Āśvalāyana wrote his treatise after having studied the ten works of Śaunaka on Ṛgveda.

Kātyāyana, the disciple of Āśvalāyana later received the ten books written by Śaunaka and the three books written by Āśvalāyana. Kātyāyana gave his disciple Patañjali, the two works, "Yajurvedakalpasūtra" and "Sāmaveda Upagrantha" which were written by himself. From this we may infer that the series of Śaunaka's disciples was as follows:— Śaunaka — Āśvalāyana — Kātyāyana — Patañjali — Vyāsa.

ŚAUNAKA II. A Brāhmaṇa who went to the forest with Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 2).

ŚAUṆḌIKAS. A Caste. Originally they were Kṣatriyas. Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 17, mentions that they were debased on account of a curse by a Brāhmaṇa.

SAUPTIKAPARVA. A Parva (section) in Mahābhārata (See under Bhārata).

SAURABHEYĪ. A celestial maid. For details see under Vargā.

SAURABHĪ. A cow which was the daughter of Surabhi. Having drunk too much of celestial honey (amṛta) which is the essence of the six tastes (ṣaḍrasas), Brahmā had to vomit, on which occasion, the cow Surabhi sprang up from his face. Her milk having accumulated in a low place the milk-sea was formed. The hermits known as the Phenapas live on the shore of the milk sea, the foam that settles on the shore being their food. Around them, there are four cows which protect the four directions. Saurabhī is one of them. She supports the east. Haṁsikā bears the south, Subhadrā the west and Dhenu the north. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102).

ŚAURI. Vasudeva, the son of Śūrasena.

SAUŚALYA. A country in ancient India very famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, stanza 40).

SAUŚRUTI. Brother of Suśarmā the King of Trigarta. Sauśruti who had fought on the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata, was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 3).

ŚAULKĀYANI. A sage who belonged to the series of Vyāsa's disciples.

SAUTI. A famous son of hermit Romaharṣaṇa. The real name of this son was Ugraśravas. This teacher is responsible for the arrangement of the Mahābhārata. in the form that we see today.

The story of Mahābhārata composed by Vyāsa and Vaiśampāyana contained only a graphic description of the battle of Bhārata. No vivid description of Śrī Kṛṣṇa born of the Yādava dynasty and of the Yādavas, was given in it. To remove this deficiency, Sauti added an appendix called 'Harivaṁśa' to Svargārohaṇa Parva in Mahābhārata. (For further details see under Bhārata I).

SAUVĪRA. An ancient country near the river Sindhu. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 133, that during the period of Mahābhārata, the King of this country was killed by Arjuna.

SAUVĪRĪ. The wife of King Manasyu, the son of Pravīra and the grandson of emperor Pūru. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 5).

SAVANA. I.

1) General. Son of Priyavrata who was the son of Svāyambhuva Manu, by his wife, Surūpā. Surūpā had ten sons including Savana. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

2) Birth of son. Savana married Suvedā, daughter of Sunābha; but he expired before children were born to him. According to the Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 72, seven children were born from the dead Savana. The story about it is as follows :—

Suvedā, heart-broken at the death of Savana, did not permit the dead body to be burnt, herself holding it in embrace. Then a celestial voice said to her : "Cry not. If you are really chaste and true, enter the funeral pyre along with your husband." To this Suvedā answered thus : "I cry because of grief that he died before making me the mother of a son." The celestial voice said to her again : "You enter the pyre without weeping. Your husband will have seven sons."

Sudevā now permitted her dead husband to be cremated and meditating upon her chastity she jumped into the funeral pyre. But within minutes Savana came alive out of the fire with his wife and rose to the sky with her. He stayed in the sky for another five days and on the sixth day had the sexual act again with her. His semen dropped on earth from the sky. The King then with his wife went to Brahmaloka.

Samādā, Nalinī, Puṣyati, Citrā, Viśālā, Haritā and Alinīlā, all of them wives of munis saw the semen in the sky and when it fell into the water they thought it was amṛta, which conferred eternal youth, and with the permission of their husbands swallowed it. As soon as they swallowed it their divine effulgence was diminished and their husbands, therefore, abandoned them. Those women delivered seven children, who cried fiercely and that sound filled the entire universe. Then Brahmā appeared and asked the children not to cry and also told them that they would come to be called Maruts. Brahmā himself called them Maruts. They were the Maruts of the first Svāyambhuva Manvantara.

SAVANA II. ·One of the seven sons of Bhṛgumuni, the other six being Cyavana, Vajraśīrṣa, Śuci, Aurva, Śukra and Vibhu. They are called Varuṇas also. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 129).

ŚĀVANTA. A King born in the dynasty of emperor Pṛthu. He was the son of Yuvanāśva and father of Bṛhadaśva. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

SAVARṆĀ. Wife of the muni called Prācīnabarhis. Savarṇā was the daughter of Samudra (ocean). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 14). The couple had ten sons called the Pracetases, and they were very efficient in Dhanurveda. All of them engaged themselves in observing the same dharma (duty) and did tapas for 10,000 years under the sea. (For details see under Prācīnabarhis).

SĀVARṆA I. A hermit. This hermit shone in the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15.)

SĀVARṆA II. (SĀVARṆI). A Manu. (For further details see under Manvantara).

SĀVARṆI I. The eighth Manu. (For further details see under Manvantara),

SĀVARṆI II. A hermit. This hermit shone in the council of Indra. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 10). This hermit Sāvarṇi did penance for six thousand years in Satyayuga. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 103).

SAVITĀ. One of the twelve sons of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife called Aditi. These sons are called Ādityas. So, Savitā also is one of the Dvādaśādityas. Viṣṇu, Śakra, Aryamā, Dhātā, Tvaṣṭā, Pūṣā, Vivasvān, Savitā, Mitra, Varuṇa, Aṁśu and Bhaga are the Dvādaśādityas.

Pṛśnī, wife of Savitā, gave birth to three daughters called Sāvitrī, Vyāhṛti and Trayī and three sons called Agnihotra, Paśusoma and Cāturmāsya the great sacrifices. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

SĀVITRA I. One of the eleven Rudras. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 20).

SĀVITRA II. One of the eight Vasus. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 16).

SĀVITRA III. A lofty peak of the mountain Sumeru. Jyotiṣka is another name of this peak, which is not approachable. It is adorned with precious stones and is glorified by all. Śiva and Pārvatī once sat on this peak and did penance. It was on this peak that Devī Gaṅgā did penance to Śiva, assuming a divine figure. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 5).

SĀVITRĪ I.

1) General information. The daughter of the Sun. This Sāvitrī is the elder sister of Tapatī. Brahmā married these sisters. It is stated in some Purāṇas that Sāvitrī, Gāyatrī, Sarasvatī all these are one and the same. But there is a story in Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa, Chapter 17, stating that Brahmā once went to Gāyatrī in the absence of Sāvitrī, who got angry at this and cursed all the Gods.

Once Brahmā went to Puṣkara to perform a sacrifice. Śiva, Viṣṇu and all the hermits came there. Everything was ready for the sacrifice according to convention. But Sāvitrī, who had been engaged in household duties had not yet arrived. So a priest was sent to bring her. Sāvitrī said to the priest, "I have not finished dressing. There are so many things to be done here. Moreover, Lakṣmī, Bhavānī, Gaṅgā, Svāhā, Indrāṇī, celestial women, wives of Ṛṣis (hermits), none of these have arrived yet. How can I enter the hall as the only woman ?" The priest returned and reported that it was not convenient for Sāvitrī to come just then, as she had so much work to do. Brahmā became angry and said to Indra. "Lord Indra, it is up to you to bring me a wife from wherever you like. But it must be done instantly." Hearing the order of Brahmā, Indra selected Gāyatrī who was a good-natured damsel of a cowherd's family, and brought her to the sacrificial dais. With the blessings of the hermits and gods, Brahmā held her hand and acknowledged her as his wife.

Sāvitrī dressed well, adorned herself with ornaments and reached the sacrificial hall. She saw the marrige scene and became furious. Everybody in the hall held their breath, thinking of the approaching danger. Trembling with anger Sāvitrī said "Lo; Brahmā, how is it that you have committed this sin? Have you not married me with fire as witness ? I am your wife. Are you not ashamed of this ?" The three godheads shivered with fear.Sāvitrī cursed everybody. The curse given to Brahmā was that no body should worship him on any other day except the month of Kārttika in the year. She cursed Indra that enemies would enter the world of gods and would make Indra their captive. Sāvitrī cried out that Viṣṇu would take the birth of man by the curse of Bhṛgu. She cursed Śiva that he would lose his manliness. She gave Agni the curse that he would eat anything and everything without the discrimination of purity or impurity. She cursed the Brahmins that they would, in future perform sacrifice merely with a view to obtain gifts and that they would be wandering about from temple to temple and from tīrtha to tīrtha merely for gain."

Uttering these words of curse, Sāvitrī left the sacrificial hall. Lakṣmī and some other goddesses followed her a little while. Then they begged for permission to return. Sāvitrī said to them, "Lakṣmī ! You are leaving me. Is it not so ? Right. Hereafter you shall be permanent nowhere. May you become the companion of the wicked, the wavering, the low-minded, the sinner, the cruel, the foolish etc. Indrāṇī also wants to return. Hear this: Indra will kill Vṛtra and incur the sin of Brahmahatyā and at that time Nahuṣa will capture heaven. Then Nahuṣa will abuse you."

Looking at the celestial women who were going to the sacrificial hall, Sāvitrī said; Look, Ye celestial women. None of you will give birth to child and you will not enjoy the pleasure of nurturing a child." Saying these words Sāvitrī left the hall. Not knowing what to do, all sat there. Instantly Gāyatrī rose up and looking at everybody, said as a remission of curses: "I shall remit all curses. Those who worship Brahmā, will be blessed with the pleasure of wife and children and wealth and they will unite with Brahmā. Even if Indra is taken captive, he will be made free by his son and will become the king of heaven again. Viṣṇu will rescue his wife and kill the enemy. The phallus will be worshipped in all the worlds. As Brahmins are the gods on earth the gift you take, will be considered your dues. Lakṣmī ! you need not worry. Everybody will worship you. He whom you favour will become a well-to-do person and he whom you forsake will become miserable. You Indrāṇī ! Because of Nahuṣa's arrogance Agastya will change him to a big python and he will fall to the earth. The celestial maids will have no desire for children. So childlessness will not make you miserable." By these words of blessings of Gāyatrī, everybody in the sacrificial hall was pacified.

2. Other details.

(1) Sāvitrī shines in the palace of Brahmā. (M B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 34).

(ii) Sāvitrī is the sovereign deity of the mantra Gāyatrī. This goddess Sāvitrī rose up from the sacrificial fire of King Aśvapati and gave him a boon, and accordingly a daughter named Sāvitrī was born to the King. This princess was Sāvitrī the wife of Satyavān. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 290).

(iii) Śiva, on starting for Tripuradahana (the burning of Tripuras), placed Sāvitrī as the bridles of his horses. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 75).

(iv) Once Jāpaka Brahmin worshipped Devī Sāvitrī, who appeared before him and gave him boons. As the Brahmin was engaged in deep meditation and prayer, he did not see the Devī when she appeared. It was due to this piety that the Brahmin was given boons. (M.B Śānti Parva, Chapter 199).

(v) Once Devī Sāvitrī appeared before Satya, a brahmin of Vidarbha. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 272, Verse 11).

(vi) Once Devī Sāvitrī praised the giving of rice as alms. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 8).

SĀVITRĪ II. A hand-maid of Devī Umā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 49).

SĀVITRĪ III. A Sāvitrī who was the wife of a king and a righteous woman is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 24. This Sāvitrī gave two ear-rings as alms and attained heaven.

SĀVITRĪ IV. The wife of Satyavān.

1) Birth. In the country of Madra, famous in the Purāṇas, there was a king named Aśvapati. His wife was Mālatī. Though the couple grew old they were childless. At last they worshipped Devī Sāvitrī. After vows and prayers for eighteen years the Devī appeared before them, and giving them the boon that a daughter would be born to them, she disappeared. The couple returned to the palace and Mālatī conceived and delivered a daughter whom they named Sāvitrī. (Skandha 9, Devī Bhāgavata; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 293).

2) Marriage. Sāvitrī grew up as though Lakṣmī had taken an incarnation and bloomed into a beautiful damsel. But nobody came forward to marry her. On a New moon day she bathed and purified herself and getting the blessings of Brahmins, came and bowed before her father. The King felt sorry as nobody had offered to marry her though she was in the full bloom of youth. He advised her to travel in the outside world and to select a husband by herself. According to the order of her father she took the aged ministers of the King and travelled through the forests in which hermits lived.

Once Nārada came to the palace and while he was talking with King Aśvapati, Sāvitrī and the aged ministers returned. She bowed before her father and Nārada. As soon as Nārada saw her, he asked with curiosity about her marriage. The father replied that he had sent her in search of a husband. Sāvitrī said "I have accepted the Prince Satyavān as my husband. He is the son of King Dyumatsena of Sālva. Dyumatsena became blind in his old age, and taking this opportunity his enemies captured his country. Dyumatsena with his wife and son went to the forest and lived there."

Nārada described the qualities of Satyavān. "Satyavān is as radiant as the sun, as intelligent as Bṛhaspati, as valiant as Indra and as patient as the Earth. Aśvapati was immensely pleased at hearing about the good qualities of Satyavān, and asked Nārada, if there was anything to say against him. Nārada said that he had nothing to say against Satyavān except that he would die "within one year from this date." (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 294).

The King felt miserable when he heard this. Sāvitrī said that she had accepted Satyavān as her husband and that nothing could make her waver from her decision even if he is not going to live more than a year. The King agreed to the wish of his daughter and preparations for the marriage were begun. The King went with Sāvitrī to the forest and saw Dyumatsena who gladly consented to the marriage. Aśvapati returned to the palace leaving Sāvitrī with Satyavān and his parents. As soon as Aśvapati had returned, Sāvitrī discarded her ornaments and assumed the dress suitable to life in the forest and lived with them.

3) The death of Satyavān. It was nearly a year and the day of death of Satyavān was fast approaching. There were only four days more. Sāvitrī had taken a vow lasting for three days. Dyumatsena dissuaded her from taking fast. She completed the fast. There was left only one night more. She kept awake for the whole night. Morning came. Though she ended her fast she had not taken any food. Dyumatsena wanted to know the reason. She humbly said that she would eat only after sun-set.

As usual Satyavān took his axe and started for the wood. Sāvitrī also followed him.

Satyavān:-"You have never accompanied me before. Moreover you are very weak on account of the fast. Then how can you come with me?"

Sāvitrī: "I am not at all weak by the fast and vow. I want to come with you. I pray, don't hinder me."

At last Satyavān consented after getting the permission of his parents. Both went to the forest to gather fruits and roots. They gathered fruits and roots. Then Satyavān began to cut wood. By that exertion Satyavān sweated all over. He was affected by headache. "Let me lie down !" He said. The axe fell from his hand. Sāvitrī caught her husband who was falling down and laid him on her lap. Sāvitrī saw a person clad in blood-coloured garments, with red eyes and a rope in hand, coming towards them. He came to the spot and stood there looking at the body of Satyavān. Realizing the person to be Kāla (Deathgod) Sāvitrī stood up instantly and bowed before him.

Sāvitrī:— "Who are you Lord. What may be your object in coming here?"

Yama:— Hei, Sāvitrī. As you are a hermitess of chastity I may converse with you. I am Yama. I am come to take away the life of your husband."

Sāvitrī:— "Lord, I have heard that your messengers come and take away the souls. How is it that you have come in person today?"

Yama:— This Satyavān is a righteous man who is an ocean of good qualities. Messengers are not sent, in the cases of persons like him."

Saying thus Yama cast his rope and caught the soul of Satyavān. Sāvitrī saw the body of her husband lying without life and soul. Sāvitrī followed Yama who had gone to the south with the soul of Satyavān.

Yama:— Child, you go back and conduct his funerals. You have followed your husband as far as you can.

Sāvitrī:— I am coming to the place where my husband is being taken. That is the duty of a wife. What impediment is there on my way to follow you, when I have the merits of vow, fast, devotion to my elders, love and regard for my husband and the good will of yourself, my Lord."

When Yama realized that it was difficult to send Sāvitrī back, he asked Sāvitrī to ask for any boon. Yama was prepared to give anything except the life of Satyavān. She requested for the recovery of sight by Dyumatsena. Yama granted it. Still Sāvitrī did not turn back. Yama asked her to pray for one more boon. She requested for the recovery of the lost kingdom of Dyumatsena. Yama sanctioned that request also. Still she followed Yama, who was ready to grant her a third boon. She requested: "My father may, please be given a hundred sons who would continue the family. Yama granted that too. But she did not turn back. Yama told her that she might ask for a fourth boon. She said: "I may be given a hundred sons born directly from Satyavān. Yama granted this fourth boon also. Then Sāvitrī asked Yama how the boon would be realized unless the life of Satyavān was given back to him. Yama was pleased with her at her love and devotion for her husband and returned the life of Satyavān. Yama blessed her that she and Satyavān would live for hundred years.

Yama disappeared. Sāvitrī returned and sat there taking the body of Satyavān on her lap. Satyavān came to life. Both of them rose up. Night came on. It was dark. They could not find the way. Satyavān wanted to reach their hermitage somehow. Sāvitrī took the axe and supporting her husband in the dim moon light, walked to the hermitage.

Dyumatsena got sight. He started with his wife in search of his children, and walked about in the forest. At last all of them met together. They reached home. Then Sāvitrī told them all that had happened. Everyone was delighted. Then some people from Sālva came to the hermitage. They said that the minister had killed the King, that the people had expelled the minister, and that they had come to request Dyumatsena to return to his country and to resume the reign. Accordingly all of them returned to Sālva. Dyumatsena was anointed as the King of Sālva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 293 to 299).

SAVYA. A son of Aṅgiras, Savya is actually Indra himself. The story is that Aṅgiras began worshipping the Devatās for a son equal to Indra and that Indra, thinking that there should not be another person equal to him, got himself born as the son of Aṅgiras. That son is Savya. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 51).

(x) The people of the country in earlier days were illiterate and ignorant. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 34).

ŚIBI III. A King born in the dynasty of Uśīnara. He was present at the wedding of Draupadī. He fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the great war and was killed by Droṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 155. Verse 19). King Śibi had four sons Bhadra, Suvīra, Kekaya and Vṛṣadarbha. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚIBI IV. An Indra. There were four sects of Devas called Supāras, Haris, Satyas and Sudhīs in Tāmasa Manvantara, and there were twentyseven Devas in each Sect. Śibi, who performed hundred yajñas then was Indra. (For details see under Manvantaram).

ŚIBI V. An ancient Rājarṣi.
1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus :— Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas- Āyus - Nahuṣa-Yayāti- Anudruhyu - Sabhānara - Kālanara - Sṛñjaya - Uśīnara-Śibi.
Śibi was born to Uśīnara of Mādhavī, daughter of Yayāti.
2) Suhotra made to give way. King Suhotra of Kuru dynasty once on his return from a visit of maharṣis saw King Śibi coming in the opposite direction in his chariot, and both the Kings saluted each other as their age ordained. But, they did not give passage to each other as they thought themselves to be equal in merit. At that time Nārada came there and asked the kings why they stood there thus blocking the path. They answered Nārada thus : "He who is more noble or clever on account of former actions etc. is usually given way to by the other person. Both of us are comrades and are equals."
Nārada then spoke as follows:—
"Oh ! King of the Kuru dynasty ! You are cruel to the gentle and gentle to the cruel. To the evil you are good; then why not be good to the good. Devas have ordered that he who does good will get it hundredfold by return. King Uśīnara is more noble and gentle than you are. The miser is won over by liberality, the liar by truth, the cruel by patience and the evil person by good. But, both of you Kings are noble persons. Therefore, one of you should give way to the other."
Listening to Nārada's advice, Suhotra gave way to Śibi and proceeded on his way. (Vana Parva, Chapter 194).
3) Śibi tested. Śibi's fame spread in the three worlds, and an idea was mooted among the Devas that it should be tested how much of the reputation of the King was genuine. Accordingly, Agni in the form of a dove and Indra in that of a kite hunting after the dove, rushed to King Śibi. The dove took refuge in the lap of the King sitting in 'divya' posture, and the priest told the King that it was the latter's duty to protect the dove, which took refuge with him for its life. The dove also told the King thus ; "I am really a muni, who has entered the body of the dove. I take refuge in you for my life."
By that time the kite too had flown up to the King. It asked the King to return the dove, which it had been chasing. The King was surprised to hear the kite talk and told the bird that it was not proper for him to give up the dove who had sought refuge under him, but that he would give the kite any other flesh in lieu of the dove. The kite replied as follows : "You must give me flesh cut from your right thigh equal in weight to that of the dove. If you do so, the dove will be saved and you will be praised by people."

Accordingly, the King cut a piece of flesh from his right thigh and weighed it in the balance against the dove. But, the dove weighed more. The King cut more flesh from his thigh and weighed, but the dove still weighed more. Thus, by instalments the King cut his whole body and weighed the flesh against the dove, yet it weighed more. Then the King himself sat in the balance, seeing which the kite flew away. Then the dove assumed its original form and told the King that it was Agni and the kite, Indra. The Devas were greatly pleased with the firm sense of sacrifice of the King; they blessed him and told him that a son called Kapotaromā will be born to him. (Vana Parva, Chapter 197).

4) Other information.

(i) When Yayāti fell down on earth from heaven, Śibi promised to transfer to him the merits acquired by him (Śibi). (Ādi Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 3).

(ii) Śibi worships Yama in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 10).

(iii) Śibi too was present in the company of Indra to witness the fight between Arjuna and Droṇa in the battle between King Virāṭa and Kauravas at the Virāṭa city in connection with the lifting of Virāṭa's cow by the Kauravas. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(iv) Śibi loved Indra very much. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 7).

(v) People of the Yadu dynasty presented Śibi a sword. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 89).

(vi) He gifted away his son to the brahmins, and therefore he attained heaven. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verve 19; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 4).

(vii) He did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 61).

5) Conclusion. The story of two Kings connected with the episode of the dove and the kite is mentioned in the Mahābhārata. One of the Kings is Śibi and the other Uśīnara, father of Śibi. (See under Uśīnara).

SIDDHA I. A Deva Gandharva. This Gandharva was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Prādhā. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 46).

SIDDHA II (THE SIDDHAS). A group of Devas. The group of devas called Siddhas lived on the Himālayas near the hermitage of Kaṇva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 15). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 29, that this group of Gods stay in the palace of Yama serving him.

SIDDHĀ. The Devī (goddess) consecrated in Rambhāvana, wearing a water-vessel with a snout, rosary, boon, and fire, is called Siddhā. (See under Devī).

SIDDHAGRAHA. An evil spirit. Those who are cursed by the group of devas called Siddhas are afflicted by this spirit and they become maniacs. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 49).

SIDDHAPĀTRA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

SIDDHĀRTHA I. A King. This King was the rebirth of the asura Krodhavaśa. (Bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 60).

SIDDHĀRTHA II. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 64).

SIDDHĀRTHA III. The name of Buddha in his childhood. (See under Buddha).

SIDDHĀRTHA IV. A minister of King Daśaratha. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 36).

SIDDHĀŚRAMA. A hermitage. The place at which Vāmana thrust Mahābali down to Pātāla. This place became a hermitage later. When Viśvāmitra took Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forest for the protection of his sacrifice, he showed them this hermitage. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 29, Verse 22).

SIDDHI I. A daughter of Dakṣa. Thirteen daughters including Siddhi were married by Dharmadeva. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 7).

SIDDHI II. A goddess. Kuntī the mother of the Pāṇḍavas was the human rebirth of this goddess. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 120). This goddess Siddhi had walked in front of the army of Subrahmaṇya, in the great battle between the Devas and the asuras. To attain the object in any matter, the blessing of this goddess is essential. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 64).

SIDDHI III. The son of an Agni (fire) named Vīra. Siddhi was born to this Vīrāgni, by his wife Sarayū. The story stating how this agni once screened the sun by his radiance, occurs in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 218.

ŚĪGHRA. A King of the Solar dynasty. In Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha, it is said that he was the son of Agnipūrṇa and father of Maru.

ŚĪGHRAGA. One of the sons of Sampāti. (Matsya Purāṇa, 6, 35).

ŚIGRU. A particular caste of people. In the Dāśarajña war they fought against Sudās and got themselves defeated. (Ṛgveda, 7-18-19).

SIKATA. An ancient hermit. When the Bhārata-battle was going on this hermit approached Droṇa and requested him to stop the battle forthwith. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 34).

SIKATĀKṢA. A holy place. Once Yudhiṣṭhira visited this holy place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 125, Verse 12).

ŚIKHAṆḌAM. Things which were born from the blood of Vṛtrāsura and which Brahmins, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas are forbidden from eating. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 282, 60).

ŚIKHAṆḌĪ (ŚIKHAṆḌINĪ I). Rebirth of Ambā, daughter of the king of Kāśī. Ambā ended her life with the vow that she would take revenge on Bhīṣma and was born in the next life as the daughter of king Drupada under the name Śikhaṇḍinī, and Śikhaṇḍinī helped Arjuna in the war at Kurukṣetra to kill Bhīsma. (For the history of Ambā ending in two lives see under Ambā. Certain pieces of information not included under that head are given below).

(1) Śikhaṇḍinī was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu in the city of Upaplavya. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 17).

(2) Śikhaṇḍī learned archery at the feet of Droṇācārya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 192, Verse 60).

(3) On the first day of the great war a duel was fought between Śikhaṇḍī and Aśvatthāmā. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).

(4) Śikhaṇḍī retreated from battle-field in fear of Droṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 31).

(5) A second duel was fought by him and Aśvatthāmā. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 26).
(6) Śikhaṇḍī broke the arrow of Śalya with his divine arrow (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 29).
(7) He tried to kill Bhīṣma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 45).
(8) Śikhaṇḍī attacked Bhīṣma at the instance of Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 1).
(9) He followed that attack with many other attacks. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 114, 118 and 119).
(10) Sañjaya praised the prowess of Śikhaṇḍī to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 45).
(11) Bhūriśravā and Śikhaṇḍī fought with each other. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 43).
(12) Śikhaṇḍī and Karṇa fought with each other. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).
(13) Śikhaṇḍī and Bālhīka fought with each other. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 7).
(14) In the fight that followed, Śikhaṇḍī was defeated by Kṛtavarman. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 114, Verse 82).
(15) Kṛpācārya defeated Śikhaṇḍī. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 22).
(16) In the battle that followed with Kṛtavarman, Śikhaṇḍī fainted. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 26)..
(17) Defeated by Kṛpācārya, Śikhaṇḍī had to run away for life. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 54).
(18) Karṇa defeated Śikhaṇḍī. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 7).
(19) Annihilating the army of Prabhadrakas Śikhaṇḍī fought fiercely with Kṛtavarman and Kṛpa. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 7).
(20) Śikhaṇḍī resisted the advance of Aśvatthāmā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 6).
(21) In the fierce battle that was fought after the fall of Bhīṣma Aśvatthāmā killed Śikhaṇḍī. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 65).
(22) Synonyms of Śikhaṇḍī used in Mahābhārata. Bhīṣmahantā, Śikhaṇḍinī, Draupadeya, Drupadātmaja, Pāñcālya, Yājñaseni etc.

ŚIKHAṆḌINĪ (II). Wife of Antardhāna born in the dynasty of emperor Pṛthu. The emperor had two sons called Antardhāna and Vādī. To Antardhāna was born of Śikhaṇḍinī a son called Havirdhāna, who married Dhiṣaṇā born in the dynasty of Agni, and the couple had six sons called Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Chapter 14, Part 1).

ŚIKHĀVĀN A maharṣi, who lived in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 14).

ŚIKHĀVARTA. A Yakṣa, who lives in the court of Kubera worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 17).

ŚIKHĪ. A nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 12).

ŚIKHIDHVAJA. A king, who ruled over Mālava during the first Dvāparayuga in the seventh Manvantara. Cūḍālā, daughter of the king of Saurāṣṭra was Śikhidhvaja's wife. The Jñānavāsiṣṭham contains a story about how the royal couple renounced all attachments in life as the result of intense tapas.

Śikhidhvaja and Cūḍālā began practising jñānayoga (communion through knowledge). It was Cūḍālā, who gained Siddhis first. Though the king was pleased with the achievements of his wife he felt sorry about his failure or drawbacks. Cūḍālā had attained the Siddhi to travel even in air. Though she told her husband emphatically that he could practise jñānayoga living in the palace itself, he quitted the city for the forest and began performing tapas there. Then on one day, she went to the presence of the king in the forest in the guise of a brahmin boy and stood there without touching the earth with his feet. The king treated the boy with honour and respect taking him for some Deva. Then she revealed her actual form, and the king agreed to return with her to the palace and practise jñānayoga there. At that juncture Cūḍālā created by her soul-power celestial women like Urvaśī and also Indra and lined them up before her husband. This was to test whether the king yielded to any of the temptations by the celestial women or by Indra and Cūḍālā returned with the king to the kingdom.

ŚIKṢAKA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 76).

ŚILĀ. Daughter of Dharmarṣi. She was wedded by Marīci maharṣi. For some reason the maharṣi cursed her and she was transformed into a stone in the Gayā temple. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 108).

ŚĪLAVĀN. A divine sage. In Mahābhārata, Dākṣinātyapāṭha, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, there is a reference to a conversation between this Maharṣi and Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

ŚĪLAVATĪ. A heroine reputed for her chastity and fidelity to her husband. Her husband, Ugraśravas was cruel and vicious. Yet Śīlavatī used to adore him. Once Ugraśravas fell a victim to the disease of leprosy. From that time, Śīlavatī used to go about begging in the houses of Brāhmaṇas to feed and support her husband. After some time by her constant nursing, his condition was slightly improved. After that she continued her begging from door to door, carrying him on her shoulders. Once they happened to arrive in front of a huge mansion. Water was flowing in front of the gate and so Śīlavatī returned from there with her husband without stepping into the water. When they reached home, Ugraśravas asked his wife why she returned without entering the mansion. She explained that it was the house of a prostitute and to touch the water coming out of that house was sin. On hearing it, Ugraśravas felt an irresistible desire to visit that brothel. He expressed his desire to her. Quite obediently Śīlavatī took up her husband on her shoulders and went to the prostitute's house. (For more details see under Aṇī māṇḍavya, Anasūyā and Atri).

ŚILĀYŪPA. A Vedāntist son of Viśvāmitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 54).

ŚILĪ. A nāga born in the Takṣaka dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña conducted by Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).

SĪMANTINĪ. The wife of King Citrtāṅgada. The story of this Sīmantinī is given in Somapradoṣavrata māhātmya. in Skanda Purāṇa.

SIMHACANDRA. A king who had helped Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 40).

SIMHAKETU. A warrior who took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas. (Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 49,) This Simhaketu was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Karṇa.

SIMHALA. Modern Ceylon. In ancient days this place was called Simhala and the inhabitants were called Simhalas. The following statements about Simhala occur in the Mahābhārata.

(1) The low caste people of the Siṁhalas originated from the sides of Nandinī, the cow of the Devas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 37).

(2) The king of Siṁhala had taken part in the sacrifice Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 12).

(3) The Kṣatriyas of Siṁhala gave Yudhiṣṭhira, Chrysoprases, pearls and such other wealth of the sea as present. The people of Siṁhala wore clothes studded with jewels. They were of dark complexion with eyes the ends of which were red. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 35).

(4) The Siṁhalas took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata. In the Garuḍa vyūha formed by Droṇa, the Siṁhalas were stationed in the position of the neck. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 6).

SIṀHAPURA. A city in Bhārata, famous in the Purāṇas. This city was situated in the mountainous region of North India. During the period of Mahābhārata, Citrāyudha was the king who ruled over this city. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 20). Arjuna during his regional conquest of the North, defeated this king.

SIṀHASENA I. The commander of the army of Kārtavīryārjuna. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 46). This Śiṁhasena captured and imprisoned Rāvaṇa.

SIṀHASENA II. A warrior of Pāñcāla. In the battle of Bhārata he took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed in the battle by Droṇa. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 32).

SIṀHASENA III. Another warrior of Pāñcāla. Karṇa killed him in the battle of Bhārata. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 44).

SIṀHAVAKRA. An asura. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa,) This asura fought Subrahmaṇya.

SIṀHIKĀ. A giantess. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15, and Agni Purāṇa Chapter 19). Two sons named Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇyākṣa and a daughter named Siṁhikā were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Diti. Siṁhikā was married by Vipracitti. Two sons named Rāhu and Ketu were born to them. Because they were the sons of Siṁhikā, they came to be known by the name Saiṁhikeyas.

(But it is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, that Siṁhikā was the daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa and the wife of Kaśyapa.)

A story occurs in Rāmāyaṇa, that this Siṁhikā caught hold of Hanūmān by his shadow and swallowed him, while he was jumping to Laṅkā, and that Hanūmān escaped from her. (See under Rāma, para 27).

ŚIṀŚUMĀ, Daughter of a Gāndhāra King. She is also known as Sukeśī. She was married by Śrī Kṛṣṇa (M.B. Southern text, Chapter 38).

SINDHU I. A river in India, very famous in the Purāṇas.

1) General information. It is assumed in the Purāṇas that this river is a branch of the heavenly Gaṅgā. By the efforts of Bhagīratha, the heavenly Gaṅgā fell on the earth in the Lake Bindu. After that it had six channels. Three channels flowed to the east and three to the west. The rivers which flowed to the East were Hlādinī, Pāvanī and Nalinī. The three rivers Sucakṣus, Sītā and Sindhu flowed to the west. This seventh branch followed Bhagīratha and flowed to Pātāla to perform obsequies to the sons of Sagara.

2) Other details.

(i) Saṁvaraṇa, a King, who was defeated by his enemies, hid himself for a while in the natural arbours on the basin of Sindhu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 40).

SINDHUTAMA. A holy place. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 79). This is one of the famous holy places in the world and that by bathing in this tīrtha one can obtain heaps of gold.

ŚINI. A King of the Yādava dynasty. He secured Devakī to be wedded to Vasudeva after defeating, single-handed in battle, all the kings. A fierce battle was fought between this Śini of Devamīḍha family and Somadatta. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 114).

SINĪVĀK. A hermit. This hermit had shone in the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 14).

SINĪVĀLĪ I.

1) Birth. A daughter of Aṅgiras. The wife of Aṅgiras was Smṛti. She gave birth to four daughters named Kuhū, Rākā, Anumati and Sinīvālī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10).

(It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 6, that Sinīvālī was the third daughter of Aṅgiras by his wife Śraddhā.

2) Other details.

(i) Dṛśyādṛśyā is another name of Sinīvālī. Her body is small. So sometimes she can be seen and sometimes she cannot be seen. It is in this meaning that she gets the name Dṛśyādṛśyā (seen and unseen). Śiva bears her in his forehead. So she has another name Rudrasutā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 5).

(ii) Śiva used Sinīvālī as the yoke of the horses of his chariot in the battle with Tripuras. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 32).

(iii) At the time of his birth Sinīvālī had come to see the child Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 13).

(iv) It is mentioned in Atharva Veda that Sinīvālī is a wife of Mahāviṣṇu.

SINĪVĀLĪ II. A daughter born to Bṛhaspati by his wife Subhā. It is stated in Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 90, that though Sinīvālī was given in Marriage to Prajāpati Kardama, she abandoned him and lived with Soma (Moon).

ŚIPHĀ. A river extolled in Ṛgveda. It is stated in Sūkta 104, Anuvāka 15, Maṇḍala 1 of the Ṛgveda that the asura named Kuyava should be thrown into the depths of Śiphā as he stole money.

SĪRADHVAJA. Janaka the father of Sītā. (For further details see under Janaka).

ŚIRĪṢAKA. A nāga born in Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 14).

ŚIRĪṢĪ. A Vedāntist son of Viśvāmitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

ŚĪRKĀLI. A sacred place in South India. Brahmapura is another name for this place which is near Kumbhakonam in Tanjore District. The place was sanctified by the birth of Tirujñānasambandhar. (For further details see under Tirujñānasambandhar).

ŚIŚIRA. Son of Soma the Vasu, of his wife Manoharā. To the couple were born four sons called Varcas, Prāṇa, Ramaṇa and Śiśira. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 22).

ŚIŚIRAPARVATA. A mountain near Mount Meru. (See under Mahāmeru).

ŚIṢṬA. Dhruva's son by Dhanyā. Śiṣṭa married Succhāyā, daughter of Agni. Four sons, Kṛpa, Ripuñjaya, Vṛtta and Vṛka were born to them. (Matsya Purāṇa, 4, 38).

ŚIṢṬI. A son of Dhruva. Dhruva had two sons, Śiṣṭi and Bhavya, by his wife Śambhu. Śiṣṭi's wife, Succhāyā gave birth to five sons, namely, Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. The eldest of them Ripu was the father of the Manu, Cākṣuṣa. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 13).

ŚIŚU. A son born to the Saptamātṛs due to the blessing of Subrahmaṇya. The eyes of the child were blood-red. It was called Vīrāṣṭaka as well. (Vana Parva, Chapter 228, Verse 11).

ŚIŚUMĀRA I. A Ṛṣi. This Ṛṣi used to live in water in the form of a crocodile. There is a story about him in the Pañcaviṁśa Brāhmaṇa.

Once all the Ṛṣis joined together in praising Indra. Śiśumāra alone remained silent without taking part in it. Seeing this, Devendra ordered Śiśumāra to praise him. The sage answered proudly that he had no time for it and that he would praise Indra for as much time as was needed to throw the water upwards.

Accordingly he started praising Indra. The sage to whom Indra's praise was at first disagreeable, subsequently felt that he could not do it too much. By his austerity he acquired "Sāmavidyā". He even composed a "Sāma" (a hymn) in praise of Indra. In later times it became famous as "Śārkarasāma".

ŚIŚUMĀRA II. A constellation so called because it is in the form of a Śiśumāra (Crocodile). It is said to be the starry form of Viṣṇu. At the tail-end of it is Dhruva, which automatically rotates and also makes planets like the Sun and the moon to rotate. Stars follow the self-rotating Dhruva and rotate like a wheel. The Sun and the moon along with stars and planets are bound by the cord of atmosphere to Dhruva.

The basis and support of this constellation of Śiśumāra is Mahāviṣṇu, who is the support of all light and effulgence. Dhruva, son of Uttānapāda came to be installed at the tail-end of Śiśumāra as he had worshipped Viṣṇu. Śiśumāra is dependent upon Viṣṇu, the Lord of all, and Dhruva is dependent upon Śiśumāra. Sūrya is dependent on Dhruva. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 9).

ŚIŚUMĀRAMUKHĪ. A woman follower of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 22).

ŚIŚUNĀGA. The first King of the Śiśunāga dynasty. He founded the dynasty after defeating Nandivardhana of Pradyota family, King of Magadha. Though he first belonged to Kāśī region, later on he settled down in Magadha. Kākavarṇa was Śiśunāga's son.

The following ten Kings of Śiśunāga dynasty ruled the country for 360 years. (1) Kākavarṇa (2) Kṣemadharmā (3) Kṣemajit (4) Vindhyasena (5) Bhūmimitra (6) Ajātaśatru (7) Vaṁśaka (8) Udāsī (9) Nandivardhana (10) Mahānandi. (Matsya Purāṇa, 272, 6-17; Vāyu Purāṇa 99. 314-315).

ŚIŚUPĀLA. King of Cedi.

1) Previous birth. Jaya and Vijaya, gate-keepers at Vaikuṇṭha were born thrice in asura womb as a result of the curse by munis like Sanaka. They were first born as Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu, next as Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa and the third time as Śiśupāla and Dantavaktra. (See under Jayavijayas).

2) Birth. Śiśupāla was the son of King Damaghoṣa of Cedi by his wife, Śrutaśravas (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). He was born with three eyes and four hands, and at the time of birth he brayed like an ass, so the parents decided to abandon the ugly and awkward child. Immediately a Jin (ghost) appeared and told the father that the child would grow up to become very strong and powerful, and that only one person would be able to kill him and that person had already been born on earth. Further questioned by Śiśupāla's mother, the Jin said that as soon as the son saw the person born to kill him, he would lose his third eye, and that if he was seated on the lap of the person, two out of his four hands would be lost. After having said this the Jin disappeared.

News about this peculiar child spread far and wide and many kings visited him. Damaghoṣa placed the child on the lap of each of them. But, no physical change occurred to him. Then one day Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra came to see the child, whose mother Śrutaśravas (she was also the sister of Kṛṣṇa's father) placed him on Kṛṣṇa's lap. Immediately two hands and the third eye of the child vanished, and with tears in her eyes the mother prayed Kṛṣṇa never to kill Śiśupāla, and Kṛṣṇa promised that he would forgive the crimes of Śiśupāla a hundred times. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 43).

3) Other information.

(i) Śiśupāla was present at the wedding of Draupadī. In his attempt to draw the bow he fell down on his knees. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 23).

(ii) He was present at the wedding of the daughter of the King of Kaliṅga also. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 6).

(iii) He was the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of Jarāsandha. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 10).

(iv) When Bhīma conquered all the kingdoms Śiśupāla honoured him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 11).

(v) He too was present at the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 14).

(vi) At the Rājasūya, Kṛṣṇa heaped insulting words on Śiśupāla. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 37).

(vii) Śiśupāla objected to the selection of Kṛṣṇa as president of the Rājasūya and controversy followed it. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 11).

(viii) Śiśupāla insulted Bhīṣma at the Rājasūya. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 41).

(ix) Once in the absence of Kṛṣṇa Śiśupāla attacked Dvārakā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45 Verse 7).

(x) He stole the sacrificial horse of Vasudeva. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 9).

(xi) He abducted the wife of Babhru. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 10).

(xii) He abducted the daughter of his uncle, the King of Viśālā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 11).

(xiii) Following the above he was killed in battle by Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 45, Verse 25, Sabhā Parva).

(xiv) After death his effulgence got absorbed in Kṛṣṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 26).

(xv) Kṛṣṇa once told Arjuna that he killed Śiśupāla for his (Arjuna's) good. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 181, Verse 21).

ŚIŚUPĀLAVADHAPARVA. A Sub-Parva of Sabhā Parva, Chapters 40-45.

ŚIŚUROMĀ. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Takṣaka. This Nāga was burnt to death in Janamejaya's Sarpasatra. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 10).

SITA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 69).

SĪTĀ. Wife of Śrī Rāma.

1) Who is Sītā? Sītā is the incarnation of Mahālakṣmī. Lakṣmī took the birth of a woman because of the curse of Sarasvatī. Vedavatī, Sītā, Pāñcālī, all these women of chastity were the incarnations of Lakṣmī The stories of Lakṣmī passing from birth to birth such as Vedavatī, Tulasī, Sītā, Pāñcālī and so on until at last she reached the world of Viṣṇu, occurring in various Purāṇas are collected and given here.

Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā were the wives of Mahāviṣṇu. One day Viṣṇu was sitting with his three wives and entertaining them with conversation when Devī Gaṅgā looked at Viṣṇu amorously. Instantly a quarrel arose among the three of them. When the row became uncontrollable, Sarasvatī cursed Lakṣmī to take birth in the earth as a plant. Gaṅgā cursed Sarasvatī and made her a river. Sarasvatī cursed Gaṅgā and made her a river. At the end of all these rows and curses Viṣṇu stood up and said to Lakṣmī. "Lakṣmī! you will take birth as the daughter of Dharmadhvaja on the earth with the name Tulasī. In order that the curse of Sarasvatī may come true, a plant called Tulasī (holy basil) will grow up on the earth from a portion of you. While you are living as the daughter of Dharmadhvaja, an asura named Śaṅkhacūḍa born from my portion will marry you."

The curse was realized. Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā became rivers. Lakṣmī was about to be born as the daughter of Dharmadhvaja. Who was Dharmadhvaja? He was a man of righteous deeds and good qualities, born of the family of Dakṣasāvarṇi who was born from a portion of Mahāviṣṇu. Brahmasāvarṇī was born from Dakṣasāvarṇi. Dharmasāvarṇi begot Rudrasāvarṇi, Indrasāvarṇi begot Vṛṣadhvaja. Rathadhvaja was the son of Vṛṣadhvaja. Two sons named Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja were born to Rathadhvaja. Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja were performing penance before Devī Lakṣmī to regain the wealth and prosperity lost by the curse of the Sun.

How did Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja lose their prosperity? Their grandfather Vṛṣadhvaja was a devotee of Śiva. He performed penance before Śiva for a long time. Śiva became pleased with Vṛṣadhvaja and lived in his hermitage for the period of three Devayugas. This king Vṛṣadhvaja made a proclamation that none other than Śiva should be worshipped. As all the other gods were despised, the Sun got angry and cursed Vṛṣadhvaja. "Let the prosperity of yours and your posterity be destroyed." Śiva did not like the action taken by the Sun against his favourite. Śiva took his trident and went against the Sun, who took refuge near his father Prajāpati Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa complained to Brahmā. Brahmā ran to Vaikuṇṭha. Śiva also came there with his trident. Viṣṇu looked at them and said "You gods, hear this. What is the need of all this hurry? Within the short time you have taken to run up to this place so many years have elapsed in the world. It is a long time since Vṛṣadhavaja died. His son Rathadhvaja also is dead. Rathadhvaja has two sons named Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja. They both have become Kings. But because of the curse of the Sun, they are devoid of any radiance. They are now worshipping Mahālakṣmī for radiance." Hearing this talk of Mahāviṣṇu all of them returned to their places.

It has been mentioned that Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja had been engaged in penance before Mahālakṣmī. Devī Mahālakṣmī appeared before them and granted their wish. Devī promised them that she would take birth as the daughter of each of them, and she would recover for them all the wealth and prosperity they had lost. Accordingly Mahālakṣmī took birth by her portion as the daughter of Mādhavī, the wife of Dharmadhvaja under the name Tulasī. (For the rest of the story of Tulasī see under Tulasī, Para 4).

Mālāvatī was the wife of Kuśadhvaja. As Lakṣmī had promised to take birth as their daughter, both of them waited for the birth of the child uttering the Vedas. At this time a child was born from the mouth of Kuśadhvaja. This child was the incarnation of Lakṣmī. With the birth of the child Kuśadhvaja regained all the wealth and prosperity he had lost. The child was named Vedavatī (Devavatī). She grew up and became a young woman. Her desire was to get Mahāviṣṇu as her husband. Once an asura named Śambhu came to the hermitage of Kuśadhvaja. When he saw Vedavatī he fell in love with her. He asked Kuśadhvaja for the hand of his daughter, but Kuśadhvaja did not give his consent.

Śambhu got angry. He came back in the night and killed Kuśadhvaja with his sword. Hearing the sound Vedavatī woke up and saw the dead body of her father lying in a pool of blood. She looked at Śambhu angrily. In that fiery look Śambhu was burnt to ashes.

Vedavatī began to perform very severe penance to get Viṣṇu as her husband. It was at this time that Rāvaṇa had begun his campaign of conquest. He defeated all kings and was proceeding victoriously through the vicinity of the Himālayas, when he saw the beautiful damsel Vedavatī sitting alone and performing penance. Seeing so beautiful a girl engaged in penance, he told her that he was the famous Rāvaṇa with ten heads and requested her to throw away the garment of bark of the tree and the matted hair and to accept him as her husband. She rejected his request. The angry Rāvaṇa caught hold of her hand. She resisted using her teeth and finger-nails. She cried out that she wanted no more to retain the body made impure by the touch of a wicked person. She made a fire and jumped into it. Thus in the sight of Rāvaṇa, she burnt herself to death. Before death she vowed that in the next birth Mahāviṣṇu would become her husband and would kill Rāvaṇa.

Rāvaṇa who himself was burning in the fire of amour, was extremely sorry at the death of the beautiful girl. He took the ashes of hers to Laṅkā and put them in a golden box and kept the box in a solitary place. He used to visit the place daily. Since the arrival of the ashes, bad omens began to occur in Laṅkā. One day Nārada came to Laṅkā. Rāvaṇa asked Nārada for the reason of constant occurrences of bad omens in Laṅkā. Nārada replied that the cause of bad omens was the golden box he was keeping and that if it was kept in Laṅkā any longer, it would cause destruction and that if it was destroyed, great disaster would follow. Nārada advised Rāvaṇa to remove the box without opening it to somewhere else outside Laṅkā. Accordingly Rāvaṇa caused the golden box to be dropped in the sea. By and by it came with the waves to the shore of Bhārata (India). Robbers took it and went to the north and hid it in a forest. They were not able to take it away again. Thus the box came to be deposited on the basin of a river in Mithilā.

It was this river -basin that King Janaka selected as the place for sacrifice. Being kept in this holy place, the ashes of the body of Devavatī in the box mingled with her spirit and was taking shape into a child. When the place was ploughed for preparing the spot of sacrifice, for Janaka, this golden box was discovered. The child which was inside the box, was taken home and brought up by the king who named her Sītā. It was the portion of this Sītā herself that took birth next as Pāñcālī. (Devī Bhāgavata, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa)

Other versions.

(i) The King Padmākṣa performed penance before Mahāviṣṇu with a view to get Mahālakṣmī as daughter. Mahāviṣṇu gave the King a great Phallus to realize his wish. From that a beautiful girl was born. The King named her Padmā. When she attained marriageable age, the King made preparations for her Svayaṁvara (the bride herself choosing a husband). On the day fixed for the marriage Rākṣasas came and destroyed all the preparations and killed King Padmākṣa. Because of her sorrow at this disaster Padmā jumped into the fire. The giants searched for Padmā every where, but they could not find her. They returned in disappointment.

One day, during this period, Rāvaṇa was travelling in his Aerial chariot. When he reached this place, he saw Padmā who had come out of the fire. Rāvaṇa was fascinated by the beauty of Padmā. So he turned towards her. Seeing this, Padmā again jumped into the pile of fire for safety. Without any delay Rāvaṇa made a search in the pile of fire. At last he got the body of Padmā (Sītā) in the form of five jewels. The disappointed Rāvaṇa placed the five jewels in a box and took it to Laṅkā and gave it to his wife Mandodarī. One day Mandodarī opened that box and saw Padmā sitting in the form of a beautiful virgin. Thinking that it was not propitious to keep her who was the cause of destruction to Padmākṣa, his family and kingdom, Mandodarī exerted pressure on Rāvaṇa to cast the box out of Laṅkā. Rāvaṇa with his men took the box from Laṅkā and buried it in Mithilā. Before the box was closed Padmā cursed Rāvaṇa. "I will come to Laṅkā again to kill you and your clan."

One day when a brahmin of Mithilā was ploughing his field he got this box. Thinking that it belonged to the King, the brahmin took the box to King Janaka. The King took the child in the box and brought it up. He named the child Sītā. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa, 7-6).

(ii) In Adbhuta Rāmāyaṇa we see another story which is somewhat different from that we see in Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa. It is given below :—

Rāvaṇa who had become the harasser of the entire world began to harass the hermits and sages also. He used to shoot arrows at the hermits who were sitting in meditation in the forests, and taking their blood in the arrow-head, he stored it in a big pot. In the same forest a hermit named Gṛtsamada was engaged in penance to get a daughter who would be equal to Lakṣmī in everyway. He took milk with the head of Darbha grass and stored it daily in a pot. One day Rāvaṇa came to his hermitage and took the pot of milk stealthily. He poured the milk into the pot in which he had stored the blood and stirring it well gave it to his wife Mandodarī. Seeing the character of her husband becoming worse and worse every day, Mandodarī became miserable. One day she decided to commit suicide and drank the contents of the pot given by Rāvaṇa. The thing which was taken for suicide, made her pregnant. Mandodarī buried that foetus in Kurukṣetra. After a while a girl was born from it. That child was Sītā, the daughter of King Janaka.

(iii) There is a story in Devī Bhāgavata stating how Sītā was born as the daughter of Rāvaṇa. It is as follows :

Rāvaṇa wished to marry Mandodarī, the daughter of Maya. Then Maya said to Rāvaṇa thus :—"According to the horoscope of Mandodarī, the first child born to her will be the destroyer of its clan. So it would be better to kill that child." Not acting upon the advice of Maya, Rāvaṇa put the first child in a box and buried it in the city of King Janaka. This child was Sītā, the wife of Śrī Rāma.

2) Marriage. Sītā grew up in the palace of King Janaka. Kuśadhvaja the younger brother of Janaka had three daughters. They were named Māṇḍavī, Ūrmilā and Śrutakīrti. Sītā grew up along with these three sisters. The four of them grew up as sisters and friends. Sītā grew up to be a young woman. Several young men wished to marry her. Janaka refused everyone of them. One day the princesses were playing with their maids in the garden of the harem. Sītā sat on the dais in the centre of the garden to make a flower garland. All their attempts to gather the jasmine flowers from the twigs of a large mango tree in the garden ended in failure. Sītā instantly ran to the weapon-house and taking a bow and arrow, shot down the flowers. The flowers fell down on the cloth placed on the ground without being damaged. Janaka saw the shooting of Sītā, from the palace. He was amazed at the expertness of Sītā. The bow which Sītā took was Śaivacāpa (the bow of Śiva). Śiva had used this bow, in days of old, to destroy the sacrifice of Dakṣa. Śiva, who was pacified by the destruction of the sacrifice of Dakṣa and the victory over his enemies, gave this bow to his devotee, the King of Videha. That King kept the bow in his weapon-house and used to worship it. Sītā had taken that bow and shot with it.

The King who had been thinking about the marriage of Sītā thought that what he saw was a good omen. So the King made a proclamation that only he who could take the bow of Śiva, draw it, and shoot with it would become eligible to marry Sītā. Hearing this many adventurers came to the palace and tried to handle the Śaivacāpa and retreated admitting defeat. It was at this time that Viśvāmitra brought Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forest for the protection of sacrifice. Hearing about the Svayaṁvara of Sītā, Viśvāmitra took the princes to the palace of Janaka. The King was greatly pleased when he learned that the princes were the sons of Daśaratha, of the solar Dynasty. Next morning, at the instruction of his elders and priests and teachers, Śrī Rāma stood on the dais in the middle of the hall, where the Śaivacāpa was placed, ready to handle it. He lifted up the bow with his left hand, drew it easily and fastened the string tightly and the bow was broken. When the Kings who were present, heard the roaring sound of the breaking of the bow, they shivered with fear as serpents at the sound of thunder. Sītā jumped with joy like a peacock. A letter was sent to Daśaratha then and there. Friends and relatives arrived. Under the guidance of the presiding priest Śatānanda, the marriage ceremony was conducted. Rāma married Sītā, Bharata married Māṇḍavī, Lakṣmaṇa married Ūrmilā, and Śatrughna married Śrutakīrti. The brides and bridegrooms went to Ayodhyā with their parents and relatives. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa).

3) Anasūyā's gift of clothes and ornaments. Daśaratha who had become old, wished to hand over the realm to Śrī Rāma. Since Kaikeyī stood as a hindrance, the kingdom fell into the hands of Bharata. Moreover Sītā had to live in the forest with Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa for fourteen years. In the early period of their forest-life they visited the hermitage of Atri. Seeing the devotion of Sītā towards her husband, Anasūyā the wife of hermit Atri, blessed her and gave her a fine garland, clothes and ornaments and cosmetics. Anasūyā blessed Sītā again and said that she would shine as Lakṣmī if she besmeared her body with the divine cosmetics. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sargas 118-120).

4) Test by Pārvatī and Parameśvara. In the last year of forest-life Pārvatī and Parameśvara tested the firmness of the love of Sītā and Rāma. (See under Rāma, Para 14).

5) Phantom Sītā. A few days before the abduction of Sītā by Rāvaṇa, Fire god took the guise of a Brahmin and approached Śrī Rāma and said : "O, Śrī Rāma ! The Devas have sent me to tell you certain things which will take place shortly. Your incarnation has the aim of killing Rāvaṇa. Sītā is meant to be a cause for the same. The death of Rāvaṇa is imminent. He will come and carry Sītā away. So entrust Sītā with me. I will keep her carefully. Make a phantom (Māyā) Sītā and keep her here, instead of the real Sītādevī. After the killing of Rāvaṇa, when Sītā enters fire as a proof of her purity, I will return Devī Sītā."

Śrī Rāma agreed to it. Fire god by his power of contemplation, created a phantom Sītā, exactly like the real Sītā in shape and figure and nature and placing her beside Rāma, he disappeared with the real Sītā. Even Lakṣmaṇa was not aware of this fact. The real Sītā Devī was under the care of Fire god till the moment of the test of chastity of Sītā by fire, after the killing of Rāvaṇa. During the time of entering the fire the illusory Sītā vanished in the fire and the real Sītā came out. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

6) Sītā killed Sahasramukha. See under Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa.

7) Abandonment of Sītā. See under Rāma, Para 31.

8) Sītā in the hermitage of Vālmīki. Abandoned Sītā, who was pregnant, wandered about in the forest and at last reached the hermitage of Vālmīki, who gave her protection and shelter. The story of an occurrence at this time is given in Kathāsaritsāgara, Alaṅkāravatīlambaka, Taraṅga 1.

The other hermits did not like Vālmīki's action of giving shelter to Sītā. They said "Sītā is impure. Otherwise her husband would not have abandoned her. By her association we also would become sinners. As the hermit Vālmīki is kind, he will not cast her away especially when she is pregnant. So the best thing for all of us, is to go to another hermitage." This murmuring of the hermits reached the ears of Vālmīki. He said "She is pure and chaste. I know it with my inward eyes." But they did not believe it. Then Sīta said "Lord ! you can test my chastity in whatever way you like, and if I am found to be impure you may cut off my head."

The hermits tested Sītā in the Ṭiṭṭibhasaras (a divine lake near the hermitage of Vālmīki) and were convinced that she was chaste and pure. (See under Ṭiṭṭibhasaras to know the greatness of this divine lake).

9) Cursed Sītā. Sītā was spending miserable days in the hermitage of Vālmīki. Her matrimonial life was a hell. Is there any special reason for misery? Yes. It is the curse of a bird. Once Śeṣa told this story, of the cursing of Sītā by a bird, to the hermit Vātsyāyana. That story is given below:

The event took place when Sītā was a young girl in the palace of Janaka. One day while Sītā was playing in the garden she saw two parrots, cock and hen, which talked well. The spouses were delightfully engaged in love-making. As soon as the couple saw Sītā they flew up to a tree and sang thus: "A handsome king will take birth on the earth. His name will be Śrī Rāma. His wife's name will be Sītā. Their wedded life will be happy.

Hearing the song, Sītā thought that they were some divine persons, and asked her maids to catch them and give them food. The maids caught the parrots and brought them before Sītā. She asked the birds. "Don't fear. Who are you ? Where do you come from? Who is that Rāma? Who is Sītā? How did you come to know of them ? Tell me all. I will not hurt you !

The birds replied. "In the forest there is a hermit named Vālmīki. We live in his beautiful hermitage. That hermit has composed the story Rāmāyaṇa, which is yet to happen, and has taught it to his disciples. We have heard those songs. Having heard them over and over we also have learned them by heart. We will tell you who Rāma is and who Jānakī is and what would happen to her who lives happily with him. Hear it ! Saying thus the parrots passed on to the story of Rāma. Due to the sacrifice of the hermit Ṛṣyaśṛṅga, Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as four persons, of whom Rāma the eldest, with his younger brother and Viśvāmitra, would come to Mithilā. He would draw the bow and marry Sītā.....

Sītā was extremely pleased with the sweet song of the birds and asked them so many questions repeatedly with curiosity. Seeing the excitement of the questioner the parrots understood that she was Sītā herself. They asked her. "Beautiful girl ! who are you? Why are you so much interested in knowing about Rāma ? What is your name ?" Sītā disclosed everything about her to the birds, and said "I am the same Sītā, the daughter of Janaka you have sung about. I will let you go only on the day when that handsome prince Rāma comes and marries me. Your conversation has made me so curious. You can live comfortably in my house, eating sweetmeats." The birds were in great fear when they heard this. They looked at each other and replied to Sītā. "Good child ! we birds fly about in the sky and perch on trees and bush. Houses are not comfortable to us. Moreover I am pregnant. After my delivery in our own place I will come here. You need not have any doubt." The female parrot said thus. But Sītā did not let them go. Then the male parrot prayed humbly with anxiety. "Sītā, allow her to go. Why do you detain my beautiful wife ? Allow us to have our own way in the forest. My wife is pregnant. After the confinement both of us will come back." Sītā said "Let her live with me. You may go as you please."

The parrots were in great sorrow. If they had not made any noise on that tree this detention would not have occurred. These pitiable supplications had no effect on Sītā. The male bird cried to Sītā to let him take his mate along with him, and beat his head on the ground. Sītā was adamant. The female bird, filled with misery and anger cursed Sītā thus. "You have separated me from my husband. I am pregnant. May you too be separated from your husband when you become pregnant". When she had finished saying, she fell on the ground and wriggled and died. An aerial chariot came down to the earth from heaven for the soul of that bird which had died exalting and glorifying Śrī Rāma. The soul of the bird got into the chariot and went up to heaven. The male bird, being unable to bear the death of his beloved wife, dipped himself in the Gaṅgā. Before his death he cried out in anger. "I must be born in the city of Rāma. By my words, this Sītā should be separated from her husband and fall into misery." He died in the Ganges in Krodha (anger) and fear. So he took rebirth with the name Krodhana as a washerman by caste and profession. It was this washerman who spoke words of calumny about Sītā. Due to the calumny of this washerman, Śrī Rāma abandoned Sītā and she had to take shelter in the hermitage of Vālmīki. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 57).

10) The end of Sītā. (See under Rāma, Para 33).

SĪTĀ II. A river. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 102, that once the hermit Mārkaṇḍeya saw this river also in the stomach of child Mukunda (Śrī Kṛṣṇa). This is one of the seven branches of the river Ganges. (See under Sindhu).

ŚĪTAPŪTANĀ. A ferocious she-devil. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 28). This terrible monster causes abortion in women.

ŚĪTĀŚĪ. A river flowing through Śākadvīpa and famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 32).

ŚITIKAṆṬHA A nāga which was in the company of the nāgas that came to lead the soul of Balabhadrarāma to Pātāla. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

ŚITIKEŚA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61)).

ŚIVA (RUDRA). One of the Trinity.

1) Birth. The seers or spiritual giants of India imagined three forms to God, dividing all the activities into three departments, i.e. creation, sustenance and destruction or annihilation. Brahmā, for creation, Viṣṇu, for sustenance and Śiva, for annihilation - they are the Trinity. Viṣṇu was born first, Brahmā next and Śiva last. The essence of Indian spiritualistic thought is that these three visible forms of God will, at the close of the Kalpa cease to be and become one with the cosmic power, and that the trinity will be born again at the commencement of the Kalpa and will take up their respective functions.

The dominant quality or attribute of Śiva is Tamas (darkness). Many stories, with slight variations, are told in the various Purāṇas about the birth of Śiva. Some of the more important stories are summarised below.

(i) At the begining of the Kalpa, while Brahmā was meditating upon the birth of a son like himself, a child deep blue in colour, appeared on his lap, and the child began running about crying aloud. Brahmā asked the child why it was crying; then the child asked Brahmā to give him a name. Though Brahmā told him that his name was Rudra and asked him not to cry, he cried seven times more. Then Brahmā gave him another seven names, and for the total eight names eight Mūrtis (forms) wives and children were allotted. Bhava, Śarva, Īśāna, Paśupati, Bhīma, Ugra and Mahādeva were the additional seven names, and Sun, Water, Earth, Wind, Fire, Sky, the Brahmin who has taken dīkṣā and Moon were the eight Mūrtis and the presiding deities allotted to them. To these deities the following wives were also allotted, i.e. Suvarcalā, Uṣā, Vikeśī, Śivā, Svāhā, Diśā, Dikṣā and Rohiṇī. The world is full with their progenies. Śanaiścara, Śukra, Lohitāṅga, Manojava, Skanda, Sarga, Santāna and Budha are the sons of the above eight wives. This Rudra married Satī, daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 8).

(ii) Brahmā whose predominant quality or attribute is rajas was born from the navel of Mahāviṣṇu. From the Centre of the brow of Brahmā was born Rudra of Tāmasic quality. Brahmā, by the power of his tapas, acquired the power of creation and created a red-coloured world by his attribute of rajas. The very same world is annihilated by Rudra at the close of the Kalpa period. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(iii) From the wrath of Brahmā was born Rudra, from his lap Nārada, from his finger Dakṣa, from his mind Sanaka and others, and from his left finger a daughter called Vīraṇī. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(iv) Four 'mental sons' of Brahmā Sanaka, Sanandana Sanātana and Sanatkumāra showed disinclination to beget progenies. Brahmā got angry at this attitude of the four sons and from the centre of his brow was born a body blue and white in colour, and he, in tears, requested Brahmā for names and stations. Blessing him by saying 'mā ruda' (do not cry) Brahmā allotted him names and stations. He became famous by the name Rudra. He was also given eleven more names by Brahmā as follows: Manyu, Manu, Mahinasa, Mahān, Śiva, Ṛtudhvaja, Ugraretas, Bhava, Kāma, Vāmadeva and Dhṛtavrata. These names are otherwise famous as follows: Aja, Ekapada, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭā, Rudra, Hara, Śambhu, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Īśāna and Tribhuvana. The eleven Rudras were also allotted the following eleven positions by Brahmā i.e. heart, the five organs of the body, vital force (Prāṇa) wind, fire, water, earth, sun and moon. Rudra has eleven wives, called Dhī, Vṛtti, Uśanā, Umā, Niyutā, Sarpis, Ilā, Ambikā, Irāvatī, Sudhā and Dīkṣā. Rudra, under the name Śiva, is considered to be the third of the trinity. The doctrine is that as long as time is real, deluge, or annihilation does not take place. Therefore, Rudrasaṁhāra (annihilation by Rudra) may be taken to mean only as the beginning of new creation.

(v) At the commencement of Yuga (era) Brahmā was born from the navel of Viṣṇu. Two asuras called Madhu and Kaiṭabha rushed up to kill Brahmā, and from the brow of Viṣṇu, who got angry towards the asuras was born Śiva holding in his hands Śūla (the three-pronged trident). (Vana Parva, Chapter 12).

2) Family life. Śiva has two wives, Gaṅgā and Pārvatī (See under Gaṅgā and Pārvatī). He lodges Gaṅgā on his head. Umā, Kātyāyanī, Gaurī, Kālī, Haimavatī Īśvarī, Śivā, Bhavānī, Rudrāṇī, Śarvāṇī, Sarvamaṅgalā Aparṇā, Pārvatī, Durgā, Mṛḍānī, Caṇḍikā, Ambikā, Āryā, Dākṣāyaṇī, Girijā, Menakātmajā, Cāmuṇḍā, Karṇamoṭī, Carcikā and Bhairavī—these are synonyms of Pārvatī. Śiva lives on the top of the Mahāmeru, where there are nine cities. At the centre is Brahmā's Manovatī; exactly to the east of it is Indra's Amarāvatī; at the south-eastern corner is Agni's Tejovatī; on the south is Yama's Saṁyamanī; at the south-western corner is Kṛṣṇāñjanā of Nirṛti, on the west is Varuṇa's Śraddhāvatī, at the north-western corner is Gandhavatī of Vāyu, on the north is Kubera's Mahodayā, at the north-eastern corner is Śiva's Yaśovatī—this is the set of the nine cities.

Two sons called Subrahmaṇya and Gaṇapati were born to Śiva of Pārvatī, and they are his actual sons. Some other sons also were born to him in his assumed forms and by other women. Such have been Indrajit, Hanūmān and others. For details see the respective words. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha, 9th Skandha; Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka).

3) Incarnations, Śiva has taken several partial incarnations, the chief of which are given below.

(i) Durvāsas. (See under Durvāsas).

(ii) Vānara (Monkey). Śiva, Pārvatī and their attenders like Nandikeśvara once transformed themselves into monkeys and played about on the Himālayas. Rāvaṇa, who came there on the occasion ridiculed Nandikeśvara, who, in great rage, cursed Rāvaṇa that monkeys would destroy him. Being thus cursed Rāvaṇa raised Kailāsa from its foundations and played with it. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(iii) Śakti. Śiva incarnated himself as Śakti, son of Vasiṣṭha and was devoured by Kalmāṣapāda, who took the form of a Rākṣasa. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

(iv) Varuṇa. Śiva once assumed the form of Varuṇa and conducted a yajña which was attended by the Vedas in assumed forms. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85).

4) Boons granted by Śiva. The Purāṇas refer to various persons, who had earned boons from him and others who attained heaven on account of their devotion for him. The following are important among such persons.

(i) Siṁhavaktra—(Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).
(ii) Rukmī—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
(iii) Bāṇa—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
(iv) Sudakṣiṇa—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
(v) Sālva—(Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).
(vi) Vṛkāsura—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
(vii) Ratidevī—(Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka, Taraṅga 1).
(viii) Indrajit—(Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
(ix) Bhṛgu—(Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 2).
(x) Gāndhārī—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 107).
(xi) A ṛṣi girl—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 6).
(xii) Prabhañjana—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Verse 20).
(xiii) Śvetakī—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 41).
(xiv) Jarāsandha—(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 64).
(xv) Bāṇāsura—(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Southern text).
(xvi) Maṅkaṇa—(Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 132).
(xvii Sagara—(Vana Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 15).

(xviii) Bhagīratha—(Vana Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 1).
(xix) Jayadratha—(Vana Parva, Chapter 272, Verse 28).
(xx) Ambā—(Udyoga Parva, Chapter 187, Verse 12).
(xxi) Somadatta—(Droṇa Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 16).
(xxii) Viṣṇu—(Droṇa Parva, Chapter 201, Verse 56).
(xxiii) Paraśurāma—(Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 116; Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 33).
(xxiv) Skanda— (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 46).
(xxv) Arundhatī—(Śalya Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 38).
(xxvi) A Brahmin boy—(Śānti Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 114), (xxvii) Taṇḍi muni—(Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 69).

5) Assets of Śiva. Śiva possesses a mass of matted hair, red in colour. It is known as Kaparda also, and hence he is called Kapardī as well. Śiva is also stated to be Agni. He has three eyes, the third one on the forehead being all fire. Śiva is called Trinetra, Phālanetra, Agnilocana etc. because of the above facts. It is only just and proper that Śiva, who is the destroyer of all things should have relation to Agni. Śiva, the all-destroyer, carries the Śūla in his hands always. Another weapon is named Pināka, and therefore Śiva is called Pinākapāṇi (he who holds Pināka in his hands). Both Śiva and his vehicle, the Bull, are white in colour. The white colour indicates the justice observed in the process of annihilation. Śiva has been described as possessing two, four, eight and ten hands. Besides the Pināka, he holds in his hands the club called Khaṭvāṅga, the bow called Ajagava, a deer, beads, skull, ḍamaru (a musical instrument) and many other sacred articles. Gaṅgā and Candra (moon) dwell on his head, and he is, therefore, known as Gaṅgādhara and Candracūḍa also. A Garland made of human skulls adorns his neck. Śiva wears the skin of the leopard for cloth and uses the skin of the elephant for blanket. All over his limbs snakes are worn as ornaments.

The Purāṇas contain stories as to how Śiva earned most of the above assets. The wives of many Ṛṣis felt enamoured of Śiva, who once appeared in the garb of a beggar. The Ṛṣis, who got angry with Śiva on the above account, decided to kill him. From the pit they dug on the ground, a tiger emerged. Śiva killed it and wore its skin. A deer followed the tiger from the pit. Śiva held it in his left hand. The next to emerge out of the pit was a red-hot iron rod. Śiva took it in his hands as a weapon. Lastly snakes came out of the pit and Śiva wore them on his body. On another occasion an asura called Gaya assumed the form of an elephant and chased the munis, who took refuge in a Śiva temple. Śiva appeared, killed the elephant and wore its skin on his body. Since Śiva wore snakes as ear-rings he came to be known as Nāgakuṇḍala. Brahmā ordered that Rudra should create people and accordingly he created people. But, his creations were very cruel beings. Brahmā feared that they would eat up the other creations. Brahmā, who trembled with fear, asked Rudra to retire from the act of creation and to train himself to do creation in the proper manner as ordained. Accordingly, Rudra started practising tapas.

6) Incidents.
(i) How Śiva got the name Jīmūtaketu. (See under Jīmūtaketu).
(ii) He became Kapālī. (See under Kapālī).
(iii) Sin of Brahmahatyā on Śiva. As he plucked off the head of Brahmā Śiva became subject to the sin of Brahmahatyā. Blue in colour and with grey hair, terrible Brahmahatyā approached Śiva who asked her who she was and why she came. She answered that she was Brahmahatyā and asked Śiva to take her into him. She entered his body so that he felt a burning sensation all over him. In this condition Śiva went to Bādaryāśrama. But, the great Ṛṣis, Naranārāyaṇas were not there in the āśrama. Sad at heart Śiva went to the river Yamunā to take a bath. But the river dried up. Then he went to Plakṣa island to bathe; but the island disappeared. Then he went to Puṣkarāraṇya, Māgadhāraṇya, Saindhavāraṇya, Naimiṣāraṇya, Dharmāraṇya etc. all to no purpose. He got worn out but could not have a bath. The terrible Brahmahatyā did not leave him. Though he visited sacred rivers, āśramas and temples and practised Yoga, Śiva did not get redemption from sin. At last, in great disappointment he went to Kurukṣetra, where he saw Viṣṇu. With folded hands Śiva praised Viṣṇu who advised him the following means for absolution from sin. "A Bhagavān born from my aspect under the name Yogaśāyī is living at Prayāga. The great river Varuṇā which has started from the right leg of Yogaśāyī and which redeems all sins as also the sublime river Asī, which has started from his left leg are both worshipped by the whole world. The temple of Yogaśāyī is at the centre of these rivers, and that is a sacred place most important in the three worlds and annihilative of all sins. That city is the great Vārāṇasī. Even materialistic or worldly people get salvation there. It is my (Viṣṇu) āśrama. There dwells Sūrya called Lola destroying all sins. The place where Keśava my aspect lives, is Daśāśvamedha. If you go there you will get redemption from sin."

Thus directed by Viṣṇu Śiva went to Vārāṇasī and achieved absolution from the sin of Brahmahatyā by bathing in the holy tīrthas there. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 3).
(iv) Birth of Vīrabhadra. (See under Dakṣa),
(v) Water in Kālindī got dark in colour. (See under Pārvatī, Para 2).
(vi) Śiva became Nāgabhūṣaṇa. (See under Nāgāstram).
(vii) Blessed Sukeśa. Vidyutkeśa, the Rākṣasa married Sālakaṭaṅkā, daughter of Sandhyā. While they toured the world round enjoying their honeymoon Sālakaṭaṅkā conceived and delivered in due course a son in the valley of Mount Mandara. Śiva and Pārvatī, who passed that way in an aerial chariot saw the child and came down to it. By the blessing of Śiva the child grew up to a youth very quickly. Śiva named him Sukeśa and after blessing that he would grow up to become a pious soul disappeared from the scene. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
(viii) Śiva, the father of Indrajit. (See under Indrajit, Para 2).
(ix) Four faces of Śiva. (See under Tilottamā, Para 2).
(x) Sword of Śiva. Śiva holds a sword in his hand to destroy the asura tribe. The following is told in Chapter 166 of Śānti Parva about the origin of the sword.

Brahmā when he created the universe also laid down laws to keep living beings in the path of righteousness. But, the asuras did not conform to those laws. So, the maharṣis decided that there should be some other means to instruct the asuras. They conducted a Brahmayajña at the Himālayas. A terrible Jin (Evil Spirit) emerged from the sacrificial pit.

At the emergence of the Jin the earth shook; the great sea grew wild with waves and eddies. Lightning and shooting stars appeared and branches of trees were torn asunder. A vicious whirl-wind swept the ten regions. All living beings trembled at the sight of the Jin.

Brahmā appeared to the frightened maharṣis and told them that it was not a Jin, but only the sword for the destruction of the asura tribe. Śiva took the sword in his hand, and as soon as he touched it he became possessed of four hands. "Śiva, whose head touched the sun, who had the third eye and from whose mouth flames of fire emerged, who changed himself to various colours like blue, white and red, who wore deer skin with golden spots, who had on his forehead an eye as effulgent as the Sun—such Śiva took in his hands the fiery sword and raising his shield he swirled the sword in various directions."

When Śiva, who thus became terrible, walked with the sword amidst the asura army the entire asura forces were annihilated and the Devas came out victorious.

(i) Clash With Viṣṇu. Though there were differences of opinion between Śiva and Viṣṇu on many occasions, only very rarely had occurred actual clashes between the two. The Purāṇas refer to two such important clashes. One has reference to a direct fight Śiva fought with Viṣṇu and the other is about Śiva's fight with Nārāyaṇarṣi, an incarnation of Viṣṇu.

There was no reason for the direct fight between Śiva and Viṣṇu. The Devas wanted to test who was the more powerful of the two, Śiva or Viṣṇu, and they told Brahmā about the idea By carrying tales to them, one against the other, Brahmā made Śiva and Viṣṇu mutual enemies. The enmity led to a fight between the two. Viśvakarman made a bow for each of the contestants. In the fight between the two Śiva got defeated. Śiva, who got angry at his temporary defeat presented his bow and arrow to Devarāta, King of Videha. It was this bow, which Śrī Rāma broke at the wedding of Sītā in a later period. As soon as the fight was over the Devas realised that Viṣṇu was greater than Śiva. After the fight Viṣṇu gave his bow to Ṛcīka, the Bhārgava muni. Jamadagni got it from Ṛcīka, and he gave it to Paraśurāma. It was with this bow that Paraśurāma confronted Śrī Rāma on his way back after wedding Sītā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 75).

The following story is related in the Anuśāsana Parva of Mahābhārata about the fight between Nārayaṇarṣi, incarnation of Viṣṇu and Śiva.

Śiva, in great fury, threw his Śūla into the Yajña hall of Dakṣa, and the Śūla after reducing the Yajña, to ashes, hit the breast of Nārāyaṇarṣi, who was doing tapas in Badarikāśrama. Nārāyaṇa raised the sound 'Hum' as a result of which the Śūla returned to Śiva's hands, who, in great anger, rushed forward to Nārāyaṇa. Nārāyaṇa placed his hand on Śiva's throat with the result that it became dark in colour. Thenceforth Śiva came to be known as Śitikaṇṭha also.

Nārāyaṇa plucked a blade of grass and recited some mantras. It became a paraśu (axe). He threw it at Śiva, who broke it into pieces, which act gave him the additional name of Khaṇḍaparaśu also. The fighting became fierce and the world began burning. Fire refused to receive offerings made; Ṛṣis could not recollect the Vedas; Rajas and Tamas attacked Devas; the earth shook; planets became dim and dark; Brahmā fell down from his seat; sky came down; oceans got dry; the Himālayas crumbled. On the continuous appearance of such ill omens Brahmā and all the Devas came to the battlefield. Saluting Rudra Brahmā told him thus : "Oh ! Lord ! Let good happen to the world. In the interests of the welfare of the world. you would please give up arms. The Naranārāyaṇas are upholders of righteousness; they are the incarnations of the indestructible and supreme sages. I was born from their pleasure. You were born from their wrath."

On hearing these words of Brahmā Śiva cooled down.

(ii) Rendered Kāmadeva bodiless (limbless). See under Kāmadeva, Parva 4).

(iii) Bore Gaṅgā on the head. See under Gāṅgā.

(iv) Consumed Kālakūṭa. Owing to the curse of Durvāsas the Devas were subjected to symptoms of old age, and to produce amṛta (nectar) as remedy for this unfortunate development, the churning of Kṣīrābdhi (ocean of milk) was started. Vāsuki, the snake, was used as cord to rotate mount Mandara, which was used as the churning rod. When the churning became very intense, the mortal poison Kālakūṭa emerged out of Vāsuki's mouth. (Another view is held that Kālakūṭa rose out of the milk-sea). On the emergence of the deadly poison the asuras ran off in great fear, the Devas got bewildered, Bāli and Sugrīva too got frightened; and without exhibiting his fright Viṣṇu covered his face; on the whole it appeared as though the entire world would be reduced to ashes.

At this critical moment, Śiva, reputed for his reckless daring, put all the Kālakūṭa into his mouth. Frightened at it Pārvatī held Śiva's throat by her hands so that the poison did not enter his stomach. At the same time Mahāviṣṇu covered with his hands Śiva's mouth so that the poison was not spitted out. Kālakūṭa thus prevented from going down into the stomach or being vomited from Śiva's throat got itself digested in the throat giving it a blue colour. Thus did Śiva become Nīlakaṇṭha (of the blue throat). Viṣṇu and Pārvatī who were affected by the flames of the poison became Nīlavarṇa and Kālī respectively. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

(v) Destroyed Dakṣa's yajña. See under Dakṣa Para 3).

(vi) Fought Śaṅkhacūḍa. (See under Tulasī, Para 5).

(vii) Burned the Tripuras. (See under Tripura).

(viii) Fought Sūrya. Śiva once plucked out Brahmā's head (See under Kapālī 1), and Brahmā cursed Śiva that he should beg for food with that head (skull) in his hands. This fierce curse of Brahmā affected Śiva so much that, in uncontrollable wrath, he beat whomsoever he met. Thousands of Devas and others were killed. Sūrya, who relished not these atrocities of Śiva confronted him with out-stretched hands. Śiva held with one hand of his, both the hands of Sūrya from the fingers of which blood began to flow. Śiva turned Sūrya round and round by his hands with the result that the hands of Sūrya became short. When Sūrya became completely drenched in blood Śiva let him free and walked to another side when Sūrya, laughingly challenged him again to fight. Greatly enraged by the challenge Śiva fisted him on the face with the result he lost all his teeth. Also he fell down unconscious. As Sūrya fell thus Bhaga looked with fierce eyes at Śiva, who then struck the former on his face, Both the eyes of Bhaga fell down. and the Devas were alarmed by it. Then all the Ādityas, under the leadership of Indra ran off to the ten regions along with the Maruts and Agni. Only prominent asuras like Prahlāda remained on the scene. They saluted Śiva. Śiva surveyed the yāga hall, the Devas and the asuras with his three eyes. All of them then ran away to different places. Śiva looked at the three Agnis with his three eyes and they were reduced to ashes.

When Śiva's anger subsided Sūrya was installed in his former form. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 5).

(x) Made five Indras Pāṇḍavas. The Pāṇḍavas, in their former life, were Indras. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 199).

The Devas once conducted at Naimisāraṇya a lengthy yajña of which Yama was the manager. In the absence of Yama there was no death on earth. Thus, human beings also, like the Devas, became Amartyas (deathless). Alarmed at this the Devas submitted their grievance to Brahmā who pacified them by saying that Yama would return as soon as the yajña was over and then men will, as usual be subjected to the process of death. The Devas then returned to Naimiṣāraṇya, the scene of their yajña when they saw a woman, lustrous as fire, descending the steps of Gaṅgā to carry water. She was sobbing and each drop of tear that fell into the waters of the river transformed itself into a lotus flower. As deputed by the Devas Indra approached the woman to get facts from her.

Indra asked her who she was and why she was weeping. The woman answered him not, but walked in silence, to the source of the Gaṅgā. Indra followed her. When they had thus walked some distance Śiva and Pārvatī were found in the forest at a game of dice, and Indra, afraid of Śiva, ran way. But, Śiva called him back and asked him to enter the cave there. When Indra did so after removing the mountain at the entrance of the cave he saw four Indras sitting there. They were called Viśvabhuk, Bhūtadhāmā, Śibi and Śānti. The woman whom Indra had followed was Śrīdevī. Śiva blessed that the five Indras, in their next birth, would wed Śrīdevī. When the Indras saw Mahāviṣṇu after this he also blessed them, and promised them that he would incarnate and help them when they were born as men in their next life. Then Viṣṇu plucked a black and a white hair and put them on earth. The black hair was born as Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Devakī's womb and the white hair as Balabhadrarāma in the womb of Rohiṇī.

(xi) Kirātārjunīyam. Arjuna once did tapas to Śiva, who appeared to him in the garb of a hunter in the forest and presented to him the Pāśupata arrow. (For details see under Arjuna, Para 20).

(xii) Fought with Mahiṣāsura. (See under Mahiṣāsura).

(xiii) Fought with Vṛtrāsura. See under Vṛtrāsura.

(xiv) Burnt Himavān. Śiva once did tapas on the top of Himavān when Pārvatī came behind him and covered his eyes with her hands. At once darkness enveloped the whole world, and when people suffered in the absence of day-light Śiva opened his third eye. Himavān began getting burnt by the fire emitted by Śiva's eye. Pārvatī got alarmed at this and woke Śiva up. He closed his third eye and Himavān resumed its former shape. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 104).

8) Worship of Śiva. Innumerable people in India worship Śiva and they follow different forms or systems of worship. There are forms of worship which follow the Vedas and which do not as also forms which are sāttvic and which are not. The form of worship called Paraśupadam (? Pāśupatam) is a very ancient one. It is believed that the paraśupadas once honoured and afterwards opposed the Vedas. The Śiva liṅga at the place called Gūḍamillam is supposed to be as old as the second century B.C.

One of the many symbols, which represent Śiva, Śivaliṅga is the most important. They are of two kinds, the movable and the immovable. The immovable are those which appear by themselves or installed in temples. The movable are those made of earth, stone, timber, gems etc. There are also temporary liṅgas, which are placed on stools of various shapes. Liṅgas are made of he-stones and stools of 'she-stones'.

There are also various types of liṅgas indicative of the different attributes of Śiva; for example Liṅgodbhava, Candrasekhara, Raudra, Umāsahita etc. Kāmāntaka, Gajāri, Kālāri, Tripuradāhaka etc. represent the Lord in his fierce aspects. Śiva is also represented in poses of blessing Caṇḍeśa, Viṣṇu, Nandīśvara, Vighneśvara and Arjuna. He is also presented in various poses of dancing, Dakṣiṇāmūrti is represented in four forms, i.e. Vyākhyāna Jñāna, Yoga and Vīṇādhara. Bikṣāṭaka, Kapāladhārī. Gaṅgādhara, Ardhanārīśvara Vṛṣabhavāhana and Viṣabhakṣaka are other forms of Śiva. Rarely is he depicted in the form of Sadāśiva, Maheśvara, Ekādaśarudras Vidyeśvara and Mūrtyaṣṭaka. There are Āgamas descriptive of these forms.

Gaṇapati occupies the most prominent place among Devas connected with Śiva. Gaṇapati came to be worshipped from 6-7 centuries B.C. His present idols might have been made after this period.

There are many temples dedicated to Gaṇapati in South India. Chief among the idols are iṭampiri (proboscis turned to the left side) and valampiri (proboscis turned to the right side). Gaṇapati is a physical aspect of Śiva. Being the God who removes obstacles in the devotee's path, Gaṇapati is called Vighneśvara. The universe is contained in his big stomach.

Next to Gaṇapati in importance is Subrahmaṇya. He is worshipped in South India only. Kumāra, Muruka, Kārttikeya, Skanda, Ārumukha, Guha, etc. are some of his popular synonyms There are a number of Subrahmaṇya temples in Tamil Nāḍu, many of them on the tops of hills. In North India Subrahmaṇya temples are rare. But, books written during the Saṅgha period go to prove that Subrahmaṇya was worshipped in South India from very olden times. He is depicted in many postures, sitting, with six faces, with only one face, with two hands, with four hands, with wife, wearing the sacred thread etc.

Now, about Śakti idols. Śakti is the Devī closest to Śiva. In South India there are special Śakti temples called Śaktipīṭhālayas. Durgā is the most important among the manifestations of Śakti. There are idols of Durgās as standing in the lotus flower and also as mounted on the lion. Āgamas refer to nine kinds or forms of Durgā i.e. Nīlakaṇṭhī, Kṣemaṅkarī, Harasiddhi, Raudrā, Vanā, Agni, Jayā, Vindhyavāsinī, and Ripunāśinī. Durgā's most terrible form is as Mahiṣāsura-mardinī, found at Mahābalipuram, Ellora and other places. Durgā is also called Caṇḍikā and Kātyāyanī. Durgā is worshipped as Nandā, Bhadrakālī, Ambā, Rājamātaṅgī etc.

9) Śiva's life-period. Thousand Caturyugas constitute one day of Brahmā. According to the Purāṇas fourteen Indras fall dead from heaven during the life time of one Brahmā. Two such life times of Brahmā form one life time of Viṣṇu; at the end of the period he too will expire. Śiva's life time is double that of Viṣṇu, according to Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha. (For details see under Manvantara).

10) Śiva and creation of the universe. See under Creation).

11) Māyā Śiva. (See under Māyā śiva).

12) Sahasranāmas (thousand names) of Śiva. The thousand names of Śiva are mentioned mainly in Chapter 285 of Śānti Parva and Chapter 17 of Anuśāsana Parva of Mahābhārata. There are substantial differences between the two lists of names.

13) Aśvatthāmā and Śiva. (See under Aśvatthāmā Para 6).

14) Rudras. The Ekādaśarudras, viz. Mṛgavyādha, Sarpa, Nirṛti, Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Pinākī, Īśvara, Kapālī, Sthāṇu and Bharga are the sons of Śiva. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66).

15) Śivabhasma (Ashes worn by Śiva) The Purāṇas contain many references to the great power of Śivabhasman. The following story about even Viṣṇu turning out to be a devotee of Śiva on account of the sanctity of Śivabhasma is related in Chapter 101, Pātālakhaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇa.

In the beginning or during the Brahmapralaya (deluge) Mahāviṣṇu was lying in the great waters of the deluge. On both sides of Viṣṇu hundred universes each and on both sides of his feet and at the centre of his head twenty universes each remained attached. One universe glowed as a gem on Viṣṇu's nose. Maharṣis like Lomaśa did tapas seated on his navel. Meanwhile Viṣṇu sat in deep meditation ready for creation. But, he did not find anything and began, therefore, sobbing. Then appeared an extra-mundane light at which he got frightened and closed his eyes. Śiva, rotating in both his hands a garland each made of a crore of universes appeared before Viṣṇu. He then stood up and enquired of the visitor who he was. Śiva exhibited his form. Śiva told Viṣṇu that he had not attained sufficient wisdom for creation and also advised him to achieve enough knowledge by first taking the Varuṇa bath and then the Bhasma bath.

To this Viṣṇu answered by saying that there was nowhere water enough for him to bathe, and he, who was closely surrounded by universes, sat in water. But, it came only up to his thighs. Then Śiva said laughingly that there was enough water for Viṣṇu to bathe and cast a glance at him with his (Śiva) eye on the forehead and also his left eye. And, immediately Viṣṇu's body became very small and it began to shiver. Then Śiva said as follows:- "Oh! Viṣṇu ! here is deep water. you may bathe in it. But Viṣṇu could not get into the tremendous pool created on Śiva's lap. So, he requested Śiva for a passage to get into the pool. Śiva "Oh! Viṣṇu ! Before this even though you sat in water, one crore yojanas in depth, it came only up to your thighs. But, now though you are on your legs you say you cannot enter the water. Look here, the water comes only up to my thighs. You may descend into it. I shall see to it that you can step into the water. A Vedic saying I recite will serve as the step."

Viṣṇu :—Nobody can step on sound. One may ascend on what is material, i.e. with form; but, how could one step on that which is formless?

Śiva:—Why can you not get hold of that which is and ascend ? You receive this great Veda.

Viṣṇu received it, but it appeared that his hands were not strong enough to hold it. Śiva smiled at the inability of Viṣṇu and asked him to get down into water by the steps made of Veda and when Viṣṇu descended the steps into the water, it came only up to his thighs. He had his bath and then asked Śiva what he should do next. Śiva:--- "What do you feel in your mind ? Is it that you do not feel anything"

Viṣṇu:— I feel not anything.

Śiva:— If you get sanctified by bhasmasnāna you will receive the ultimate knowledge. I shall give you the bhasma.

Śiva took a pinch of bhasma from his breast and chanting the Gāyatrī and pañcākṣara (Om namaśśivāya) mantras sprinkled it all over the body of Viṣṇu. He also said to Viṣṇu, "You live, you meditate, now what do you feel in your mind?" Viṣṇu meditated whereupon he saw a very bright light in his heart. When he told Śiva that a light was being seen by him the latter said that his knowledge was not mature enough and asked him to eat some bhasma so that it might become perfect. Viṣṇu accordingly consumed the bhasma, and lo ! he, who was till then red-blue in colour became as white as pearl. He began to be called Śuklavarṇa (white in colour) from that day onwards.

Mahāviṣṇu felt happy and contented having seen Śiva, who asked the former what it was he saw in his mind just then. Answering that he saw the blissful form of Śiva before him Viṣṇu fell at the latter's feet. To Śiva's query as to what boon he desired to have, Viṣṇu replied that he wanted to become a devotee of Śiva and because of the greatness of the bhasma Viṣṇu thenceforward became a devotee of Śiva.

16) Śivaliṅga (Phallus). Worship of Śivaliṅga is a popular practice in India. The Purāṇas contain a number of stories about the importance Sivaliṅga achieved so as to make it an object of worship. Three of the more important stories are given below:

(i) Śiva wandered about the world lamenting over the death of Satīdevī at the Yajña conducted by Dakṣa, and Kāmadeva followed him with his erotic arrows to exploit Śiva's sorry predicament. During his wanderings Śiva once came to the Vindhya mountain. Kāmadeva followed him there too and began attacking Śiva with his arrows and to escape from the fierce onslaught Śiva took refuge in the terrible Dāru forest. There Maharṣis with their wives lived. Śiva saluted them and requested for alms. But, the Maharṣis only kept mum. They did not like their wives saluting Śiva. Śiva went about the āśrama and all the women except Arundhatī and Anasūyā, followed him overcome by lust for him. Enraged at this, munis like Bhārgava and Aṅgiras cursed

Śiva that his phallus should drop to the ground. Immediately it fell down and Śiva disappeared. The phallus rent asunder the earth, reached Pātāla and rent the universe also. The whole universe shook at which Brahmā met Viṣṇu at Pātāla and enquired of him the reason for the universal upheaval. Viṣṇu answered him that the world shook because of the weight of Śiva's phallus, which the maharṣis had caused to be dropped. Then Brahmā, along with Viṣṇu, came to the spot where Śiva's phallus lay. At the sight of the limitless phallus Viṣṇu, in great wonder, descended to Pātāla mounted on Garuḍa. Brahmā, on his plane, toured above. Both Viṣṇu and Brahmā returned to earth, having failed in their attempt to find the end of the phallus. They then praised Śiva, who appeared to them. They requested him to take back his phallus from the earth. Śiva insisted that he would do so only if the Devas agreed to worship his phallus. Viṣṇu agreed to the suggestion. Brahmā took the phallus, golden brassy in colour. Thereafter Mahāviṣṇu created the four castes and various śāstraic texts for each of the castes to worship the phallus. The four texts are known as Śaivam, Pāśupatam, Kāladamanam and Kāpālikam. After making the above arrangements Brahmā and Viṣṇu returned. Śiva took back his phallus. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

(ii) Eightyeight thousand Bālakhilyas were born from the mind of Brahmā. They emaciated their bodies by constant baths, fasting and worship of Śiva. Though they worshipped Śiva thus for one thousand divya years, he did not appear in front of them.

Afterwards, when Pārvatī was travelling by sky one day, the latter saw and took pity on the Bālakhilyas and told Śiva thus: "These maharṣis are suffering like anything. For my sake, you should put an end to their sufferings. Has their evil fate no end? They are reduced to mere skin and bones, and yet they are denied realisation." Smilingly Śiva told Pārvatī as follows "You do not know the real course of righteousness. These people do not understand righteousness; they are not free from lust and anger. They are mere fools." At these words of Śiva, Pārvatī told him thus: If things be as you have said please show me their nature, I feel interested. Then Śiva asked Pārvatī to remain where she was, telling her that he would go to the Bālakhilyas and show her how they behaved. Accordingly Śiva went to them.

Śiva approached the Bālakhilyas in the guise of a handsome youth, wearing the Vanamālā garland on his head, holding the alms bowl in his hands and completely in the nude and requested for alms. The Womenfolk of the Advaitins were much attracted by the handsome youth and came to him with a lot of fruits, roots etc. by way of alms. Śiva wished them good and Pārvatī espied her smiling lord from her seat.

After giving him alms the women spoke to him as follows : "Oh ! anchorite, what penance are you practising ? You have no clothes on you, but you wear Vanamālā. You are a handsome sannyāsī. If you have no objection, please tell us about you." The sannyāsī (Śiva) answered them by saying that his was a very secret penance and could not be imparted to others. Especially in the presence of so many others it could not be revealed. So, you may please go. But, the women said that they wished very much to hear the secret, and they caught hold of his hands saying 'Come'. The women were overcome by lust and one of them caught hold of his neck, another of his hands, another of his knees, another of his hair and yet another of his waist. Seeing the excitement of their wives the maharṣis cried, 'Strike him' and struck down his phallus with sticks and stones. As soon as the phallus was thus felled down, Śiva disappeared from the spot and returned to Kailāsa with Pārvatī.

When the phallus fell down the whole universe shook and the maharṣis were alarmed. A very intelligent maharṣi among them said :—"We know not the real facts about the great ascetic. Let us take refuge in Brahmā. He may know the facts." Accordingly the maharṣis went to Brahmā, who found fault with their ignorance and indiscretion and asked them to shed their anger and please Śiva. Accordingly they went to Kailāsa and praised Śiva, who appeared to them and told them as follows :—"You may now return. The phallus will belong to you. I shall be pleased if you would duly install it. Nothing will be impossible to those who worship my phallus with devotion. Even sins consciously committed will be removed by the worship of my phallus. You install the phallus you struck down in the great pond of Sannihita. That will achieve for you all your desires. Even the Devas will worship it under the name 'Sthāṇu'. Being installed at Sthāṇvīśvara it will be known as Sthāṇvīśvara also. Constant meditation upon Sthāṇu will remove all sins. The sight of Sthāṇu will bring about salvation."

After this the maharṣis, along with Brahmā, returned to Dāru forest to carry the phallus to Sannihita. But, they could not move it even by an iota. They returned again to Kailāsa, but could not see Śiva there. When Brahmā sat in meditation for sometime to know where Śiva was, he saw in his mind Śiva, in the guise of an elephant, standing in the stream praised by munis. Immediately Brahmā and others went there, but missed Śiva there. But Pārvatī appeared there and served them amṛta (nectar). When they had consumed the nectar they saw Śiva standing in the stream, and they spoke about their difficulties to him.

Śiva, in the guise of the elephant, accompanied them to the Dāru forest where he, in sport, took the phallus by his proboscis and installed it on the banks of the stream. All those who witnessed the installation attained ultimate realisation. Upon the phallus thus installed Brahmā built another phallus with stone. After a period that phallus became one with the effulgence of the first phallus. Those who saw that also achieved ultimate realisation. Immediately Brahmā built, for the pleasure of the Devas, seven phalluses one upon the other, and sages attained ultimate realisation by smearing their bodies with the dust of the phalluses. The spot where the phallus was installed became famous by the name Sthāṇutīrtha. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 45).

(iii) In the beginning Brahmā entrusted Śiva with the duty of creation and to earn the power for creation he lived under water for many generations. Śiva having not returned though Brahmā waited for him long, the latter created the prajāpatis and got done by them all creations. Then it was that Śiva, having acquired all the more power, came out of water. Śiva who got angry that all creations were effected in his absence plucked his phallus and threw it into the earth. He said that, since matters of creation had been managed by Brahmā, he needed the phallus no further. The phallus thus thrown by Śiva stuck to the earth and remained pointed upwards. Next, Śiva performed a dance of annihilation among the Devas. Ultimately, on the request of the Devas Śiva deposited his fire of wrath in water. It is that fire which dries up water in seas, rivers etc. When Śiva had shed his anger and become quiet the Devas worshipped the phallus, which had stuck to the earth, and thenceforth worship of Śiva's phallus became popular. (M.B. Sauptika Parva, Chapter 17).

17) Śivalīlās (Sports of Śiva). The Purāṇas refer to the following sixtyfour līlās (sports) of Śiva. (1) Devendra redeemed from sin. (2) Airāvata redeemed from sin. (3) Building of Madhurāpura in Kadamba forest. (4) Śrī Pārvatī born as Taṭātakā. (5) Pāṇḍyadeva wedded Taṭātakā. (6) Dance before sage Patañjali (7) Kuṇḍodara granted power to consume much rice (8) Quenched Kuṇḍodara's hunger and thirst with rice etc. and waters of river Vaigā (9) Brought the seven seas near to please his wife (10) Brought Malayadhvaja down to earth from Devaloka (11) Created the son called Ugra (12) Ugra given three weapons like śūla (13) Removed the sea from his side (14) Broke the crown of Indra (15) Ugrapāṇḍya given gold from Mahāmeru (16) Taught the maharṣis the meaning of Vedas (17) Sold gems to the King to make a crown (18) Made the clouds drink water from the ocean (19) Stopped excessive rain-fall (20) Exhibited the prowess of realisation (21) Made 'stone-elephant' eat sugar-cane (22) Killed the elephant which a Buddha sannyāsin had sent after being subjected to black magic (23) Blessed a brahmin girl (24) Did various kinds of dances (25) Brought to light and proved the death of brahmin woman (26) Annihilated the evil or sin of having slept with the mother and killed the father (27) Killed Siddha to save the wife of preceptor, who taught archery (28) Made the snakes sent by Buddha sannyāsins poisonless (29) Killed cows sent by the same sannyāsins (30) Exhibited innumerable soldiers to save the commander-in-chief of the Pāṇḍya army (31) Gave the Pāṇḍya King a money-bag, which would never become empty (32) Disguised himself as a Vaiśya and sold bangles (33) Granted aṣṭasiddhis to Yakṣīs. 18) Bull of Śiva. Cows were born on earth from Surabhi. The foam of milk which flowed like sea from cows rose into waves and fell in Śivabhūmi (Śiva land). Śiva did not like it. He opened his third eye and looked at the cows. The flames from the eye caused different colours to the cows. The cows took refuge with Candra. But, the fire of Śiva's eye followed the cows there also. At last the Prajāpatis pacified Śiva and presented him a bull for vehicle. From that day onwards Śiva came to be known as Vṛṣabhavāhana and Vṛṣabhāṅka also. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 77).

19) Other information.

(i) The son Śuka was born to Vyāsa because of the blessing of Śiva. (Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha).

(ii) During the period of emperor Pṛthu when the Devas made the earth a cow and milked resources, Śiva served as calf. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 24).

(iii) Śiva occupies a seat in Kubera's court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 21).

(iv) Śiva once presented an armour to Indra. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 61).

(v) When the battle with the Tripuras reached its climax in intensity Śiva mounted the Bull and looked at the capital of the asuras. As a result of the fiery look the breasts of cows were cut and their hoofs rent into two. The hoofs of cattle came to be cleft from that day onwards. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 105).

(vi) Living beings are kept healthy by the kindness of Śiva. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 20).

(vii) It was Śiva, who organised the penal code in the world. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 80).

(x) On the occasion when Śiva burnt Tripuras and their city to ashes they saw him as a boy with five horns. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 32).

(xi) There is a story in Śānti Parva of Mahābhārata about Śiva's bringing back to life the dead child of a brahmin. The story was told by Bhīṣma to Yudhiṣṭhira. The brahmin took his dead child to the burning ghat when a fox asked him to wait at least till dusk to see if the child would regain life. At the same time a vulture, which came there pointed out to the brahmin that the dead never came back to life and asked him to leave the dead body there and return home. As advised by the fox and the vulture the brahmin took to the burning ghat and took back from there the dead body of his child. Pārvatī took pity on the brahmin and as requested by her Śiva brought the child back to life. The logic and reasoning advanced by the fox and the vulture for their selfish ends is famous under the name Gṛdhragomāyusaṁvāda.

ŚIVAPŪJĀ (ŚIVA WORSHIP). There are certain injunctions with regard to the worship of Śiva. Nandikeśa and Mahākāla are to be worshipped first. Then should Gaṅgā, Yamunā, the gaṇas, Vāstupuruṣa, Śakti, and Dharma be worshipped. Next, the navaśaktis (nine powers) i.e. Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā, Raudrī, Kālī, Kalavikariṇī (Kalavikalinī) Balavikariṇī (Balavikalinī) Balapramathinī, Sarvabhūtadamanī and Manonmanī should be worshipped. Then chanting the mantra 'Hāṁ, hūṁ, hāṁ Śivamūrtaye' Śiva is to be worshipped. Śiva is to be worshipped with aṅgas (with limbs, touching certain portions of the body) and with Vaktra (mouth, chanting). Aṅgas are to be worshipped with the chanting, Hauṁ Śivāya hauṁ' Vaktra with the chanting 'Hāṁ Īśānāya'. Gaurī should be worshipped with the bīja 'Hrīṁ', Gaṇapati with 'Gaṁ' and Dikpālas like Indra, his arrows and Caṇḍeśvara should be worshipped by touching the heart etc. of the worshipper. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

ŚIVARĀTRĪ.

1) General. Śivarātrī is a holy day. Śivarātrī is observed on the eve of New moon day (Caturdaśī) falling in the middle of Māgha and Phālguna (February-March). During this night, penance should be done with fasting. On Caturdaśī day penance (vrata) should be observed without sleep and food and Śiva worshipped.

2) Origin. There is the following Purāṇic story about the origin of the observance of Śivarātri as a sacred day. Brahmā took his birth in the lotus that originated from the navel of Viṣṇu. Brahmā trying to know the source of the lotus saw Viṣṇu only. He asked, 'Who are you?' and was answered 'I am Viṣṇu, your father'. That answer did not satisfy Brahmā and a quarrel ensued between him and Viṣṇu which ended in fighting. Brahmā shot the Brahmāstra, which Viṣṇu countered with Pāśupatāstra and neither of the two was able to withdraw it, which went round the world. While both stood aghast not knowing what to do, Śivaliṅga appeared betwixt the two. Both the ends of the liṅga were invisible. To find the ends Brahmā went upwards and Viṣṇu downwards. Though they travelled a great distance they could not find out the ends, and, so, returned to their old seats. Immediately Śiva appeared betwixt the two and withdrew the pāśupatāstra. It was on Caturdaśī day in the month of Māgha that Śiva thus appeared. Śiva enjoined that in future Caturdaśī night every year should be observed as a holy day, which should be known as Śivarātri. (Kaṇṇaśśa Rāmāyaṇa).

3) The greatness of Śivarātri. The following story about a sinner, who attained Śivaloka by observing Śivarātri is related in Śivarātrimāhātmya.

A son named Sukumāra was born to the Brahmin manager of the king of Kuñjara, a kingdom on the banks of river Sindhu. The boy grew up to be an immoral fellow and he married a Caṇḍāla girl with whom he lived for seven years. Five daughters and two sons were born to him of the Caṇḍāla woman. The father, Sukumāra, himself married the daughters. One day he, in the course of his search for a flower to be worn on the hair of the Caṇḍāla woman, came near the Śiva temple called Nāgeśvara. A Śivarātri festival was being celebrated there that day and Sukumāra, participated in it. Shortly afterwards Sukumāra died. Messengers of Kāla and Śiva arrived to carry off his soul and a battle ensued between the two for the soul. His soul attained Śivaloka as he had, though by accident, participated in Śivarātri festival.

ŚIVAŚARMAN. A brahmin well-versed in all śāstras (sciences). Śivaśarman, who lived in Dvārakā had, by his wife Guṇavatī five sons called Yajñaśarman, Vedaśarman, Dharmaśarman, Viṣṇuśarman and Somaśarman, all of them deeply devoted to their father. The father decided to test the devotion of each of the sons.

Śivaśarman had, due to Śiva's blessing, achieved all kinds of siddhis (spiritual gifts). By the power of illusion he showed the sons their mother lying dead and all the sons wept uncontrollably. Then he asked his eldest son Yajñaśarman, to cut the dead body of his mother into pieces and throw them off. After having done so he came and saluted his father.

After bidding adieu to Yajñaśarman, who proved his devotion to his father as above, Śivaśarman called his second son Vedaśarman to him and told him thus: "I find it difficult to get on without a woman. Look, there is a beautiful woman there endowed with all qualifications. (And he created such a woman by illusion). You go and fetch her to me." Vedaśarman, after saluting his father went to the woman and requested her to become the wife of his father. But, the woman did not want to become the wife of an old man, and she told Vedaśarman that she would love him, and not his father, to have as her husband. He shuddered to be told thus, and by the power of his tapas he got down Indra and other Devas on earth and showed them to her. She then told him in indifferent tone the following: "Yes, I have seen the prowess of your tapas. But, I have nothing to do with Devas. If you want me as wife for your father, please cut off your head with your own hands for my pleasure." Vedaśarman drew his sword and very happily cut off his head and presented it to the woman. She came to Śivaśarman and requested him to accept his son's head, which he (son) had voluntarily cut off for the sake of his father.

The other sons of Śivaśarman shuddered at the sight of their brother's head. They told among themselves thus: "Our mother entered eternal Samādhi, but this brother of ours, who courted death on behalf of father is really blessed." Then Śivaśarman asked his third son Dharmaśarman to receive his brother's head. He received it and went out with it and prayed to Dharmadeva, who, on his appearance, was requested to restore Vedaśarman to life. Dharmadeva did so, and the first question asked by Vedaśarman, who returned to life as though awakened from sleep, was about the woman, whom he had brought as his father's wife. Then Vedaśarman and Dharmaśarman returned to their father, and Dharmaśarman told the father about his bringing back to life his dead brother. Though the father felt very happy about the great devotion of his son he did not answer him (son).

Śivaśarman fell into contemplation for sometime and then told his fourth son, Viṣṇuśarman as follows: "You go immediately to Indraloka and bring amṛta (nectar) for me to drink along with this woman. Nectar removes diseases. Now, this woman has no interest in me. It is only natural that young, beautiful women will feel no love towards an old man and unless I regain my youth this woman of mine may sleep with others. You, my son, should act in such a manner that I can enjoy life with this woman in all the three worlds.

As soon as he heard his father, Viṣṇuśarman, by the power of his tapas ascended to the sky and started for Indraloka. Being told about the object of his visit Indra deputed Menakā to make him withdraw from the plan. Immediately Menakā put on her best clothes and singing sweet music occupied the hanging seat in Nandanavana, and Viṣṇuśarman lost not a minute to divine the object of her presence. Without even casting a look upon her, he hurried forward. But, she jumped down from her seat, blocked his path and made enquiries about him. She also tried to make love to him. But, Viṣṇuśarman turned down her overtures of love. At this stage Indra adopted many magical tricks to frighten away the unwelcome visitor. Angered by such attempts Viṣṇuśarman got ready to destroy Devaloka along with Indra, who then begged pardon of him and handed over to him a pot full of nectar.

When Viṣṇuśarman gave the nectar to his father the latter asked him to choose any boon he wanted, and according to his request the father brought back to life Guṇavatī. Now Śivaśarman very much pleased with his sons sent the first four of them to Viṣṇuloka. He decided to live for some time more on earth with his youngest son, and he told the latter that he was going on a pilgrimage and asked him to keep the pot of nectar with him. The son kept it very carefully for ten years. Now Śivaśarman with his wife returned from pilgrimage. By magic he had become a leper, and made his wife also a leper. Somaśarman, his youngest son felt pained that his parents had fallen victims to such a fell disease and served them with meticulous care in every way. He foresaw their wants and desires and satisfied them to the full. Yet, the father lost temper with the son and used even to fist him. But, the son did not lose his temper in any manner and to the least degree. He continued to serve his parents most cheerfully.

A century was over in this manner. The parents were greatly satisfied and pleased with their son, and ultimately the father cast one more illusion on the son. After stealing away by magic the nectar from the pot, he asked the son for it. When Somaśarman looked into the pot for nectar, to his horror it was missing. But, he took the pot to his father saying to himself, 'Let there be nectar in it if I am truthful, if I have served my elders well and if I have observed pure tapas', and lo! the pot was filled with nectar.

Śivaśarman blessed his son, and by the power of his yoga ascended to Vaikuṇṭha in the company of his wife. After this Somaśarman began practising the most intense form of tapas. When the time for his death was near asuras approached him. Fear about asuras gripped him, who was in deep meditation, and as he breathed his last thinking about asuras he was born in his next life as Prahlāda, son of Hiraṇyakaśipu and got killed by Viṣṇu in the war between Devas and Asuras. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi Khaṇḍa).

ŚIVASVĀMĪ. A great poet in Sanskrit in the court of king Avantivarman, who ruled Kashmir between 854 and 884 A.D. Only one poem by him, Kapphiṇābhyudayam, composed on the model of Kirātārjunīyam, has been unearthed yet.

ŚIVODBHEDA. A sacred spot. One, who lives here taking the holy bath will derive the benefit of making a gift of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

ŚIYĀLI. A Purāṇic place in Tanjore District in South India. Indra once fled to this place in fear of the asura called Śūrapadma and did tapas there. (Skanda Purāṇa).

SKANDA. Subrahmaṇya. (For further details see under Subrahmaṇya).

SKANDAGRAHA. An evil spirit which afflicts boys up-to the age of sixteen. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Stanza 43, that this spirit is also known by the name Mātṛkāgraha or Puruṣagraha.

SKANDĀPASMĀRA. A demon derived from the body of Subrahmaṇya. This would enter the womb of pregnant women and afflict the child in the womb. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 26).

SKANDHA. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death in the sacrificial fire of the serpent sacrifice of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 18).

SKANDHĀKṢA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

ŚLEṢMAKA (M). (ŚLEṢMĀTAKAM). A forest. It was when Viśravas, the grandson of Brahmā and Kaikasī, the daughter of Sumālī were living in this forest, that Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa and Śūrpaṇakhā were born to them. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrva Kāṇḍa).

ŚLIṢṬI. Son of Dhruva. Dhruva had two children Śliṣṭi and Succhāyā by his wife Śambhu. Śliṣṭi married Succhāyā. Five sons, Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Puṇya, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas, were born to them. Ripu, the eldest of them, was the father of Cākṣuṣa Manu, according to Harivaṁśa, Chapter 2.

SMARADŪTĪ. A maid of Vṛndā, the wife of Jalandhara. (Padma Purāṇa 3 : 9).

SMṚTI. The sovereign deity of remembrance. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 64, that this goddess Smṛti had walked in front of the army of Subrahmaṇya. Smṛti was the wife of Aṅgiras. Four daughters, named Sinīvālī, Kuhū, Rākā and Anumati, were born to Aṅgiras by his wife Smṛtidevī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10).

SNĀNA. Bathing. The Purāṇas have ordered six kinds of bathing. They are Nitya snāna (daily bath), Naimittika snāna (incidental bath), Kāmya snāna (Desirable), Kriyā snāna (ceremonial), Kriyāṅga snāna (bathing only the limbs used for rites) and Malakarṣaṇa snāna (Bathing to drag out excrements). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 155).

ŚOBHANA. Son-in-law of Mucukunda. (See Para 3 under Mucukunda).

SODARYAVĀN. A chariot of Indra. The peculiarity of this chariot was that two chariot-fighters could sit and fight at the same time in this. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 12, that Indra had, sitting in this chariot, killed ninety-nine asuras (demons). This chariot passed hands from Indra to Uparicaravasu; from him to Bṛhadratha, and from this King to Jarāsandha, on whose death, Indra took possession of it again. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 48).

ṢOḌAŚARĀJAKA. The story of sixteen famous Kings related by Vyāsa to Yudhiṣṭhira who, after the death of Abhimanyu in the war became averse to fighting. The Kings were (1) Marutta (2) Suhotra (3) Paurava (4) Śibi (5) Śrī Rāma (6) Bhagīratha (7) Dilīpa (8) Māndhātā (9) Yayāti (10) Ambarīṣa (11) Śaśabindu (12) Gaya (13) Rantideva (14) Bharata (15) Pṛthu (16) Paraśurāma. (Droṇa Parva, 16 Chapters from 165).

SOMA I. A son born to fire Bhānu by his third wife Niśā, who had given birth to two sons Soma and Agni and a daughter named Rohiṇī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 15).

SOMA II. One of the eight Vasus. The eight Vasus are Āpa, Dhruva, Soma, Dharma, Anila, Agni, Pratyūṣa and Prabhāsa. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1.15).

SOMA III. A son of Jarāsandha. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that Jarāsandha had four sons named Soma, Sahadeva, Turya and Śrutaśru.

SOMĀ. A celestial maid. This celestial beauty performed a dance at the birth festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 61).

SOMA. Juice extracted from Soma creeper. It is believed that the devas accept Soma in sacrifices.

SOMADĀ. A Gandharva damsel. (For further details see under Cūlī).

SOMADATTA I. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order :—Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān-Vaivasvata Manu-Ikṣvāku-Diṣṭa-Nābhāga - Phalantana-Vatsaprīti-Prāṁśu - Pramati - Khanitra- Cākṣuṣa-Rambha- Kaninetra -Karandhama-Avikṣit-Marutta-Dama - Rājyavardhana -Sudhṛti- Nara- Kevala - Bandhumān-Vegavān - Tṛṇabindu-Alambuṣa-Viśāla-Hemacandra- Dhūmrākṣa Sṛñjaya-Sahadeva-Kṛśāśva-Somadatta.

SOMADATTA II. A King of Pāñcāla. He was the great grandson of Sṛñjaya and the grandson of Sahadeva. The father of Somadatta was Kṛśāśva. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sarga 47).

SOMADATTA III. A King of the Kuru dynasty.

1) General information. This King was the son of Bālhīka and the grandson of King Pradīpa. Three sons named Bhūri, Bhūriśravas and Śala were born to Somadatta.

2) Other details.

(i) Somadatta and his sons were present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 14).

(ii) Somadatta had participated in the royal consecration sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Chapter 34, Verse 8).

(iii) This Somadatta was present at the Svayaṁvara of Devakī. At that time there occurred a hand to hand fight between Śini and Somadatta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 114, Verse 14).

(iv) The defeat from Śini being unbearable, Somadatta did penance to get power to vanquish him and Śiva appeared before him. Somadatta made the following request :- "God ! May I be granted a son who would be powerful enough to kick down the son of Śini in his palace." Śiva granted his wish. Bhūriśravas was the son born in conformity with this boon. He grew up and defeated the son of Śini and kicked him in the palace of the King. This story occurs in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 144.

(v) Somadatta fought against Sātyaki and Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata and fell down unconscious. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 10).

(vi) In the battle which followed this, Sātyaki killed Somadatta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 162, Verse 33).

(vii) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 17, that Dhṛtarāṣṭra performed the sacrifice of giving offerings to the spirit of Somadatta.

(viii) Somadatta was one of the spirits which appeared on the surface of the Ganges when invoked by Vyāsa. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 12).

SOMADHEYA. An ancient country in east Bhārata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 10, that Bhīmasena defeated the people of this country.

SOMAGIRI. A mountain. This mountain ought to be thought of every morning and evening. (M.B, Śānti Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 33).

SOMAKA I. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 40, that all the Kṣatriyas of the Somaka dynasty are called Somakas.

SOMAKA II.

1) General information. A King of Pāñcāla. This generous King was the son of Sahadeva and the grandson of Subhāsa. In accordance with the advice of Brahmins, the King once sacrificed his son. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 128 that on completion of the sacrifice he got one hundred sons.

2) Other details.

(i) This King Somaka travelled with his priests, through the holy worlds and hell and returned. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 11).

(ii) King Somaka made offerings of cows as alms and attained heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 25).

(iii) Never had he eaten flesh in his life. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).

(iv) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 8, that this Somaka stays in the palace of Yama praising him.

SOMAKĪRTI. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99).

SOMAPA. I. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 70).

SOMAPA II. An eternal god of offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 34).

SOMAPĀ (SOMALA). One of the seven Pitṛs. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 49, that this god dwells in the palace of Brahmā.

SOMAPADA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 119, that those who bathe in the particular holy bath called Māheśvarapāda in this place will obtain the fruits of a horse-sacrifice.

SOMAŚARMĀ I. A brahmin. (See under Guṇāḍhya).

SOMAŚARMĀ II. Son of the brahmin Śivaśarmā. (For detailed story see under Śivaśarmā).

SOMĀŚRAMA. A holy place. He who visits this holy place will be praised by others. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 157).

SOMAŚRAVAS. A hermit. His father was Śrutaśravas. Once King Janamejaya approached Śrutaśravas and requested him to let him have Somaśravas as sacrificial priest. (For further details see under Śrutaśravas III).

SOMĀŚRAYĀYAṆA. An ancient holy place situated in the basin of the Gaṅgā. The Pāṇḍavas visited this holy place while they were on their way to Pāñcāla from Ekacakrā. It was in this place that Citraratha the Gandharva who had been defeated by Arjuna, had enjoyed bathing sports with girls. It was because of these two facts that Somāśrayāyaṇa became a holy place. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 3).

SOMATĪRTHA I. An ancient holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 19, that one could attain the fruits of the sacrifice of royal consecration by bathing in this holy bath.

SOMATĪRTHA II. Another ancient holy bath situated in Kurukṣetra. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 114, it is mentioned that by bathing in this holy place, one could attain the world of Candra (Moon). (See under Prabhāsa Tīrtha also).

SOMAVARCAS. An eternal god of offering to the manes. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 33).

ŚOṆĀ NADĪ. A river famous in the Purāṇas. Some important facts about this river are given below :-

(i) River Śoṇā remains in Varuṇa's assembly worshipping him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 21).

(ii) Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa crossed this river on his way from Indraprastha to Rājagṛha. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 27).

(iii) There is a sacred place called "Vaṁśagulma tīrtha" in river Śoṇā. By bathing in it one gets the benefit of Aśvamedha Yāga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 8).

(iv) River Śoṇā is regarded as the source of Agni. (M.B. Vana Parva. Chapter 222, Verse 25).

(v) Viśvāmitra, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa took rest for a night on the banks of river Śoṇā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 31st Sarga).

ŚOṆITAPURA. The capital city of Bāṇāsura. This city was protected by Śiva, Kārttikeya, Bhadrakālī, Agni and other divinities. In the battle between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Bāṇa, the former defeated all the sentries and entered the city through the northern gate. Within the fort, Bāṇa was defeated. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣinātya Pāṭha, Chapter 38 mentions that Śrī Kṛṣṇa released Aniruddha and Uṣā from their prison.

ŚOṆITODA. A Yakṣa. He remains in Kubera's assembly and worships him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 17).

ŚRADDHĀ I. A daughter born to Dakṣa Prajāpati by his wife Prasūti. Twentyfour daughters were born to them. Of them, thirteen were the wives of Dharmadeva including Śraddhā.

Dharmadeva had a son named Kāma by Śraddhā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 7).

ŚRADDHĀ II. Sūrya's daughter. She had several other names such as, Vaivasvatī, Sāvitrī, Prasavitrī etc. (For more details, see under Sāvitrī I), ŚRADDHĀ III. Wife of Vaivasvata Manu. (See under Vaivasvata Manu).

ŚRADDHĀ IV. Daughter born to Kardama Prajāpati by Devahūti. She became the wife of Aṅgiras. They had two sons, Utatthya and Bṛhaspati and four daughters, Sinīvālī, Kuhū, Rākā and Anumati. (Bhāgavata, 3rd Skandha).

ŚRĀDDHA. The offering given to Pitṛs. According to the Purāṇas Śrāddha is a very important ceremony. Here, "Pitṛs" does not mean "the souls of the dead". Pitṛs belong to a special class of gods.

ŚRĀDDHAPARVA. A sub-division of Strī Parva in Mahābhārata. It comprises Chapters 26 and 27 of Strī Parva.

ŚRADDHĀVATĪ. A city of Varuṇa. (See under Aṣṭadikpālakas).

SRAJA. An eternal god concerned with offering to the manes (Viśvadeva). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 33).

ŚRAMA. Son of Āpa, one of the Aṣṭavasus. Āpa had four sons named Vairuṇḍa, Śrama, Śānta and Dhvani. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15).

ŚRAVĀ. Son of Santa, a Maharṣi who belonged to Gṛtsamada's family. He was the father of Tamas. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 63).

ŚRAVAṆA I. A son of Murāsura. Murāsura had seven sons. They were : Tāmra, Antarīkṣa, Śravaṇa, Vasu, Vibhāvasu, Nabhasvān and Aruṇa. They were all killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

ŚRAVAṆA II. One of the twentyseven stars (nakṣatras). Those who perform Śrāddha on the day of this star will attain heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 11).

ŚRĀVAṆA. See 3rd Para under Daśaratha.

ŚRAVAṆADVĀDAŚĪ. A holy day. Observance of a fast on this day after a bath at the confluence of two rivers is believed to bring Mokṣa.

SRĀVAŚAUCA. Defilement attached to the flux due to abortion. It is ordered in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 258, how to observe this defilement. It is said that women should observe defilement for as many nights as the number of the months of pregnancy, till the flux. If the flux took place in the fourth month, defilement should be observed for three nights. If it was in the fifth month that the flux had occurred, pollution for ten days would have to be observed. This is meant for Brahmins. In the case of a Kṣatriya woman if the flux occurred in the fifth month, she has to observe defilement for four days; and five days for a Vaiśya woman, and eight days for a Śūdra woman. In the case of a Śūdra woman, if the flux is after five months, she has to observe pollution for twelve days. In this stage the father will be purified by a bath.

ŚRĀVASTA. Son of the King Śrāva. (See under Śrāva).

ŚRĀVASTĪPURA. Capital city of Śrāvasta, King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. It was named "Śrāvastīpurī" or "Śrāvastīpura" because it was built by Śrāvasta, according to Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 4.

ŚREṆIMĀN. A Rājarṣi. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 51 says that he was the rebirth of the fourth Kālakeya. The following pieces of information about this Rājarṣi are gathered from Mahābhārata :-

(i) Śreṇimān was present at the Svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 11).

(ii) He ruled over Kumāradeśa. Bhīmasena, in the triumphal march of the eastern lands, defeated Śreṇimān. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 1).

(iii) Sahadeva, in his conquest of Southern lands defeated him. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 5).

(iv) In the course of the Bhārata Yuddha, Śreṇimān was killed by Droṇa. (M. B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 35).

ŚṚGĀLA. A King of the "Strī rājya". This king had attended the Svayaṁvara of the daughter of Citrāṅgada, king of Kaliṅga. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 7)

SṚGĀLAVĀSUDEVA. See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 13, Sub Para 5.

ŚRĪBHĀNU. A son of Satyabhāmā. She had ten sons including Śrībhānu. (Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).

ŚRĪBIMBAKI. Father of Mṛgāṅkavatī. (See under Śrīdatta)

ŚRĪDATTA. Son of Kālanemi a Brāhmaṇa of Mālava land. Kālanemi and Vigatabhaya were the sons of a Brāhmaṇa named Yajñasena. After the death of their father they went to Pāṭalīputra for education. The teacher gave his two daughters in marriage to them. By the blessing of goddess Lakṣmī, Kālanemi became rich in course of time and he was also blessed with a glorious son. Since he was given by the blessing of Lakṣmī (Śrī) he was named Śrīdatta.

Śrīdatta grew up and became an expert in archery. Kālanemi's younger brother, Vigatabhaya left home and went on a pilgrimage after his wife's death by snake-bite. Kālanemi's king, Vallabhaśakti was pleased with Śrīdatta and invited him to live in the palace. In this way, he became the intimate friend of the king's son, Vikrama Śakti. After that, Bāhuśāli and Vajramuṣṭi, the princes of Avantī became the friends of Śrīdatta. Mahābala, Vyāghrabhaṭa, Upendrabala and Niṣṭhūraka, who were the Minister's sons, also sought the protection of Śrīdatta.

One day, Śrīdatta along with Vikramaśakti and other companions went to bathe to the banks of the Gaṅgā. While they were there, the party of friends began to engage in some amusements. Śrīdatta assumed the role of a king and the others posed as his subjects. Vikramaśakti, the king's son, could not tolerate it. He challenged Śrīdatta for a fight. In the fight Vikramaśakti was defeated. But he secretly resolved to kill Śrīdatta by hook or by crook. Srīdatta understood his secret plan.

After leaving Vikramaśakti, Śrīdatta was walking with the others along the river-bank when he saw a woman struggling for life because she was caught in a whirlpool in the middle of the river. Śrīdatta at once left his companions and jumped into the river and swam up to her. When he was almost within reach of her hair the woman sank into the water. Śrīdatta also sank and followed her, but after some time, he found neither the woman nor even water. He found himself in a Śiva temple. He offered worship there and took rest in a park close by. The next morning a woman came to worship in the temple. When she returned after worship, Śrīdatta followed her. The woman who was alarmed, walked faster and at last reached a heavenly abode. She entered the house and took her seat on a cot inside. Śrīdatta also got in and sat near the cot. Many other women came and stood around her. Without any apparent reason she began to cry. Śrīdatta who was puzzled, asked her why she was crying. She replied to him in the following words :—

"I am the grand-daughter of the Asura king, Mahābali. I am the eldest of his one thousand grand-daughters. My name is 'Vidyutprabhā'. Viṣṇu has captured and imprisoned our grandfather, Mahābali. He has also killed our father in battle. After that he has expelled us all from our Capital city. To prevent us from entering it again, he has posted a lion as sentry at the palace gate. That lion is a Yakṣa who was cursed by Kubera. If any one defeats him, he would be liberated from his curse. By defeating that lion, you will get a divine sword. With that you can defeat anyone." As soon as he heard this story, Śrīdatta rushed towards the lion. In the fight that followed, the lion was defeated and it was suddenly transformed into the old Yakṣa. Pleased with the hero who was instrumental in lifting his curse, he gave Śrīdatta a sword called "Mṛgāṅkaka" and then disappeared. Vidyutprabhā entered the palace, accompanied by her sisters and Śrīdatta. She gave a ring to Śrīdatta which had the power to destroy the effects of poison. She fell in love with him. She asked him to take a bath in the tank close by after giving the sword to her, and undertook to kill any crocodile which might attack him. Śrīdatta, keeping the sword in his own hand, stepped into the water and sank into it. But he rose up in the river Gaṅgā into which he had jumped earlier. He reached the bank of the river and went in search of his companions. On the way, he met with Niṣṭhūraka. In the course of their talk, Niṣṭhūraka informed Śrīdatta that, Vallabhaśakti passed away and Vikramaśakti was then ruling over the country. The new king had killed Kālanemi and was on the look-out for murdering Śrīdatta. Both of them resumed their journey and when they reached Ujjayinī, they met with the rest of their friends. On their way, a woman joined their party. She had lost her way while going to the land of Mālava. Śrīdatta and Niṣṭhūraka walked in the company of that woman and at last they arrived at a deserted city. They spent the night in that city. During the night when Śrīdatta happened to wake up, he saw to his horror, that the woman had killed his friend Niṣṭhūraka and was eating his flesh. Śrīdatta at once drew his sword and caught hold of her hair and was about to cut off her head when she was transformed into a Rākṣasa woman. She prayed to him not to kill her and told him her story. She had become a Rākṣasa woman by a curse. Long ago Viśvāmitra did tapas to obtain Kubera's place. At that time Kubera sent her to break Viśvāmitra's tapas. Since she failed in her attempts to attract him by her charms, she tried to subdue him by assuming the form of a terrible monster. The sage thereupon cursed her to become a Rākṣasa woman with that figure. He declared that the curse would be lifted when Śrīdatta grasped her hair. She added that she had been killing and eating the inhabitants of that city for a long time and that explained why the city had become deserted. Now that she was liberated from the curse, she asked Śrīdatta what boon he wished to have.

He replied that he only wanted his friend to be restored to life. After reviving Niṣṭhūraka, she disappeared. Early next morning they reached Ujjayinī. There, they met their old friends, Bāhuśālī and others. Śrīdatta described to them his experiences after sinking in the Gaṅgā.

Later, once when Śrīdatta went to a festival, he happened to meet Mṛgāṅkavatī, daughter of a King named Śrībimbaki. They fell in love with each other. When she left the place, Śrīdatta felt very much depressed. Bāhuśālī and others also knew about it. They offered to take him to Mṛgāṅkavatī. But just then she fell down unconscious, bitten by a snake. Śrīdatta soon restored her with the help of the magic ring which Vidyutprabhā had given him earlier. After that he returned with his friends to Bāhuśālī's house, leaving behind the ring with Mṛgāṅkavatī. The King who was deeply grateful for the cure of his daughter sent plenty of wealth and gold to Śrīdatta. But Śrīdatta gave all of them to Bāhuśālī's father. He was always doting on Mṛgāṅkavatī and was much pained at his separation from her. At this stage, the princess's favourite maid came to him on the pretext of returning the magic ring and informed him that Mṛgāṅkavatī was also pining for him and was even prepared to die for his sake. Śrīdatta sent her back with a secret message of love and cheer. After that in consultation with his friends he made a plan to take the princess secretly to Mathurāpurī. On the next day, Bāhuśālī with three of his friends left for Mathurā pretending to go there for trade. He made all arrangements on the way for the secret conveyance of the princess. That night, Śrīdatta sent a woman and her daughter to the palace after making them senseless with heavy drink and arranged for their sleeping there. As directed by Śrīdatta, Bhāvanika set the palace on fire and slipped out of the building with the princess. Śrīdatta sent them at once to Mathurāpurī. The woman and her daughter who were burnt alive in the palace were supposed to be the maid and the princess. Śrīdatta set out to Mathurā to meet Mṛgāṅkavatī. On the way he saw several evil omens. On arrival at Vindhyavana, he saw his friends lying helpless, after having been severely beaten up by unknown enemies. They informed him that a stranger leading a powerful army overpowered them and galloped away on horseback, taking the princess with him.

Śrīdatta immediately started in pursuit of the unknown enemy. Shortly after, he caught sight of the army led by a Kṣatriya prince who was taking Mṛgāṅkavatī on horseback with him. After a fierce fight, Śrīdatta rescued the princess from the youth, captured his horse and rode on it with her towards his friends. When they had gone a short distance, the horse which had been wounded in the battle, fell dead on the way. At that time he went in search of water to quench their thirst, leaving Mṛgāṅkavatī at the spot. By the time he returned with water, the sun had set. So he lost his way and wandered about in the forest till day-break when he reached the place where he had left Mṛgāṇkavatī. But she was not seen anywhere there. To get a better view of the neighbourhood in the hope of finding her, he climbed to the top of a tree near by, after placing his sword on the ground. Just then a hunter named Śabara came that way and took up Śrīdatta's sword. Śrīdatta saw this, but he got down from the tree and instead of attacking him, merely asked him whether he knew about the whereabouts of Mṛgāṅkavatī. To this Śabara said that he thought that she had reached his cottage and asked Śrīdatta to accompany his followers to the cottage. He also offered to go with him and promised to return his sword after reaching there.

Śrīdatta reached the cottage with them. Being utterly exhausted, he fell into a deep slumber. When he woke up he found that his legs were chained together. While he was lying thus, a woman named Mocanikā approached him and said:—"Why did you come here to court death? Śabara has now gone out on some business. As soon as he returns he will offer you as a sacrifice to Bhadrakālī. It is for that purpose that he has brought you here and put in chains. But there is yet one way of escape for you. This Śabara has a very beautiful daughter. She has fallen in love with you. If you marry her everything will turn out well."

For his own safety, Śrīdatta married Śabara's daughter according to the Gāndharva method. Shortly after, she became pregnant. Her maid Mocanikā informed her mother all about it. That kind and affectionate mother came to Śrīdatta and said :—"Śabara is a very cruel man. If he comes to know of this, he will never forgive you. Therefore you must leave the place at once, but you should never forget my daughter." With these words she took leave of him. Śrīdatta disclosed the story of that sword to her and started on his journey again, in search of Mṛgāṅkavatī. From a hunter whom he happened to meet on the way, he came to know that she was living in a place called Nāgasthala near Mathurā, under the protection of Viśvadatta a Brāhmaṇa.

Śrīdatta at once went to Viśvadatta's house and made enquiries about his wife. Viśvadatta informed him that he had entrusted her with a Brāhmaṇa who was the minister and priest of King Śūrasena. He suggested that Śrīdatta should stay with him that day and they could proceed to Śūrasena's place next morning.

Śrīdatta accordingly stayed there and started for Mathurā at day-break on the next day. On the way he took bath in a tank just outside the city. While bathing he happened to get a silk cloth and a necklace of beads from the bed of the tank. After his bath, he entered the city with the silk and necklace. Mistaking him for a thief, the police arrested him. Really the silk and necklace had been hidden in the tank by thieves. Śrīdatta was produced before the King with the stolen articles. The king condemned him to death. Mṛgāṅkavatī who was staying in the custody of the minister happened to see Śrīdatta being taken to the place of execution. She immediately ran up to the minister and told him that Śrīdatta was her husband. When the King came to know it, he ordered him to be brought back to the palace. As soon as Śrīdatta saw the minister, he felt certain doubts about his identity. The minister had a striking resemblance to his father's brother Vigatabhaya who had left home years ago. His doubts were confirmed when the minister revealed his identity and the two embraced each other after their long separation. Śrīdatta narrated the whole story of his sufferings and misfortunes beginning from the murder of Kālanemi up to that time. On hearing his tragic story, the minister burst into tears and told him that he had received a boon from a Yakṣī by which he had obtained 5000 horses and plenty of wealth. All this he gave to Śrīdatta and his wife.

The king of that country had a daughter. Śrīdatta's next plan was to marry her also. Vigatabhaya gave him the necessary help. The minister took her with Śrīdatta and his friends on the pretext of offering worship at the temple in Avantī. They had to encounter a band of robbers on the Vindhya mountain. Śrīdatta was overpowered and the robbers plundered all their wealth. Vigatabhaya and others were captured. Śrīdatta was taken to be sacrificed to Bhadrakālī. When he was about to be sacrificed, his wife, the daughter of Śabara arrived there with her son. It was within the territory of Śrīcaṇḍa. She stopped the robbers from performing the sacrifice and returned to her own house with Śrīdatta. The Caṇḍāla band took Vigatabhaya and others to Śrīdatta and they were released. After the death of King Śabara, Śrīdatta became the King of that wood. He got back his sword Mṛgāṅkaka. He married the daughter of Śūrasena. Śrīdatta's friends also came there. All of them joined together and killed Vikramaśakti in a battle. After that Śrīdatta was crowned king of the whole country up to the ocean. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Taraṅga 2).

ŚRĪDEVĀ. Daughter of King Devaka. This princess was married by Vasudeva. They had six sons including Nandaka. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 1. 18), ŚRĪDHARA. A king who lived in Tretāyuga. (For more information see under Varatanu).

ŚRĪKUṆḌA. A holy place. If one worships Brahmā at this holy place famous in the three worlds, one would get the benefit of the gift of a thousand cows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 85).

ŚRĪKUṆḌALA. Son of the Vaiśya Hemakuṇḍala. (See Para 2 under Yamunā).

ŚRĪKUÑJA. A Sarasvatī tīrtha situated in Kurukṣetra. By bathing in this tīrtha, one gets the same reward as by performing an Agniṣṭoma yajña. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 105).

ŚRĪMADBHAGAVADGĪTĀ PARVA. A sub-division of Bhīṣma Parva in Mahābhārata. Chapters 13 to 42 of Bhīṣma Parva, are included in it.

ŚRĪMĀN. Son of Nimi, who was the son of Dattātreya.

ŚRĪMĀTĀ. An aspect of Devī who incarnated to kill the Rākṣasa named Karṇāṭaka who used to abduct the wives of Maharṣis in the disguise of a Brāhmaṇa. (Skanda Purāṇa, 3:2: 16-18).

ŚRĪMATĪ I. A Gandharva maid. In Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa there is a story associating this Gandharva maid with the churning of the ocean of milk:-

A Gandharva maid named Śrīmatī who had acquired incomparable proficiency in music used to sing hymns in praise of Lakṣmīdevī. Devī appeared before her and presented a garland of Kalpaka flowers to Śrīmatī. As she was returning with the garland, she met sage Durvāsas on the way. She offered the garland to him. Durvāsas who reached Devaloka with the garland gave it to Indra. Indra used it for adorning the tusk of Airāvata. Airāvata who was annoyed at it threw it away in a fury. Durvāsas took it as a personal insult to him and in his rage cursed all the gods to be subjected to the infirmities of old age. It is to save them from the effects of old age that the ocean of milk was churned to obtain Amṛta. (For more details see under Amṛta).

ŚRĪMATĪ II. A woman follower of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 3).

ŚRĪPARVATA. A sacred mountain. Those who go to this mountain and offer worship to Śaṅkara after bathing in the forest rivers get the same reward as from an Aśvamedhayāga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 18).

ŚRĪ RĀMA. See under Rāma.

ŚRĪ RĀMAKṚṢṆA PARAMAHAṀSA.

A great thinker who shed new light on Indian spiritual philosophy. He was born on February 18, 1836 in a village called Kumārpukkūr. His father was Khudirām Caṭṭopādhyāya and his mother was Candrādevī.

ŚṚṄGERĪ. A Maṭh was founded here by Śaṅkarācārya. (See under Śaṅkarācārya).

ŚṚṄGĪ. The young sage who cursed Parīkṣit. (See the 3rd para under Parīkṣit).

SṚÑJAYA I.

1) Genealogy. See under Somadatta.

2) General information. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. His father was Śviti. This king Śviti was also called Śvitya King. On the death of his father Sṛñjaya became king.

The hermits Nārada and Parvata were friends of Sṛñjaya. Once both of them came and lived in the palace of the King as his guests. Sṛñjaya had a beautiful daughter named Śucismitā. Both Nārada and Parvata loved her. One day Nārada directly asked Sṛñjaya, for the hand of his daughter. Parvata got angry at this and cursed Nārada that he would not attain heaven. Nārada retorted with the same curse. Sṛñjaya pacified both.

Sṛñjaya had no sons. He informed the hermits of this sad state. Nārada blessed the king and said that a son named Suvarṇaṣṭhīvī would be born to him and that with his birth everything in the palace would become gold. Accordingly the son Suvarṇaṣṭhīvī was born to Sṛñjaya and everything in the palace became golden. When the son became four years old, by the sorcery of Indra the child died. Nārada brought him to life again. (See under Suvarṇaṣṭhīvī).

The fact that gold was accumulating in the palace of Sṛñjaya due to the boon given to Suvarṇaṣṭhīvī, reached the ears of robbers. One night they carried the child away, and killed him. Then only did they come to understand that there was no gold inside him. Sṛñjaya cried aloud at the loss of his son. To pacify the King, Nārada and Parvata told him stories of sixteen kings. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 55).

3) Other details.

(i) Sṛñjaya sits in the palace of Yama, praising him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15).

(ii) When Nārada told the King the stories of sixteen Kings, his sorrow subsided. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 71, Stanza 4).

(iii) By the power of Nārada Sṛñjaya's son was brought to life again. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 8).

(iv) Śrī Kṛṣṇa told Dharmaputra the story of Sṛñjaya, with a view to pacify him. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 29).

(v) Sṛñjaya had never eaten flesh in his life. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).

SṚÑJAYA II. A royal hermit. This royal hermit was the father of the mother of Ambā, the princess of Kāśī, and a friend of Paraśurāma. At the request of Ambā who had been forsaken by Sālva, Sṛñjaya first approached Paraśurāma and then saw Bhīṣma and persuaded him to marry Ambā. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 175, Stanzas 15 to 27).

SṚṢṬI (CREATION). The Indian theory of creation is given below:

1) Triguṇas (The three attributes). The base of the universe is the set of the three attributes. They are Sattva (purity), Rajas (passion) and Tamas (inertia). Only things which could be seen, possess these three attributes. Things which could be seen are perishable. The indestructible could not be seen. Shape or form is an attribute. God has no form. So god is without attributes. The God devoid of attributes can be realised by knowledge, but cannot be seen with the ordinary eyes. The three attributes have a power each. Knowledge is the power of Sattva, activity, the power of Ṛajas and reason the power of Tamas.

2) The five elements. From the divine power of Tamas, five senses came into being, such as sound, touch, form, taste and smell. Sound is the attribute of ether; touch, the attribute of air; form, the attribute of fire; taste, the attribute of water; and smell, the attribute of earth. These are the minute senses or essentials. These five senses having the divine powers, joined together with the five minute essentials, make up the attribute of Tamas.

From the attribute of Sattva having the power of knowledge, the ten essentials, such as air, the Sun, Pāśī (Varuṇa) two Aśvinī-gods, Candra (Moon), Brahmā, Rudra, Kṣetrajña and mind, came into being. From these essentials the formation of five matters took place. They are the five elements. When vigour enters the quintupled elements, egoism is given a form. This vigour with perceptible body is called Ādi Nārāyaṇa (Primordial Nārāyaṇa). Anyhow, quintupled elements will be bright with firm attributes. Ether has the attribute of sound only. Air has the attributes of sound and touch. Fire has the three attributes of sound, touch and form. Water has the four attributes of sound, touch, form and taste, and earth has the five attributes of sound, touch, form, taste and smell. The variegated expression of these five elements is called the universe. It is stated in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 3, that the number of species of living beings found in the universe is eightyfour lakhs.

3) The embodied three (Trinity). It has been mentioned in the last section how the three attributes came into existence and how the five elements originated from the three attributes and how vigour or energy acted upon the five elements and Ādi Nārāyaṇa or Viṣṇu came into being. In this section the birth of the three divine figures is being dealt with.

In the known beginning, on the surface of the wide waters, covering the universe made of the five elements, Mahāviṣṇu lay on a banyan tree, as a child. "Who am I ? How was I made, and what for ? What have I to do ?", and so on were the thoughts of the child. Instantly a voice from the ether fell into his ears saying, "I am everything. There is nothing eternal except me." Mahāviṣṇu lay contemplating on the voice he heard, when Mahādevī appeared before Mahāviṣṇu and said thus :—"Lo ! Mahāviṣṇu ! Whenever the universe required creation, preservation and destruction, by the potentiality of the Omnipotence or the Brahman with no attributes, you too had taken origin. Understand that the Omnipotence is beyond attributes. We all are within the purview of attributes. Your attribute mainly is Sattva. From your navel, will be born Brahmā with Rajas as his main attribute and from the forehead of that Brahmā, Śiva with Tamas as his main attribute will be born. By the power of penance, Brahmā will acquire the power of creation and with the help of the attribute of rajas, he will create a world of the colour of blood. You will be the protector and preserver of that world, and at the end of the Kalpa (world-age) Śiva will destroy that world. I am that power of purity, which stands as help and assistance to you in creation." Accordingly, Brahmā was born from the navel of Viṣṇu and Śiva was born from the forehead of Brahmā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

4) Creation. Sprouts, Animals and Humanity. After the birth of the Trinity, while Brahmā was contemplating on creation, some creations of the attribute of Tamas originated from him unknowingly. It was Avidyā (Ignorance), having inertia, desire, great desire, darkness and great darkness as its five branches. That god continued his contemplation. Then five kinds of immovables without the power of knowledge or brightness in and out alike, and with souls covered with darkness, originated. As these immovables are said to be prominent, the creation of them is called prominent creation. These are called Sprouts (Udbhids). Seeing that this creation was not sufficient, the god again sat in contemplation. This time animals having horizontal back bones and organs of sense were created. They were called tiryaksrotas, as they walked horizontally. They, such as cow etc. are having more of the attributes of darkness and less of knowledge. They traverse wrong paths due to lack of knowledge though they think otherwise. Egoism, pride and twentyeight kinds of incapacities are their qualities. Though they possess knowledge inwardly they do not know each other. Thinking that this creation also was not sufficient, Brahmā again engaged himself in contemplation, and there came out another creation. It was called 'Ūrddhvasrotas' (flowing upwards). This third creation having the attribute mainly of Sattva moved in a lofty level. Those who were born in this creation, desired for comfort and pleasure and were with the light of knowledge inwardly and outwardly. When the third creation called Devasṛṣṭi (creation of gods) originated from Brahmā he grew happy and contented.

Even after creating thus much, Brahmā did not feel satisfaction. So he made the creation of 'Arvāksrotas' (moving downwards). The creatures of this group were having the attributes of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas in an advanced degree. So they are miserable and full of activity. They are human beings.

Thus having completed the creation of Udbhids (Sprouts), Tiryaks (animals) and Arvāks (human beings) Brahmā passed on to the creation of heavenly beings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1; Chapter 5).

5) Creation. Night, Day, Evening, Morning. After this Brahmā again sat in contemplation for water-creation which is the creation of Devas, Asuras, Pitṛs and Manuṣyas (Gods, Demons, the Manes and Man). As he was sitting in contemplation, the attribute of Tamas (inertia) advanced in him and the asuras (demons) were born from his loins. Then Brahmā discarded the figure of Tamas in him. That discarded figure of darkness became the night. Next, from the face of Brahmā, the Devas (gods) were born. They were having the attribute of Sattva (purity). Brahmā discarded that figure of purity also. That figure became the bright day. So the asuras are powerful in the night and the Devas are powerful in the day. After this, the manes were born from Brahmā. They were also discarded. They became the evening between the day and night. Then Brahmā assumed the figure having the attribute of Rajas. From this, man, who was having more of the attribute of rajas was born. Brahmā discarded that figure also. It became a very shining thing which is called the Dawn. So men are powerful in the dawn and the manes are powerful in the evening. The four creations of Day, Night, Evening and the Dawn are considered to be the bodies of Brahmā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 5).

6) Creation. Rākṣasas (Giants), Yakṣas (Demi-gods), Serpents, Devils, Gandharvas. Brahmā again assumed another figure having the attribute of Rajas. Due to this Brahmā felt hungry. Along with hunger desire also grew in him. Then the Prajāpati (Lord of Emanation) sat in the darkness and created some creatures which were very hungry. Uncouth with plenty of hair on the face, they ran towards Brahmā. Of them those who said, 'don't do so, save him' became Rākṣasas (giants). Those who said "We will eat him", became Yakṣas. (demi-gods). Because of Yakṣaṇa (Bhakṣaṇa-Food), they got the name Yakṣa. Because of the dislike at seeing these creatures the hair had fallen from the head of Brahmā. They crept back again into his head. Because they did 'sarpaṇa' (creeping up) they were called sarpas (serpents) and as they were 'Hīna' (fallen) they were called Ahis (serpents). After this the Lord of creation became very angry and created some creatures. Because of their colour which was a mingling of red and black, they were horrible and they became piśitāśanas (those who eat flesh). Then Brahmā began to sing and from his body the Gandharvas were born. Because they did 'dhayana' (Appreciate) of 'go' (word) when they were born, they were called Gandharvas.

7) Creation. Birds, animals. After creating all these creatures, Brahmā created birds, from his 'vayas' (strength), as free agents, according to their actions in the previous lives. Then Brahmā created sheep from his breast and goats from his face. From his stomach and flanks he created cows, and from his legs he created other creatures such as the horse, elephant, donkey, wild bull, deer, camel, mule, antelope etc. He created plants bearing fruits and bulbs from his hairs. Though Brahmā had created vegetables and animals at the beginning of the Kalpa (world-age), they came to be properly used in sacrifices only from Tretāyuga (one of the four ages) The animals such as the cow, sheep, goat, horse, mule and donkey are called domestic animals and flesh-eaters such as the leopard, animals with forked hoof such as the wild bull, elephant, monkey, birds, and other animals and reptiles, are included in the word 'wild animals'.

8) Creation-The Vedas etc. After having completed creation of the things mentioned above, the Prajāpati created from his face looking to the east, the Vedic metre Gāyatrī, Ṛgveda, Trivṛtstoma, the sāma song called Rathantara and the sacrifice called Agniṣṭoma; from his face looking to the south, Yajurveda, the Vedic metre Traiṣṭubha, Pañcadaśa stoma. Bṛhatsāma and the sacrifice Uktha; from his face looking to the west, Sāmaveda, the Vedic metre Jagatī, Saptadaśastoma, Vairūpasāma and the sacrifice Atirātra. Thus all the creatures lofty and lower originated from the body of Brahmā. After having created Devas, Asuras, the manes and men, Brahmā again at the beginning of the world age, created Yakṣas, Devils, Gandharvas, celestial maids, Naras, Kinnaras, Rakṣas, cows, birds, animals, serpents etc. such as have long life and short life, movable and immovable, that we see in the world. Creatures which are created again and again do perform functions which creatures of their kind had been doing previously. Habits of killing or not killing, kindness or cruelty, righteousness or evil, truth or falsehood are adopted by them as becoming to their kind in previous lives. It was Brahmā who had created the uses and differences seen in the sense organs, elements and bodies. Brahmā took from the Vedic voice the shape, form, name, activities etc. of various creatures such as the Devas etc. and allotted them to each particular kind. So also he allotted names, work etc. to hermits as seen in the Vedas.

9) Creation of the four castes. See under Cāturvarṇya.

10) Creation of Prajāpatis. When Brahmā saw that the subjects he had created, did not flourish, he created first the Sanaka brothers and the mental sons of Bhṛgu, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Aṅgiras, Marīci, Dakṣa, Atri and Vasiṣṭha, and gave these nine the name Prajāpatis (Lords of Emanation). Then he created nine women named Khyāti, Bhūti, Sambhūti, Kṣamā, Prīti, Sannati, Ūrjā, Anasūyā. and Prasūti and gave in marriage Khyāti to Bhṛgu, Bhūti to Pulastya, Sambhūti to Pulaha, Kṣamā to Kratu, Prīti to Aṅgiras, Sannati to Marīci, Ūrjā to Dakṣa, Anasūyā to Atri and Prasūti to Vasiṣṭha. The great hermits such as Sanandana and the others created before the Prajāpatis, were not desirous of propagation as they were wise sages who had renounced all attachments and who had been indifferent. When Brahmā saw that they were not mindful about producing subjects he grew angry. (It was from the middle of the eye brows which were curved by his fury, that Śiva, one of the three divine figures was born). After this, Brahmā appointed Svāyambhuva, who originated from himself, and was of the same shape, as the first Manu for the protection of the subjects. This divine Manu Svāyambhuva took his sister Śatarūpā as wife. Two sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and two daughters named Prasūti and Ākūti were born to them. Of the two daughters Prasūti was given to Prajāpati Dakṣa and Ākūti to Prajāpati Ruci. A son named Yajña and a daughter named Dakṣiṇā were born as twins to Prajāpati Ruci. Twelve sons were born to Yajña by Dakṣiṇā. They were devas named the Yamas of the Manvantara of Svāyambhuva. Dakṣa begot twentyfour daughters of Prasūti. They were Śraddhā, Lakṣmī, Dhṛti, Tuṣṭi, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Buddhi, Lajjā, Vapus, Śānti, Siddhi, Kīrti, Khyāti, Satī, Sambhūti, Smṛti, Prīti, Kṣamā, Santati, Anasūyā, Ūrjā, Svāhā and Svadhā. Of these the first thirteen were given to Dharmadeva as wives. Of the remaining daughters, Khyāti became the wife of Bhṛgu, Satī, the wife of Śiva, Sambhūti of Marīci, Smṛti, of Aṅgiras, Prīti of Pulastya, Kṣamā of Pulaha, Santati of Kratu, Anasūyā of Atri, Ūrjā of Vasiṣṭha, Svāhā of Agni, and Svadhā of the manes. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1; Chapter 7).

11) The children of the Prajāpatis. To Prajāpati Bhṛgu, Lakṣmī who became the wife of Viṣṇu and two sons named Dhātā and Vidhātā were born by Khyāti. These two married Āyati and Niyati the two daughters of Meru. To the two couples two sons named Prāṇa and Mṛkaṇḍu were born. From Mṛkaṇḍu, Mārkaṇḍeya was born, and from Mārkaṇḍeya, Vedaśiras was born. To Prāṇa a son named Dyutimān and to him a son named Rājavān was born. From this Rājavān the Bhṛgu dynasty grew up.

Sambhūti the wife of Marīci gave birth to a son named Paurṇamāsa. To Aṅgiras four daughters named Sinīvālī, Kuhū, Rākā and Anumati were born by Smṛti. Three sinless sons named Candra, Durvāsas and Dattātreya were born to Atri by Anasūyā. Of them Dattātreya was a hermit. A son named Dattoli was born to Pulastya by Pratīti (Prīti). That Dattoli was the Agastya of Svāyambhuva Manvantara. Kṣamā the wife of Pulaha gave birth to three sons named Kardama, Urvarīyān and Sahiṣṇu. Santati the wife of Kratu, gave birth to sixty thousand hermits called Bālakhilyas. Seven sons named Rajas, Gotra, Ūrdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Śukra were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Ūrjā. These sons were the seven hermits of the third Manvantara. Three bright sons Pāvaka Pavamāna and Śuci were born to god Agni (fire) by his wife Svāhā. Fortyfive sons were born to them. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10).

12) Creation—Living things. Creations of Sprouts, animals, Men, Devas, Dānavas and so on have been dealt with. But all these creations were pertaining to the world of gods only. Sprouts and animals were born in the earth only from Prajāpati Kaśyapa, the son of Marīci.

Prajāpati Kaśyapa married Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Manu and Analā, the eight daughters of Dakṣa. From Aditi, the Devas, Ādityas, Vasus and the Rudras were born. Daityas were born from Diti and Dānavas from Danu. The asuras Naraka and Kāla were born to Kālikā. Five daughters named Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī were born to Tāmrā. Owls were born from Krauñcī. Bhāsī gave birth to the Bhāsas. Hawks and Vultures were born from Śyenī; Swans, geese and ruddy geese were born from Dhṛtarāṣṭrī. Natā was born from Śukī and Vinatā was born from Natā. Ten daughters named Mṛgī, Mṛgamandā, Harī, Bhadramatā, Mātaṅgī, Śārdūlī Śvetā, Surabhi, Surasā and Kadrū, were born to Krodhavaśā. Mṛgī gave birth to animals. From Mṛgamandā, bears, young deer and Bos grunniens were born. Lions and monkeys were the sons of Harī. A daughter named Irāvatī was born to Bhadramatā. Airāvata was the son of Irāvatī. Elephants were born from Mātaṅgī. Tigers were born from Śārdūlī. The eight elephants supporting the globe were born from Śvetā. Two daughters named Rohiṇī and Gandharvī were born to Surabhi. Cattle were born from Rohiṇī, and horses were born from Gandharvī. Surasā gave birth to Nāgas (serpents) and Kadrū gave birth to Uragas (reptiles). Men were born from Manu. The trees were born from Analā. Garuḍa and Aruṇa were born from Vinatā. Sampāti and Jaṭāyu were the sons of Aruṇa. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

(Facts about creation seen in various Purāṇas do not agree with each other. This essay is based on facts gathered from various Purāṇas. So disagreements may occur in it.)

ŚRUTA I. Son of Bhīmasena. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ŚRUTA II. A King of the Solar dynasty. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha refers to him as the son of Subhāṣaṇa and father of Jaya.

ŚRUTA III. A King belonging to Bharata's dynasty. He was the son of Dharmanetra and father of Dṛḍhasena. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚRUTA IV. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Kālindī. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

ŚRUTADHVAJA. A brother of King Virāṭa. He was a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. Virāṭa's brothers were—Gajānīka, Śrutānīka, Vīrabhadra, Sudarśana, Śrutadhvaja, Balānīka, Jayānīka, Jayapriya, Vijaya, Labdhalakṣa, Jayāśva, Rathavāhana, Candrodaya and Kāmaratha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 41).

ŚRUTADEVA. A devotee of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. In Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha it is stated that once he had described the story of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

ŚRUTADEVĪ. A sister of Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Vasudeva had five sisters who were:—Māninī, Pṛthā, Śrutadevī, Śrutakīrti and Śrutaśravas. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚRUTĀHVA. A King who was on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Aśvatthāmā at the Bhārata battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 82).

ŚRUTAKARMĀ I. Son of Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas.

Other details:

(i) Śrutakarmā fought a duel with Sudarśana on the first day of Bhārata battle. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

(ii) Durmukha defeated Śrutakarmā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 35).

(iii) He fought a duel with Citrasena's son. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 27).

(iv) Śrutakarmā killed Śala. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 10).

(v) He killed Citrasena, King of Abhisāra. (M. B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 1).

(vi) He fought against Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 13).

(vii) Śrutakarmā killed Devāvṛddhakumāra. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 18).

(viii) Aśvatthāmā killed Śrutakarmā in Bhārata battle. (M.B. Sauptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 50).

ŚRUTAKARMĀ II. (ŚRUTAKĪRTI). A son of Arjuna. (See under Śrutakīrti II).

ŚRUTAKĪRTI I. Wife of Śatrughna. Rāma married Sītā; Bharata married Māṇḍavī; Lakṣmaṇa married Ūrmilā, and Śatrughna married Śrutakīrti. Of these Sītā was the daughter of Janaka and the other three were the daughters of Janaka's younger brother, Kuśadhvaja. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa).

ŚRUTAKĪRTI II. A son of Arjuna. Pāñcālī had five sons by the five Pāṇḍavas. Of these Prativindhya was the son of Yudhiṣṭhira; Śruta was the son of Bhīmasena; Śrutakīrti was the son of Arjuna; Śrutakarmā was the son of Sahadeva and Śatānīka was the son of Nakula. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278). Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 127 mentions that this Śrutakīrti was born from a portion of Viśvadeva. In the Bhārata battle he had fought against Jayatsena and the son of Duśśāsana. In the end he died by the arrow of Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Sauptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 61).

ŚRUTAKĪRTI III. See under Śrutadevī.

ŚRUTANĀBHA. A king of solar dynasty. He was the son of Bhagīratha and father of Sindhudvīpa. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚRUTĀNĪKA. A brother of King Virāṭa. He was a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 41).

ŚRUTAÑJAYA. Brother of Suśarmā, the king of Trigarta. He was slain by Arjuna in the course of Bhārata Yuddha. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 12).

ŚRUTĀNTA (CITRĀṄGA). A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was slain at Kurukṣetra in his fight with Bhīmasena. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 26).

ŚRUTARVA (ŚRUTARVĀ) I. A king who lived at the time of Agastya. Once the sage Agastya approached him for some wealth. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 98 there is a story of how the king solved the problem by presenting the accounts of his income and expenditure to Agastya and convincing him that he was unable to oblige the sage.

ŚRUTARVA (ŚRUTARVĀ) II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the course of the Bhārata battle he attacked Bhīmasena with twelve of his brothers and in the battle which followed Śrutarva was killed, by Bhīmasena. Among the Kauravas, Śrutarvā was one of the mighty archers. The terrible battle fought against Bhīmasena under his leadership alarmed the other warriors. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 26).

ŚRUTARYA. A sage. In Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 132, there is a passage which says that the Aśvinīdevas once turned a river into honey and pleased sage Vasiṣṭha and protected two sages Śrutarya and Narya.

ŚRUTASENA I. A brother of King Janamejaya. In Mahābhārata, there is a reference to an incident in which Śrutasena beat a dog which entered the place where Janamejaya was performing his Yāga. (For further details see under Śrutaśravas III).

ŚRUTASENA II. Younger brother of the serpent Takṣaka. There is a reference to this Nāga in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 141.

ŚRUTASENA III. Son of Sahadeva. He is also known as Śrutakarmā. (See under Śrutakarmā).

ŚRUTASENA IV. An asura. Garuḍa killed this asura. (See under Śrutaśrī).

ŚRUTASENA V. A warrior on the Kaurava side. He was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10).

ŚRUTAŚRAVAS I. A sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's father Vasudeva. (See under Śrutadevī).

ŚRUTAŚRAVAS II. A king of Magadha. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha.)

ŚRUTAŚRAVAS III. A Maharṣi. He had a son named Somaśravas. There is the following story in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, about the way in which these two sages came to be associated with King Janamejaya.

Janamejaya, son of Parīkṣit, along with his brothers performed an elaborate Yāga at Kurukṣetra. His three brothers were Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena. While they were performing the Yāga, a dog which was the son of Saramā came there. Janamejaya's brothers attacked the dog without any provocation. Saramā became angry and she cursed Janamejaya. The curse frightened him. After the Yāga he reached Hastināpura and went out in search of a priest who would be able to liberate him from the curse.

Once, as he was returning from a hunt, he happened to come across an āśrama within his country. A sage named Śrutaśravas lived there. He had a son named Somaśravas. Janamejaya invited Somaśravas to be his priest. At that time Śrutaśravas said to him:-"This my son was born to a serpent-woman and he is endowed with the power of my austerity. He is capable of releasing you from all sins except "Mahādevakṛtyā". If a Brāhmaṇa prays to him for anything, the prayer would be fulfilled. If you can set it right, you may take him with you."

Janamejaya agreed and took Somaśravas with him to the palace. He made him priest and completed the Yāga. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 58 states that Śrutaśravas was also a member of Janamejaya's Yāga. He was among the sages who attained Siddhi (superhuman powers) by performing tapas. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 292, Verse 16).

ŚRUTAŚRAVAS IV. A Rājarṣi. He remains in Yama's assembly, offering worship to Yama. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

ŚRUTAŚRAVAS V. Wife of Damaghoṣa King of Cedi. She was the sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's father and mother of Śiśupāla. She requested Śrī Kṛṣṇa (who came to her place after Śiśupāla's birth) not to kill Śiśupāla. Śrī Kṛṣṇa agreed to forgive Śiśupāla's wrongs a hundred times. (For further details, see under Śiśupāla).

ŚRUTAŚRĪ. An asura. Garuḍa killed this Asura. Once Garuḍa happened to go to Indraloka and he began to brag about his own greatness. He claimed that he had killed Śrutaśrī, Śrutasena, Vipasvān, Rocanāmukha, Kālaka, Ahar, Prastuta and other Asuras. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 12).

ŚRUTĀVATĪ. Daughter of Bharadvāja Muni. Once Bharadvāja happened to see the Apsarā woman Ghṛtācī and he had an involuntary emission of semen. Śrutāvatī was born from that semen. She observed an austere tapas with the object of getting Indra as her husband. (For more information see Para 30 under Indra).

ŚRUTAYAJÑA. A king who belonged to Bhārata Vaṁśa. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha states that he was the son of Karmajit and grandson of Vivanava.

ŚRUTĀYUDHA. A king of the Kaliṅga land. He was the son of Varuṇa by Parṇāśā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 23; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 34).

In Bhārata battle he took his stand on the Kaurava side and at first clashed with Bhīmasena. Even at the beginning of the battle, Bhīma killed Satya and Satyadeva, two of the assistants of Śrutāyudha. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 69). In the end, he used his cudgel—which was given to him by Varuṇa—against Śrī Kṛṣṇa who did not take part in the battle at all. Śrutāyudha died by his own Cudgel. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter, 67, Verses 43-48). (See also under Śrutāyus II).

ŚRUTĀYUS I. A son of Purūravas. (See under Purūravas).

ŚRUTĀYUS II. (ŚRUTĀYUDHA.) A Kaliṅga king.

STHŪṆĀKARṆA. A Yakṣa. It was this Yakṣa, who gave Śikhaṇḍī virility. (For detailed story see under Ambā).

STRĪ.

1) Origin. In both Hindu and Christian scriptures, the story about the origin of woman appears to be similar. It is stated in Manusmṛti, Chapter 1, Verse 32, that Brahmā divided his body into two and made one part male and the other part female and the male embraced the female, from which union was born the Virāṭpuruṣa.

> Dvidhā kṛtvātmano deha> mardhena puruṣoṣbhavat /
> Ardhena nārī tasyāṁ sa
> Virājamasṛjat prabhuḥ //

In the book of Genesis in the Bible, the origin of the first woman is given. It is somewhat similar to the one given above. God created Adam as the first man. God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam. Then he took a rib from Adam, made a woman with it, and gave that woman, who was called Eve, to Adam as wife.

2) Fascination. A story as given below occurs in Devī Purāṇa, which states how woman acquired fascination. Once Indra prohibited Aśvinīdevas from drinking the liquor called Soma. They complained to the hermit Cyavana, who agreed to recover for them the lost right, for which purpose he began a sacrifice. Indra caused obstruction to the sacrifice. Instantly by the power of Cyavana, an asura named Mada rose up from the sacrificial fire. Finally Indra begged the hermit for pardon. Cyavana divided the asura into four parts and placed one portion in gambling, one portion in hunting, the third portion in liquor and the fourth part in woman. Thenceforward woman began to have fascination.

3) Manu, about women. The following is the place in society of women in ancient days, according to Manu. Husband or relatives should give women no freedom. Even if they became immoral, they should be kept under the control of men. As woman has to be under the protection of father in childhood, under the protection of husband in youth and under the protection of son in old age, she does not deserve freedom at any time.

> "Pitā rakṣati kaumāre
> Bhartā rakṣati yauvane /
> Rakṣanti sthāvire putrāḥ
> Na strī svātantryamarhati." //

The father who does not give his daughter to a suitable husband before she attains puberty, the husband who does not engage in coition with his wife after puberty, and the son who does not support his mother after the death of her husband, are men of mean character. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 9).

STRĪPARVA. An important section of Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

STRĪRĀJYA. A kingdom in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 25 that the King of this country had participated in the Rājasūya (sacrifice of royal consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira.

STRĪVILĀPA PARVA. A sub-section of Strī Parva in Mahābhārata comprising Chapters 16 to 25.

STUBHA. Son of Agni (fire) named Bhānu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 14).

SUBĀHU I. A nāga born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Kadrū. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 14).

SUBĀHU II. An apsarā, daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Pradhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 50). This apsarā had participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 63).

SUBĀHU III. A Kṣatriya King who was in fact Hara the asura reborn as such. The Pāṇḍavas, thought of despatching a letter inviting this King to the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 14).

SUBĀHU IV. A Kṣatriya King who was Krodhvaśa, the asura, reborn. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 60).

SUBĀHU V. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma in the great war. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 26).

SUBĀHU VI.

1) General. A King of Kāśī. Subāhu had a very beautiful daughter called Śaśikalā, who was married by Sudarśana, son of Dhruvasandhi. (For details see under Śaśikalā).

2) Other information.

(i) Though he had never been defeated till then in battle, Bhīmasena, in the course of his triumphal tour of the east defeated him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 6).

(ii) He was present at the wedding of Draupadī in the company of his son Sukumāra. In this context he is referred to as Sucitra as well. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 10).

SUBĀHU VII. A Rākṣasa. One of the two sons of Tāṭakā, the other being Mārīca. A Gandharva named Sunda was their father. Subāhu and Mārīca possessed, like Tāṭakā, great power and adeptness in magic. Agastya once cursed Tāṭakā and her two sons who went to fight him for his having cursed Sunda to ashes when he attacked his āśrama. Subāhu was killed in a battle with Śrī Rāma during his stay in exile in the forest. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

SUBĀHU VIII. A King of Cedi, son of Vīrabāhu and brother of Sunandā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 45).

SUBĀHU IX. A King of Kulindas whose kingdom was in the suburbs of the Himālayas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 40). The kingdom was rich in many curious objects and elephants and horses. Kirātas, Taṅgaṇas and Kulindas lived there. King Subāhu received the Pāṇḍavas with great respect when they visited his kingdom during the period of their forest-life. They actually entered the forest after spending one day there. Subāhu fought on the Pāṇḍava side in the great war. (Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 24).

SUBĀHU X. A warrior who fought against the Pāṇḍavas in the great war. Both his hands were cut off in his fight with Yuyutsu. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).

SUBĀHU XI. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 73).

SUBĀHU XII. There is a reference in Verse 66, Chapter 115 of Anuśāsana Parva, Mahābhārata, about a Subāhu, who never consumed flesh in life.

SUBĀHU XIII. Father of Sagara of Solar dynasty. (For details see under Sagara).

SUBĀHU XIV. A Cola King. A great devotee of Viṣṇu, the King performed many yajñas. Though he lived according to the spiritual advice of his preceptor Jaimini he was denied the sight of Viṣṇu. Ultimately Subāhu and his queen attained heaven as they listened to Vijvala, their second son, reciting hymns addressed to Vāsudeva. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 94).

Though Subāhu and his queen worshipped Viṣṇu for a long time in the Ānanda forest, the lord did not appear to them. Ultimately they forsook their bodies in the forest and after a very long walk came to the abode of munis. The king queried them as to why he failed to see Viṣṇu though he performed penance for a very long time. The King and queen were done up due to hunger and thirst and the munis asked them to return to Ānandāśrama and eat the corpses left there. While they were accordingly eating the corpses, Vijvala questioned Kuñjala a bird which lived nearby, why his parents were eating dead bodies. The bird answered that when the King and queen had recited the praises of Vāsudeva they would see Viṣṇu. It also taught Vijvala songs in praise of Viṣṇu. After having studied the songs, Vijvala went and sat on a tree at ānandāśrama and sang the songs. Subāhu and his queen repeated them and immediately Viṣṇu appeared before them and conducted them to heaven.

SUBALA I.

1) General. A King of Gāndhāra. Subala was the father of Śakuni, uncle of the Kauravas. Śakuni was the rebirth of Nagnajit, disciple of Prahlāda. Śakuni inherited the name Saubala from his father Subala whose only daughter was Gāndhārī, mother of Duryodhana. Both Śakuni and Gāndhārī were economic experts. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63). At the time of the marriage proposal of Gāndhārī the fact of the blindness of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the prospective bride-groom, worried Subala much, but he married his daughter to the blind King considering the great reputation of the royal family. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 11).

2) Other information. (i) Subala, in the company of his sons Śakuni, Acala and Vṛṣaka participated in the Rājasūya performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 6).

(ii) After the Rājasūya was over it was Nakula, one of the Pāṇḍavas, who led Subala and his sons beyond the boundaries of the Kingdom safely. (Sabhā Parva Chapter 45, Verse 49).

SUBALA II. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. His son was a great friend of King Jayadratha. (Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 8).

SUBALA III. A son of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 3).

SUBANDHU. An ācārya, who was the high priest of King Asamāti. Once the King removed the priest from his job and appointed two priests, Kirāta and Ākuli in his stead, and after some time, the new priests, at the instance of the King, killed Subandhu. But, three brothers of his joined together and brought Subandhu back to life again by chanting hymns from the Vedas. (Ṛgveda 10, 57. 60; Bṛhaddevatā. 7. 33).

SUBELA. A mountain near Laṅkā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 21).

ŚUBHĀ. Dhruva's mother. According to Harivaṁśa, Chapter 2, she was born from Aśvamedha.

SUBHĀ. Wife of Aṅgiras and mother of seven sons like Bṛhatkīrti. (Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 1).

ŚUBHADATTA. A wood-cutter who lived in Pāṭalīputra.

Śubhadatta earned his living by cutting wood in the forest and selling it for fuel. One day, while cutting wood in the forest he saw four Yakṣas by chance. When he understood from their dress and bearing that they were divine beings, Śubhadatta was frightened. The Yakṣas spoke to him and when they came to know that he was poor, they engaged him as their servant. Śubhadatta served them with devotion. When it was time for their meal they pointed to him a pot and asked him to serve them food from it. But when Śubhadatta saw the pot empty, he was confused. The Yakṣas, with an amused smile asked him to put his hand into the pot and assured him that he would get anything he wished to get from it.

Śubhadatta accordingly took out all the things they wanted from it and served them. They took their food and were satisfied. A few days passed in this way and then Śubhadatta began to think of his family. The Yakṣas understood that he was longing to return home. So they allowed him to go after getting whatever boon he wished to ask them. Śubhadatta asked for that magic pot which would supply whatever he wanted. On hearing it the Yakṣas told him that he would not be able to keep that pot and that if it was broken everything would be lost. So they advised him to ask them something else. But Śubhadatta was not prepared to accept their advice. At last they gave him the magic pot.

Śubhadatta reached home happily with the pot. He told the whole story to his people at home. His neighbours grew suspicious when he stopped going to the forest to cut trees, after he returned with the pot. To their enquiries about it, he replied haughtily and informed them of his good luck. One day in his frantic joy, he danced, carrying the pot on his head and as ill-luck would have it, he slipped his foot and fell down. The pot crashed to the ground and was broken to pieces. So he was forced to become the wood-cutter again. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Śaktiyaśolambaka, Taraṅga 1).

SUBHADRĀ I. Sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Birth. Subhadrā was the daughter of Vasudeva by his wife Devakī. She had two brothers, Kṛṣṇa and Sāraṇa and she was her father's pet child. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Verse 18).

2) Married to Arjuna. During his one year's pilgrimage Arjuna, after visiting various holy places, came at last to Prabhāsa tīrtha in the plains of the western mountain. He met Gada there who described to him the unique beauty of Subhadrā. The description evoked in him the desire to marry her for which purpose he assumed the form of a Sannyāsin and sitting under a tree thought about Śrī Kṛṣṇa who understood the fact while lying on the bed with Satyabhāmā and immediately he began laughing. Asked for the reason for his laughing thus, Śrī Kṛṣṇa told her about Arjuna thinking about him etc. Kṛṣṇa then went to Arjuna and questioned him about the reason for his pilgrimage and the latter explained the circumstances of it. They then went to the Raivata mountain where Arjuna revealed to Kṛṣṇa his desire to marry Subhadrā. Kṛṣṇa agreed and, after leaving Arjuna at the mountain, returned to Dvārakā.

Within a few days the Yādavas celebrated a festival at Raivata attended by prominent leaders like Balabhadra, Ugrasena, Pradyumna, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and others. The sight of Subhadrā among them evoked uncontrollable love in Arjuna who asked Kṛṣṇa secretly about the means for him to marry Subhadrā. Kṛṣṇa answered him thus: "Svayaṁvara (marriage by self choice by a woman) is ordained for Kṣatriyas. But, how would we know whom Subhadrā loves. Abduction also is ordained for Kṣatriyas. So you abduct Subhadrā."

Arjuna immediately sent word about the matter through emissaries to Indraprastha. After the festival at Raivata was over, Subhadrā returned to Dvārakā. As for Arjuna, he sat on a rock in the forest thinking about Subhadrā when Yādava heroes like Bala, Sāmba, Sāraṇa, Pradyumna and Gada came that way by chance. They saluted the Sannyāsin (Arjuna) and after blessing them he made them sit on the rock around him and related to them various stories. Then Yādavas felt great respect for the Sannyāsin and invited him and took him to Dvārakā. Kṛṣṇa and others arranged for the stay of the Sannyāsin, who pretended to spend Cāturmāsya there. He was to be fed from Subhadrā's house and the Sannyāsin was overwhelmed with joy.

As days passed on thus, Arjuna grew more and more sick with love. Subhadrā felt unbounded affection for him. She heard from him many stories about the valiant Pāṇḍava, Arjuna. When he was convinced that Subhadrā cherished strong love for him, Arjuna revealed the truth about him. When he told her that he, the fake Sannyāsin, was really Arjuna who was living there without the knowledge of his mother and brothers, Subhadrā bent down her head in shyness.

Subhadrā's wedding was decided to be held on the twelfth day from that date. Balabhadra and Uddhava both of them short-tempered, were not informed about the decision. Śrī Kṛṣṇa took the lead in making prepartions for the wedding and he saw Subhadrā and gave her all good wishes.

Many of the Yādava chiefs wanted Subhadrā to be wedded to Duryodhana, a disciple of Balabhadra and against this desire of theirs Subhadrā and Arjuna together drove themselves away in a chariot through lines of people and this created a stir among the Yādavas. But, Kṛṣṇa pacified them all. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 213-228; Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

2) Other information.

(i) Later on, the wedding of Subhadrā with Arjuna was duly consecrated. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 10).

(ii) Arjuna came to Indraprastha with Subhadrā disguised as a Gopī. Many costly things, by way of Subhadrā's dowry, were duly sent from Dvārakā to Indraprastha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220).

(iii) A son named Abhimanyu was born to the couple. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 65).

(iv) During the period of the 'forest life' of the Pāṇḍavas Subhadrā and her son lived with Kṛṣṇa at Dvārakā (Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 3).

(v) Subhadrā too was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu at Upaplavyanagara. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72 Verse 22).

(vi) When Abhimanyu was killed in the great war, Subhadrā wept before Kṛṣṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 2).

(vii) Following the death of Abhimanyu Subhadrā returned with Kṛṣṇa to Dvārakā. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 85).

(viii) Remembering about Abhimanyu's death Subhadrā swooned. (Aśvamedha Parva Chapter 61, Verse 4).

(ix) She went from Dvārakā to Hastināpura to attend the Aśvamedha yajña performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 4).

(x) Subhadrā joined her co-wives, Ulūpī and Citrāṅgadā and embraced them. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 3).

(xi) Following the death of Abhimanyu Subhadrā spent her days in sad silence. (Mahāprasthāna Parva, Chapter 1).

SUBHADRĀ II. A daughter of Surabhi. She lives in the western region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102 Verse 9).

SUBHADRA A banyan tree. Garuḍa went to Devaloka to fetch amṛta after marking this tree as a sign-post. See under Garuḍa. (Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Canto 35).

SUBHADRĀHARAṆAPARVA. A sub-parva of Mahābhārata. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 218 and 219).

SUBHAGA. A brother of Śakuni. He was killed in the great war by Bhīma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 26).

SUBHAGĀ I. Daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Pradhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 46).

SUBHAGĀ II. A term of address.

According to Manusmṛti (Chapter 2, 129) one should use this word when one addresses the wives of others and women who are not one's relatives.

Parapatnī tu yā strī syādasambandhā ca yonitaḥ /
Tām brūyād bhavatītyevaṁ subhage bhaginīti ca //

SUBHĀNU. One of the ten sons of Satyabhāmā, the other nine being Bhānu, Svarbhānu, Prabhānu, Bhānumān, Candrabhānu, Bṛhadbhānu, Havirbhānu, Śrībhānu and Pratibhānu. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

SUBHĀRYĀ (SUDĀRYĀ). A daughter of Śvaphalka, son of Pṛśni. She was Akrūra's sister. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚUBHĀṄGADA. A king. This king had attended Draupadī's Svayaṁvara. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 22).

ŚUBHĀṄGĪ. A virgin born in the Dāśārha tribe. Kuru, King of the Lunar dynasty married her. They had a son named Vidūra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 39).

SUBHĀṢAṆA. A king of Solar line son of Yuyudhāna and father of Śruta. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚUBHAVAKTRĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 7).

SUBHĪMA. A son of Pāñcajanyāgni called Tapa. This Agni is one of the fifteen Agnis which cause hindrances in Yajñas. Subhīma, Atibhīma, Bhīma, Bhīmabala. Bala, Sumitra, Mitravān, Mitrajña, Mitravardhana, Mitradharman, Surapravīra, Vīra, Suvarcas, Veśa and Surahantā are the fifteen Agnis which cause hindrances in Yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 11).

SUBHRĀJA. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by Sūrya, the other one being Bhāsvara. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31).

SUBHRŪ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 8).

SUBHŪMIKA. A holy place of ancient days in the plains of river Sarasvatī where Apsarās used to come daily and bathe. Deva-Gandharvas visit this place every month. Śrī Kṛṣṇa bathed there once and distributed money to brahmins. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 37).

SUBRAHMAṆYA. Son of Śiva.

1) Reason for birth. A son named Vajrāṅga was born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Danu and he married a girl called Varāṅgī. Vajrāṅga performed penance to Brahmā so that he might shed his āsuric aspect. When he came out of his penance, Varāṅgī was missing and he wandered about the forest in search of her. Finally he saw Varāṅgī crying under a tree. When he asked her the reason for her weeping, she told him about harassments by Brahmā during the thousand years when Vajrāṅga was immersed in trance. Indra one day threw about the vessels used by her in worship, appearing before her in the guise of a monkey; on another occasion he threatened her in the form of a lion and on a third occasion he came disguised as a snake and bit on her legs. Very much grieved over the story Vajrāṅga again took to penance with the grim determination to punish Indra and when Brahmā appeared before him he prayed for the boon of a son who would surpass the Devas including Indra in prowess. Brahmā granted him the boon. Varāṅgī delivered a son twelve months after the boon. The child was christened Tārakāsura.

Tārakāsura, as a child, began practising penance and Brahmā duly appeared before him and granted him the boon that if he were to die, he would die at the hands of a child only seven days old. Haughty over the boon Tārakāsura very soon conquered the three worlds. The devas found no means to suppress the asura. Children would not be born to them and there was a reason for it. Once Śiva and Pārvatī started the marital act and it did not come to a close even after a hundred divya - years, with the result that the world shook like anything. Frightened at this the Devas requested Śiva to stop the act and he obliged them. Then he asked them who would bear the semen which had been discharged and they replied, "Let earth itself bear the semen." Accordingly it was discharged on the earth. It filled and over-flowed forests and mountains. What next was the problem. Ultimately the Devas asked Agni (fire) to consume it. When Agni consumed and burnt it down absolutely, the ashes thereof formed into a white hill and it became a forest.

Pārvatī did not at all relish the action of the devas and spoke to them thus: "You prevented my sexual intercourse entered into with the desire to have a son. Therefore, in future you will not have children by your wives." Pārvatī cursed the earth also as follows: "You will become one of various forms and also a wife to many people. You, who prevented me from having a son, will not enjoy happiness from children." (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 36).

Tārakāsura could be killed only by a child not more than seven days old and the Devas realised that such a child could be begot only by Śiva. It was the occasion when Śiva was lamenting over the death of Satī and Pārvatī was doing penance to secure Śiva as husband. None could stir Śiva immersed in deep meditation and the Devas entrusted the responsibility for it to Kāmadeva. Not only did Kāma not succeed in the endeavour but also he got reduced to ashes by the fire from Śiva's eyes. When Pārvatī's penance reached its climax Śiva appeared before her and wedded her.

2). Birth of Subrahmaṇya. Because of the power of Śiva's semen consumed by Agni, his glow began getting diminished. Agni complained of it to the Devas who sent him over to Brahmā. On his way to Brahmā Agni met Gaṅgādevī whom he told thus: "I can in no way bear this semen of Śiva and if I get rid of it, it will burn the entire world. So, you please take charge of it so that you will have a noble son. Gaṅgā's reply to this was simply to ask Agni to throw the semen into her waters and Agni did so. As the semen had remained with Agni for nearly 5000 years, his flesh, blood hair, eye etc. had become golden in colour and hence Agni came to be called from that day onwards Hiraṇyaretas.

Time passed by and the semen of Śiva became a burden to Gaṅgā. She complained about that to Brahmā. Brahmā asked her from whom she had received the semen. Gaṅgā detailed her story to him and concluded by saying that though it was 5000 years since Śiva's semen was put into her, she did not deliver yet. Then Brahmā told her as follows: "You go to the Udaya mountain (where the sun rises). There is a forest there, a forest hundred crores of yojanas in extent, where Śara, a particular variety of grass (Saccharam munja Roxb) grows. You deposit the semen there and a male child will be born after 10, 000 years.

As directed by Brahmā Gaṅgā went to the Udaya mountain and deposited the foetus there through her mouth.

By the power of Śiva's semen all the trees and animals and birds in the forest became golden in colour. When 10,000 years were completed a child, as effulgent as the rising sun, was born and Subrahmaṇya was the child. The child cried in a thunderous voice and six divine Kṛttikās who came that way saw the child and taking pity on it vied with one another to breast-feed it. Since the child looked at the six Kṛttikās one after the other it developed six faces and since it was breast-fed by Kṛttikās it came to be named Kārttikeya as well.

Brahmā informed Agni about the birth of the child and the latter, in great happiness, hastened to it on a fast goat. Gaṅgā who met Agni on the way and asked him about his hurried trip was told about the birth of the child and between the two developed an argument about the ownership of the child. Mahāviṣṇu who came that way just then listened to the above argument and directed them to Śiva for settlement of their claims.

Agni and Gaṅgā asked Śiva to which of them the child really belonged. Śiva then told Pārvatī "Fortunate, fortunate." Only after seeing the child could it be decided as to whose it was and so Śiva, Pārvatī, Agni and Gaṅgā proceeded together to the forest where they saw the child in the lap of the Kṛttikās. Śiva then said "Let us see whom the child looks at before settling its parentage." Understanding the ideas of the visitors the child, by its yogic power, assumed four bodies called Kumāra, Viśākha, Śākha and Naigameya. Kumāra looked at Śiva, Viśākha at Pārvatī, Śākha at Gaṅgā and Naigameya at Agni and all of them felt immensely happy. The Kṛttikās asked Śiva whether Ṣaṇmukha (child with six faces) was his son to which Śiva answered as follows : "Let him be your son under the name Kārttikeya; Gaṅgā's son under the name Kumāra; Pārvatī's son under the name Skanda; my son under the name Guha and Agni's son with the name Mahāsena and under the name Śaravaṇa 'Śaravaṇa's (the forest where it was born) son. He is a great yogī and will be known by these various names. As he possesses six faces he will become famous as 'Ṣaṇmukha' also.

After having spoken thus Śiva thought of the Devas and under the leadership of Brahmā and Viṣṇu all the Devas appeared there. They looked at the child to their hearts' content and then told Śiva thus : "Oh ! Lord ! You made Agni serve the purpose of Devas. Let us immediately start for Aujasa tīrtha and crown Ṣaṇmukha at Sarasvatī in Kurukṣetra. Let him flourish as army-chief of Devas, Gandharvas and Kinnaras and let him kill the terrible Mahiṣāsura and Tārakāsura.

3) Coronation. Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and others reached Kurukṣetra with the child to crown him (Subrahmaṇya) as army-chief. Śiva and Viṣṇu performed the consecration ceremony with holy water from the seven seas. Gandharvas, Ṛṣis and others sang for joy and Apsarās danced. Pārvatī placed the child thus consecrated on her lap and kissed him repeatedly on the head.

4) Presents. After Guha's consecration, the Devas presented the army-chief valorous armies. He was given by Śiva four Pramathas, equal in prowess to Indra, called Ghaṇṭākarṇa, Lohitākṣa, Nandiṣeṇa and Kumudamālī. Brahmā and other Devas gave their own Pramathas to him. Brahmā gave him the Pramatha called Sthāṇu and Viṣṇu gave him three sets of Pramathas called Saṅkrama, Vikrama and Parākrama. Indra gave him Utkleśa and Paṅkaja; Sun (Sūrya) gave Daṇḍakapiñjalas; Moon gave Maṇivasumaṇis; the Aśvins gave Vatsanandis etc. In short, important Devas, Mātṛs, Tīrthas etc. gave Subrahmaṇya priceless presents too numerous to be named.

Seeing the rush of presents the great Garuḍa presented his own son, the fast-going Peacock to Subrahmaṇya. Aruṇa gave his own son, the cock. Agni gave the Vel (three-pronged weapon, trident), Bṛhaspati the daṇḍa (club, stick) Gaṅgā, the Kamaṇḍalu (water-pot of Sannyāsins) Viṣṇu the garland, Pārvatī clothes, Śiva the locket and Indra the string of pearls.

5) Devāsura war. The consecration of Subrahmaṇya as Commander-in-Chief of the army kindled a new hope and enthusiasm in the Devas. They challenged the Asuras for war and they took it up. The asura army entered the battle-field under the leadership of unrivalled warriors like Tārakāsura, Mahiṣa, Bāṇa, son of Mahābali, Tāraka's sons, Tārakākṣa. Kamalākṣa, Vidyunmālī etc. In the furious battle that ensued Subrahmaṇya killed Tārakāsura. The other asura chiefs too were killed.

6) Vow of celibacy. After the killing of Tārakāsura Subrahmaṇya became the object of too much of petting by Pārvatī with the result that his life became unbridled and wayward. His lust was everyday on the increase and he committed even rape on Deva women, who were ultimately forced to complain about him to Pārvatī. Immediately she called Subrahmaṇya to her and showed her own image in all other women and he became so much repentant about his past actions that he took the vow before Pārvatī that in future he would look upon all women in the world as equal to her, his mother. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa 81).

7) Marriage. See under Devasenā.

8) Other information.

(i) On the occasion of the burning of the Khāṇḍava forest Subrahmaṇya went there carrying his weapon called 'Śakti' to fight Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 33).

(ii) Skanda was born from the semen of Śiva which fell into Agni. So he got the name Skanda. (Skand—fall). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 16).

(iii) He once cut asunder the Krauñca mountain. (For details see under Krauñca I).

(iv) Noticing the very great effulgence of Skanda, Indra feared loss of his place and immediately he clashed with the former. Indra's Vajra (thunderbolt) hit Skanda on his right and from the wound emerged a person wearing golden armour, divine ear-rings and holding the Vel in his hands and he was named Viśākha. Frightened by his sight Indra sought refuge with Subrahmaṇya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 227).

(vi) Subrahmaṇya once in the company of Rudradeva visited the holy place Bhadravaṭa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 56).

(viii) He killed Mahiṣāsura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 96).

(ix) Synonyms or sacred names of Subrahmaṇya :— Āgneya, Skanda, Dīptakīrti, Anāmaya, Mayūraketu, Dharmātman, Bhūteśa, Mahiṣārdana, Kāmajit, Kāmada, Kānta, Satyavāk, Bhuvaneśvara, Śiśuśīghra, Śucīcaṇḍa, Dīptavarṇa, Śubhānana, Amogha, Anagha, Raudra, Priya, Candrānana, Praśāntātman, Dīptaśakti, Bhadrakṛt, Kūṭamohana, Ṣaṣṭhīpriya, Pavitra, Mātṛvatsala, Kanyābhartā, Vibhakta, Svāheya, Revatīsuta, Viśākha, Prabhu, Netā, Naigameya, Suduścara, Suvrata, Lalita, Bālakrīḍanakapriya, Khacārī, Brahmacārin, Śūra, Śaravaṇodbhava, Viśvāmitrapriya, Devasenāpriya, Vāsudevapriya, Priyakṛt etc.

Those who repeat the above sacred names of Subrahmaṇya will attain fame, wealth and heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 232).

(x) In the Devāsura war he killed important leaders of the asuras like Mahiṣa, Tripāda and Hradodara. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 90).

(xi) He defeated Bāṇāsura and killed the sons of Tārakāsura. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 90).

(xii) Śiva consecrated him as lord (Śreṣṭharāja) of the Bhūtas. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 32).

SUCAKRA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 59).

SUCAKṢUS. One of the seven channels of Gaṅgā. (See under Sindhu).

SUCANDRA I. A King of Ikṣvāku dynasty. A son named Viśālanīti was born to King Ikṣvāku by his wife Alambuṣā. The city Viśālanagara was founded by this Viśālanīti. A son named Hemacandra was born to Viśāla. Sucandra was the son of Hemacandra. Dhūmrāśva was the son of Sucandra. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 47).

SUCANDRA II. An asura. This asura was the son of Siṁhikā. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 46).

SUCANDRA III. A Gandharva. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 46). This Gandharva was the son of Prajāpati Kaśyapa, by his wife Pradhā. This Gandharva participated in the birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 58).

ŚUCANTI. A muni who was an adorer of Atri Maharṣi. There is a reference to him in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112.

SUCĀRU I. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. With his seven brothers he attacked Abhimanyu. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 22).

SUCĀRU II. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by his wife Rukmiṇī. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33). The sons born by Rukmiṇī were Pradyumna, Cārudeṣṇa, Sudeṣṇa, Cārudeha, Sucāru, Cārugupta and Bhadracāru. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

SUCCHĀYĀ. The wife of Śiṣṭi, the son of Dhruva. Two sons named Śiṣṭi and Bhavya were born to Dhruva by his wife Śambhū. Succhāyā, the wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to five sons who were sinless. They were Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 13).

SUCETAS. The son of Gṛtsamada who was born in the dynasty of Vītahavya. A son named Varcas was born to Sucetas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 61).

ŚUCI I. A deva (god) who was born in Agnivaṁśa. This Śuci was the son of Agnideva who was the eldest son of Brahmā, and his wife Svāhā. Śuci had two brothers by name Pāvaka and Pavamāna. These brothers had fortyfive sons. They are also known as "Agnis". Thus there are on the whole fortynine Agnis, including the father, three sons and their fortyfive children. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

ŚUCI II. Cākṣuṣa was a son of Manu. Ten sons were born to Manu by his wife, Naḍvalā. They were, Kuru, Puru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭoma, Atirātra, Sudyumna and Abhimanyu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13).

ŚUCI III. There is a passage in Chapter 19 of Agni Purāṇa which says that Kaśyapa Prajāpati had six daughters by his wife Tāmrā, who were, Kākā, Śyenī, Bhāsī, Gṛddhrikā, Śuci and Grīvā and that different classes of birds took their source from them.

ŚUCI IV. A King of the Solar dynasty. From Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha we learn that he was the son of Śakradyumna and the father of Vanadvāja.

ŚUCI V. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 14, there is a reference to a King Śuci who worships Yama, the son of Sūrya, in Yama's assembly.

ŚUCI VI. The leader of a band of merchants. It was he who met and comforted Damayantī who lost her way in the forest after Nala left her. (Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 127).

ŚUCI VII. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 54).

ŚUCI VIII. A son of Bhṛgu Maharṣi. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 128).

ŚUCI IX. A Maharṣi born in the family of Aṅgiras. By a curse of Vasiṣṭha, this Maharṣi was born as a mortal, as the son of King Vijitāśva. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

SŪCI. The son of Śuddha and the grandson of Anenas. Trikalpava was the son of Sūci. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

SŪCĪ (NEEDLE). Iron needle is Purāṇically important. There is a story connecting the iron-needle of Bhārata and Vibhīṣaṇa as follows:—

Having killed Rāvaṇa, Śrī Rāma anointed Vibhīṣaṇa as the King of Laṅkā and returned to Ayodhyā. During the reign of Vibhīṣaṇa, Laṅkā reached the highest stage of prosperity. Among the five metals, only gold was seen in Laṅkā. At this stage Vibhīṣaṇa got an iron needle from Bhārata. He kept it as a rare and valuable treasure, in his palace.

Vibhīṣaṇa who was an ardent devotee of Śrī Rāma used to cross the sea, come to Rāmeśvara-temple and offer flower at the feet of Śrī Rāma, every day. Flower was brought in a big golden pot. Once Vibhīṣaṇa placed the golden pot in the courtyard of the temple and went in with the flower. After the worship, Vibhīṣaṇa came out and taking the pot on his head returned to Laṅkā. Being immersed in the thought of Śrī Rāma, Vibhīṣaṇa did not look inside the pot. After reaching the palace he looked into the pot and saw a Brahmin sleeping in it. He was very pleased to see the Brahmin. So after welcoming him with hospitality, he brought the box in which he had kept the most precious treasure and placed it before the Brahmin who returned with the box to Bhārata. He eagerly opened the box and saw only an iron needle in it. The consternation of the Brahmin need only be imagined.

ŚUCIKĀ. An Apsaras. She had participated in Arjuna's birth festival. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 62).

SŪCIKĀ. A figure of the giantess Karkkaṭī. (See under Brahmā, Para 12).

SŪCIMUKHA. A hell. (See under Kāla the section on hell).

ŚUCIMUKHĪ. Companion maid of Prabhāvatī, daughter of Vajranābha. (See under Prabhāvatī V).

ŚUCIRATHA. A King born in Bharata's dynasty. He was the son of Citraratha and Dhṛṣama's father. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SUCIROṢITA. A minister of Daśaratha. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 32).

ŚUCISMITĀ I. A Brāhmaṇī who was devoted to her husband. (For further details see under Dhanañjaya V).

ŚUCISMITĀ II. An Apsaras. She attends Kubera's assembly (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 10).

SUCITRA I. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent fell in the sacrificial fire of the serpent sacrifice of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 18).

SUCITRA II. (SUMITRA). Father of Sukumāra the King of Pulinda. (See under Sukumāra I.)

SUCITRA III. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He attacked Abhimanyu in the battle of Bhārata. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 22).

SUCITRA IV. A King who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was a good fighter from chariot. (Mahā-Bhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 27). While this king and his son Citravarmā were walking in the battlefield, Droṇa killed them.

SŪCĪVAKTRA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 72).

ŚUCIVRATA. A king of ancient times. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 236).

SUDAKṢIṆA I. The son of king Pauṇḍraka. Śrī-Kṛṣṇa killed Pauṇḍraka in battle and his head, cut off by Śrī Kṛṣṇa, fell in the country of Kāśī. Sudakṣiṇa who learned about the death of his father, went to Kāśī and recognized the head by the ear-rings. Sudakṣiṇa made up his mind to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa somehow or other and began to do penance in Kāśī before Śiva. Pleased with his penance Śiva appeared before him and advised him to create a wicked fairy from the fire of sorcery. Accordingly Sudakṣiṇa prepared a fire of sorcery, from which a wicked fairy came out and ran towards Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa sent his weapon the Discus which cut off the head of the wicked fairy and from there the Discus flew to Kāśī and turned Sudakṣiṇa to ashes, and returned to Dvārakā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

SUDAKṢIṆA. II A king of Kāmboja (Kabul). The following information is taken from Mahābhārata about this king.

(i) Sudakṣiṇa had been present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 15).

(ii) He came with an akṣauhiṇī of army to help Duryodhana against the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Bhārata. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 21).

(iii) Sudakṣiṇa was a valiant fighter in the army of the Kauravas. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 1).

(iv) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata. there was a combat between Śrutakarmā and Sudakṣiṇa. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

(v) There was another combat between Abhimanyu and Sudakṣiṇa. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66.)

(vi) Arjuna killed Sudakṣiṇa in the battle of Bhārata. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 61).

(vii) The younger brother of Sudakṣiṇa confronted Arjuna to avenge the death of his brother and was killed by Arjuna. (M. B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 110).

SUDAKṢIṆA III. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. Droṇācārya shot him down from the chariot with an arrow. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 56).

SUDAKṢIṆĀ. The wife of Dilīpa. (See under Dilīpa).

SUDĀMĀ I. A minister of king Janaka. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 70).

SUDĀMĀ II. A king of Daśārṇa. This king had two daughters of whom one was married by Bhīma, the king of Vidarbha, and the other by Vīrabāhu king of Cedi. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 14).

SUDĀMĀ III. A country of North India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 11, that this country was captured by Arjuna.

SUDĀMĀ IV. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 10).

SUDĀMĀ V. A cowherd. This Sudāmā was reborn as an asura, because of the curse of Devī Rādhā. (For further details see under Tulasī, para 5).

SUDĀMĀ VI. A warrior who took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 49).

SUDĀMĀ VII. The watcher of the garden of Kaṁsa. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, that this Sudāmā adorned Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra Rāma with flower garlands.

SUDĀMĀ VIII. The real name of Kucela who was the friend of Śrī Kṛṣṇa in boyhood. Though his name occurs everywhere in Bhāgavata, as Kucela, his real name is Sudāmā. (See under Kucela).

SUDĀMĀ IX. A river famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyākāṇḍa, Sarga 71, that Bharata, the brother of Śrī Rāma, crossed this river while he was returning from Kekaya.

SUDAṆḌIKA. See under Sūryaprabha.

SUDARŚANA I. A king of ancient India. He was a contemporary of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. This king who was esteemed even by the gods, was once captured and made a prisoner by another king named Nagnajit. Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated Nagnajit and all the other Kings and made this King free. This story occurs in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 75.

SUDARŚANA II. A king who took the side of the Kauravas and fought against the Pāṇḍavas in Kurukṣetra. This king was killed by Sātyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 14).

SUDARŚANA III. A king of Mālava. This king joined the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Bhārata and was killed by Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 200, Verse 13).

SUDARŚANA IV. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the battle of Bhārata, he attacked Bhīmasena and was killed by him. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 31).

SUDARŚANA V. Son of Dhruvasandhi, king of Kosala. Manoramā was the mother of Sudarśana. (For further details see under Dhruvasandhi).

SUDARŚANA VI. One of the five sons of Bharata. Bharata, the son of Ṛṣabha, had married Pañcajanī, the daughter of Viśvarūpa. Five sons named Sumati, Rāṣṭrabhṛt, Sudarśana, Āvaraṇa and Dhūmraketu were born to Bharata, who divided Bhārata among his five sons and went to Sālagrāma and did penance there and died. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

SUDARŚANA VII. The son born to god Fire by his wife Sudarśanā. (Sudarśanā was the daughter of Duryodhana (Nīla) of the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. For the story of her marriage see under Sudarśanā). Sudarśana, the son of Fire, married Oghavatī the daughter of Oghavān. That story is given below:-

Oghavān had two children a daughter named Oghavatī and a son named Ogharatha. Oghavān gave his daughter in marriage to Sudarśana who was wise and learned. The couple lived in Kurukṣetra. Once Sudarśana said to Oghavatī thus:-"You should honour guests in all ways. If it is the desire of a guest, you should not draw back from giving even your body. Whether I am present here or not a guest should not be insulted." Oghavatī promised to obey the order of her husband to the letter. Sudarśana had been trying to become victorious over Mṛtyu (Death) and so Death had been waiting to find out some vulnerable point in Sudarśana's life. While Sudarśana had gone to cut firewood, a brahmin entered the hermitage and said to Oghavatī:-"If you do observe the duties of a house-holder show hospitality to me." Hearing this, Oghavatī welcomed the brahmin and performed the usual hospitality and asked him "What shall I do for you ?" "Give yourself to me", was the answer. Seeing that the guest was not contented with the usual hospitalities and remembering the words of her husband, Oghavatī gave herself to the guest. Both of them entered the interior of the hermitage. At this moment Sudarśana returned with firewood, and looked for Oghavatī and called her aloud, several times. He got no reply. Then the Brahmin who was lying inside called out:-"Hei ! Son of Fire ! A guest has come. Your wife showed all kinds of hospitality. But I was not contented with them. Now she is offering herself to me."

These words did not seem to make any change in Sudarśana. Dharmadeva was much pleased, as Sudarśana had come out victorious in all these tests. He came out and appeared in his own form and blessed Sudarśana. Due to the blessing of Dharmadeva, half of the body of Oghavatī flowed as the river Oghavatī and the other half was dissolved in the soul of her husband. Sudarśana thus earned victory over Mṛtyu and obtained prosperity.

SUDARŚANA VIII. A Vidyādhara. Because of the curse of Aṅgiras, this Vidyādhara was changed into a mountain snake. That story occurs as follows in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9.

While Sudarśana was playing about in the world of Gods with some Gandharva damsels, Aṅgiras and some other hermits came by that way. Sudarśana ridiculed them. Aṅgiras became angry and changed him to a mountain snake by a curse. Sudarśana prayed for liberation from the curse. Aṅgiras said that in Dvāparayuga, Mahāviṣṇu would incarnate as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and when Kṛṣṇa trod upon him, he would regain his original form."

Sudarśana became a big snake and began life in Ambāḍi. Once the people of Ambāḍi went to Devī forest and worshipped Maheśvara. They spent the night on the banks of the river Kālindī. In the night the snake mentioned above, caught hold of the leg of Nandagopa. Seeing the snake swallowing Nandagopa the rest of them crowded there and struck at the snake with burning faggots. But it was in vain. Finally Śrī Kṛṣṇa came, and gave the snake a thrash. Instantly Sudarśana got his old form. He went to the world of gods.

SUDARŚANA IX. A brahmin sinner who lived in the Tretāyuga. The moment he touched the water in which Viṣṇu washed his feet, he obtained remission of his sins and entered Vaikuṇṭha. This story which is given under, occurs in Padma Purāṇa, Brahma Khaṇḍa, Chapter 17.

There lived a brahmin sinner in Tretāyuga. He used to commit sins such as eating food on the eleventh lunar day, ridiculing conventional fast and vow, etc. When he died, the men of Yama took his soul to the world of Yama. At his order Sudarśana was laid in horrible excrements for the period of hundred Manvantaras. When he was released he was born on earth as a hog. Because he ate food on Harivāsara (a fast-day) he suffered hell for a long time. His next birth was that of a crow and lived on excrements. Once the crow drank the water which fell on the steps while washing the feet of Viṣṇu. The crow obtained remission of all its sins. On the same day it was caught in the net of a forestman and died. Then a divine chariot drawn by swans came and took the crow to the world of Viṣṇu.

SUDARŚANA X. The son of Dīrghabāhu who was born in the family of Manu. He conquered all the kingdoms and ruled as an emperor. The famous hermit Vasiṣṭha was his priest.

Once Devī Mahākālī appeared to him in a dream and said to him: "Very soon a flood will occur in the world. So go to the Himālayas with your wife and the priest Vasiṣṭha and stay there in a cave." According to the instruction of Devī, Sudarśana took everybody with him and went to the Himālayas.

The prophecy of Devī came true. The earth was filled with water. This deluge lasted for ten years. After that the earth resumed its original form and Sudarśana returned to Ayodhyā. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Pratisarga Parva, 1, 1).

It is mentioned in Kālikā Purāṇa that Sudarśana had broken off a piece of a forest region of Himālaya and taken it to his country and founded on it the city called Khāṇḍavīnagara and that after a short period king Vijaya of the Bhairava dynasty killed king Sudarśana and became the ruler of the city. (Kālikā Purāṇa, 92).

SUDARŚANĀ XI. A wife of God Fire. This Sudarśanā was the daughter of Duryodhana, the son of Durjaya of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. The mother of Sudarśanā was Narmadā. It is said that so beautiful a woman as Sudarśanā had never been born. The God Fire was once fascinated by the beauty of Sudarśanā who had been instructed to serve him, and wished to accept her as his wife. So he informed her of his desire. Being of a noble race, she said that a virgin ought to be given away by her parents. The God Fire approached the father of Sudarśanā and informed him of every thing. When he knew that the person who made the request was the God Fire, the king gave his daughter Sudarśanā as wife to the God. (Duryodhana had another name Nīla). In the Purāṇas there is another statement also that Nīla was the ruler of Māhiṣmatī. (See under Duryodhana II and Agni Para 8).

SUDARŚANA XII. An island. This is another name of Jambūdvīpa. Once Sañjaya talked to Dhṛtarāṣṭra about this dvīpa (Island). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 5).

SUDARŚANA XIII. A tree in the Jambū island. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7 that this tree was eleven thousand yojanas high.

SUDARŚANA XIV. (The Discus Sudarśana-weapon).

1) General information. The weapon of Mahāviṣṇu. Two stories are seen about the origin of this weapon.

(i) The sun married Saṁjñā the daughter of Viśvakarmā. Saṁjñā complained to her father that she could not bear the radiance of the Sun. Viśvakarmā put the Sun in a turning machine and turned him and decreased his radiance. Out of the dust of the sun produced by this process, Viśvakarmā made the discus-weapon, the aerial chariot Puṣpaka, the Trident of Śiva, and the Śakti (lance) of Subrahmaṇya. Of these weapons the discus-weapon Sudarśana was given to Mahāviṣṇu. This is one story. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 2).

(ii) During the burning of the forest Khāṇḍava, Indra showered rain, against the fire. According to the second story, the God Fire gave the discus weapon Sudarśana to Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Gāṇḍīva to Arjuna to fight against Indra. (See the word Khāṇḍavadāha).

Besides these two stories, several statements occur in various Purāṇas, about this weapon Sudarśana. As Sudarśana was in existence even before the incarnation of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the story that Viśvakarmā made it, ought to be given prominence. Very often Mahāviṣṇu used to destroy enemies by this Sudarśana. Though Mahāviṣṇu had taken several incarnations, only Śrī Kṛṣṇa is mentioned in the Purāṇas as having used this weapon Sudarśana very often.

2) The power of Sudarśana. Sudarśana flies up to the ranks of the enemies, burning like fire. Once Mahāviṣṇu sent the weapon Sudarśana towards the asuras. Then the havoc and destruction caused by this weapon, is described as follows :

The moment he thought of Sudarśana, to destroy the power of the enemy, it made its appearance like the Sun in the Solar region. It was a fearful sight. Emanating light and radiance from the blazing fire, the Sudarśana rested on the hand of Viṣṇu; turning round with a tremendous speed. Viṣṇu threw it at the enemies with his powerful hand like that of the trunk of an elephant, with a view to cleave the city of the enemies into pieces. That weapon which was burning in great flames like a great fire spreading radiance, flew into the midst of the enemy's army and instantly every one near it fell dead. Thus it flew about among the asuras and burnt them to ashes. Then turning round and round in the air it drank the blood shed on the earth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 19).

SUDARŚANA XV. Indra had a chariot named Sudarśana. (Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 3).

SUDĀSA I. A King of Kosala. This Sudās a was a King who ought to be remembered every morning and evening. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 57).

SUDĀS II. An Āryan King named Sudās is stated in Ṛgveda. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda Maṇḍala 1, Anuvaka 11, Sūkta 63, that Viśvāmitra saved this King from a danger. (See under Dāśarājña).

SUDĀSA III. A King of Ayodhyā. He was the son of Sarvakāma and the father of Kalmāṣapāda. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 4, 4, 30).

SUDATTĀ. One of the prominent wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The palace Ketumān in Dvārakā, was given to this wife. (Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva. Chapter 38).

ŚUDDHA. A King of the Bhṛgu dynasty. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha mentions that he was the son of Anenas and Sūci's father.

SUDEṢṆĀ I. The wife of Virāṭa, the King of Matsya.

1) General information. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 6, that this Sudeṣṇā, the daughter of the King of Kekaya, had the name Citrā also.

2) Other details.

(i) During the pseudonymity, Pāñcālī lived with Sudeṣṇā in the guise of Sairandhrī. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 9).

(ii) Sudeṣṇā agreed to the request of Kīcaka to get Sairandhrī for him, as he was fascinated by her beauty. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 6).

(iii) Sudeṣṇā sent Kīcaka to the house of Sairandhrī. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 15).

(iv) Draupadī consoled Sudeṣṇā who was miserable at the death of Kīcaka. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 48).

(v) Sudeṣṇā asked Draupadī to go away from the palace. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 3).

(vi) In connection with the marriage of her daughter Uttarā, Sudeṣṇā went to Upaplavya with Draupadī. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 30).

SUDEṢṆĀ II. The wife of the King Bali. Five sons named Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Puṇḍra and Suhma were born to the hermit Dīrghatamas by this queen Sudeṣṇā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 98 : 30; Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Harivaṁśa 1, 39).

SUDEṢṆA I. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇī. (See under Rukmiṇī).

SUDEṢṆA II. A country in India, very famous, in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 4).

SUDEVA I. A brahmin who was a favourite of the King of Vidarbha. It was this brahmin who was sent by the King of Vidarbha to search for Damayantī. (See under Damayantī).

SUDEVA II. A captain of the army of King Ambarīṣa. He was calm and fearless. Sudeva met with a heroic death in a battle and attained heaven. Indra gave him a suitable place. Later Ambarīṣa died and came to heaven. There he saw his captain Sudeva and was amazed. He asked Indra how it was that Sudeva was given a place in heaven. Indra replied that to fight fearlessly in the battle-field and meet with heroic death, was a yajña (sacrifice) and that due to this yajña Sudeva attained heaven. The King asked, when this took place. Indra continued :— "Once Ambarīṣa sent Sudeva to subdue the asuras and giants. Sudeva entered the battlefield and looked at the vast army of the enemy. Finding that it was impossible to defeat the army of giants, he sat down and meditated on Śiva, who appeared before him and encouraged him. A fierce battle followed in which Sudeva annihilated the army of the giants completely and he himself met with a heroic death. That is how he obtained heaven. (M.B. Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Śānti Parva, Chapter 98).

SUDEVA III. The son of Haryaśva, the King of Kāśī. He was quite valiant and radiant. After the death of his father he was anointed as King of Kāśī. As soon as he became King, the sons of King Vītahavya attacked Sudeva and captured him. After this Divodāsa became the King of Kā'ī. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13).

SUDEVA IV. A famous King. Nābhāga married Suprabhā the daughter of this King Sudeva. The following is a story taken from Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa stating how this Sudeva who was a Kṣatriya by birth, became a Vaiśya by the curse of hermit Pramati.

Once Nala, the friend of Sudeva, and the relative of Dhūmrākṣa, after having drunk too much liquor, tried to rape the wife of the hermit Pramati. All this happened while King Sudeva was standing silently near Nala. Pramati requested King Sudeva repeatedly to save his wife. Sudeva replied : 'The Kṣatriya who could help the needy, could save your wife also. But I am a Vaiśya." This arrogance of the King made the hermit angry. "May you become a Vaiśya." The hermit cursed the King. Sudeva repented and requested for liberation from the curse. "When a Kṣatriya steals away your daughter you will recover the lost feelings of Kṣatriya." The hermit gave this liberation from the curse.

Because of this curse Nābhāga stole away Suprabhā the daughter of Sudeva and Sudeva got back the lost feelings of Kṣatriya.

SUDEVĀ I. A daughter of the King of Aṅga named Ariha. The King Ṛkṣa was her son. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 24).

SUDEVĀ II. A princess born in the dynasty of King Daśārha. Vikuṇṭha, a King of the Pūru dynasty married Sudevā. The King Ajamīḍha was their son. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 36).

SUDEVĀ III. The wife of Ikṣvāku who was the son of Manu. This Sudevā was the daughter of Devarāta the King of Kāśī. Ikṣvāku and Sudevā are said to be the incarnations of Viṣṇu and Devī Lakṣmī respectively. While the couple were walking about in the forest, they saw a she-hog. That hog was the cursed form of a Brahmin woman named Sudevā. Sudevā, the wife of Ikṣvāku gave the merits she had earned in one year by her good deeds to Sudevā the she-hog and liberated her from her curse. This story occurs in Padma Purāṇa Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapter 42. The story is given below:

Once King Ikṣvāku and his wife Sudevā were hunting on the banks of the Gaṅgā. Then a big hog came there with his wife and children. The hog was afraid of Ikṣvāku. So he said to his wife:—"Look ! beloved ! Ikṣvāku the valiant, the son of Manu, is come for hunting. I am going to fight with him." His wife said. "How did you get this bravery to fight with the king, you who always try to evade the forest-men ?" "It is not bravery, my love. It is because I could go to heaven if I fight with the king valiantly and meet with heroic death", replied the hog. The wife tried her utmost to dissuade her husband from his attempt. The children also tried to stop him. They could not change his mind. So all of them decided to help him as much as they could in his fight. They got ready for a fight against Ikṣvāku and his army.

The king's army saw the preparations of the hogs and their resolute stand. Struck with fear, they informed Ikṣvāku about it. The king ordered the noble hog to be caught. Ikṣvāku and his wife mounted on horse and followed the army. All the hounds ran towards the hogs barking. The army sent a volley of arrows at the hogs. The hog and his wife stopped the arrows. The army could not defeat the hogs. At last the king himself killed the hog with a club. While the king was looking on, that noble hog was changed to a noble Gandharva with four hands and divine clothes and ornaments. Leaving his old body of hog on the earth he rose up into the sky like the Sun and went to heaven. Seeing this sight Sudevā was struck with fear. She got down from the chariot and called the wife of the hog towards her. The wife of the hog, wounded all over, came to the queen Sudevā. Sudevā asked her about the previous history of her dead husband. The hog's wife said: "Lady ! If you feel interested I shall tell you about the previous life of my dead husband and myself."

"My dead husband was a Gandharva named Raṅkavidyādhara, in the previous birth. Once he sat in the shade of a tree near the hermitage of Pulastya and began to sing with accompaniment. As the singing caused disturbance to his solitude the hermit Pulastya came and requested the Gandharva to shift to some other place. Raṅkavidyādhara did not like to comply with the request of the hermit. At last Pulastya removed his hermitage to another place. Raṅkavidyādhara walked in search of Pulastya. Finally the Gandharva saw Pulastya. Seeing that he was alone, the Gandharva took the shape of a hog and entered the hermitage and began to wound with his tusk and to molest that radiant sage Pulastya. Thinking it to be a mere animal Pulastya suffered it for a long time. The hog continued its actions of molestation. It passed excrements in front of the sage, danced before him, played in front of him, fell down in the courtyard and rolled and did various other things. As it was an animal Pulastya forgave him. One day Raṅkavidyādhara entered the hermitage as a hog, roared aloud, laughed aloud, cried aloud, sang aloud and in various other ways tried to change the mind of the hermit. Seeing all these, Pulastya began to think that it was not a hog. "A hog will not try to molest one continuously. I forgave him thinking him to be a mere animal. This must be that wicked Gandharva." Thus recognizing him Pulastya got angry and cursed him thus: "You tried to violate my penance in the shape of a hog. So you, great sinner; take the next birth as a hog." With grief the Gandharva ran to Indra and informed him of everything. Indra requested Pulastya to liberate the Gandharva from the curse. Accordingly Pulastya gave him remission that he would regain his original form when he was killed by the hands of the immensely good king Ikṣvāku."

Sudevā was amazed on hearing this story of the dead hog, and asked her again. "You hog! You speak like a human being. How is it?"

The wife of the hog continued the story. "Lady! I also have taken rebirth as a hog. In my previous birth I was the daughter of a Brahmin named Vasudatta (Vāsudeva) in the city of Śrīpura in Kaliṅga. They named me Sudevā (Vasudevā). Because of the unlimited caressing and fondling of my father I grew up as an arrogant girl. In the meanwhile a Brahmin youth named Śivaśarmā, who was well-versed in all the branches of knowledge, and whose parents were dead, came to my house. My father gave me to that brahmin. I lived with him in my father's house. Being proud of the wealth and prosperity of my parents I did not care to render the services due to my husband. My husband who was a peaceful man bore everything. By and by I became wicked. At last because of my wickedness and immorality my husband left the country. My father hated me and expelled me from the house. My father feared that some calamity would happen to me as Kaṁsa was born to Padmāvatī, the wife of Ugrasena, by her illegal connection with persons other than her husband."

Hearing about the birth of Kaṁsa, Sudevā asked the she-hog to tell her about the circumstances which led to the illegal connections of Padmāvatī. The wife of the hog continued. "In days of old there was a king in Mathurāpurī named Ugrasena, who married Padmāvatī the daughter of king Satyaketu of Vidarbha. While the couple were living happily in Mathurāpurī Satyaketu wanted to see his daughter. He sent a messenger to Mathurāpurī and brought Padmāvatī to Vidarbha. She walked along the vicinity of the palace in which she was born, enjoying the beauty of the scenery. She walked on and arrived on the mountain called Puṣpavān, and sat on the bank of a lake. At that time a Gandharva named Godila (Dramila) came there. He fell in love with her. He took the shape of Ugrasena and came near her and talked with her. Thinking that her husband had come from Mathurā to see her she embraced him. After a while she understood that the visitor was not her husband. She began to curse him. The visitor admitted that he was Godila an attendant of Vaiśravaṇa. Godila went on his way. But she had become pregnant by that time. Her parents tried in various ways to destroy the child in her womb. One day the infant lying in her womb told her thus: "Mother! you do not know who I am. I am the rebirth of a powerful asura named Kālanemi. In ancient days Viṣṇu killed me in a battle between the gods and asuras. I have entered into your womb for revenge. Mother! you need not take the trouble to destroy me." Saying so, the infant stopped speaking. After ten years Padmāvatī gave birth to the mighty and strong Kaṁsa. He was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and he attained heaven."

Sudevā was struck with wonder at the story of Kaṁsa. She asked the she-hog to continue her own story. She continued her own story. "I have said that my father expelled me. Being shameless I walked away from there soon. Nobody helped me. Those who saw me scolded me. Days passed. Afflicted by a horrible disease, and travelling in this manner, I came to a big house. I entered the courtyard and begged for alms. It was the house of my husband Śivaśarmā. When I abandoned him he married another woman named Maṅgalā and was leading a prosperous life. Maṅgalā gave me food. Śivaśarmā asked me who I was. I told him my story. He remembered me, his former wife. Maṅgalā also felt compassion for me. They gave me gold ornaments and made me stay there. But my conscience pricked me. Thus burning internally I died.

My soul went to hell. After the suffering of a very long period, I took birth again as a Jackal. Then I became a dog, and then a snake. After that I passed through the births of a hen, a cat and a rat. Thus Brahmā had put me in the wombs of all kinds of animals. Now I have taken the birth of a she-hog. Lady! Your husband Ikṣvāku is the incarnation of Viṣṇu in portion and yourself, that of Lakṣmī in portion. If you would give me the merits you have earned for one day by your good deeds, I could leave off all these mean births and attain heaven."

The eyes of Sudevā were full when she heard the story of the hog. She gave to the she-hog, the merits she had earned by good deeds for one year. The hog was changed to a divine woman of youth and beauty. Immediately a divine chariot came down from heaven and took her to heaven, while everybody was looking on. Ikṣvāku and Sudevā returned to their palace much pleased at the redemption of the she-hog.

SUDHĀMĀ I. A group of Gods. The name of the Manu of the third Manvantara was Uttama. The ruler of the devas was the Indra named Suśānti. There were five groups or gaṇas of twelve devas each, called the Satyas, the Japas, the Pratardanas, Sudhāmās and the Vaśavarttins. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 3).

SUDHĀMĀ II. A golden mountain in the Kuśa island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 10).

SUDHĀMĀ III. One of the sons of King Ghṛtapṛṣṭha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5), SUDHANUS I. A King of the Puru dynasty. He was the son of King Kuru who had founded Kurukṣetra. Four sons named Sudhanvā, Sudhanus, Parīkṣit and Arimejaya, were born to Kuru. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SUDHANUS II. A King who was the son of Kuru and the father of Suhotra. The King Uparicaravasu was a King of this dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUDHANUS III. A warrior from Pāñcāla who took the side of the Pāṇḍavas. This mighty warrior was the son of King Drupada and the brother of Vīraketu. In the battle of Bhārata, when Vīraketu was killed, Sudhanus gathered his brothers and attacked Droṇa. In that fight Sudhanus was killed by Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 98, Verses 37-40).

SUDHANVĀ I. A guard of the ends of the quarters. In the beginning of creation Brahmā made four guards of the four ends. They were Sudhanvā in the East, Śaṅkhapāda in the South, Ketumān in the West and Hiraṇyaromā in the North. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

SUDHANVĀ II. Son of hermit Aṅgiras. Some information gathered from Ṛgveda and Mahābhārata is given below.

(i) There arose a contest between Sudhanvā and Virocana, the son of Prahlāda for marrying the damsel Keśinī. (For detailed story see under Keśinī V).

(ii) This hermit visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

(iii) Sudhanvā was the eighth son of Aṅgiras.

(iv) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 24, that this Sudhanvā gave Subrahmaṇya a chariot, in the battle between the Devas and the asuras.

(v) Sudhanvā had three sons called Ṛbhu, Vibhvā and Vāja. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 111).

SUDHANVĀ III. A great warrior who fought against the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Kurukṣetra. He was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 42).

SUDHANVĀ IV. A Sudhanvā who was the son of Drupada, is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 44. This warrior sided with the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Kurukṣetra and fought against the Kauravas. When his brother Vīraketu was killed, he and his brothers joined together and attacked Droṇa. In that fight Droṇa killed Sudhanvā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 45).

SUDHANVĀ V. An ancient King of Bhārata. A story that King Māndhātā defeated this Sudhanvā in battle, occurs in Mahā Bhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 62

SUDHANVĀ VI. A King of Sāṅkāśya. This King surrounded the city of Mithilā and sent word that unless the bow of Śiva and the princess Sītā were given to him he would kill Janaka, who subsequently fought a battle with him. In this battle Sudhanvā was killed. Sāṅkāśya, the kingdom of Sudhanvā was given to Kuśadhvaja by his brother Janaka. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 71).

SUDHARMĀ I. The assembly hall of the Devas. (the gods). (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

SUDHARMĀ II. The great assembly hall of the Yādavas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 10, that at the time of the carrying away of Subhadrā, the soldiers ran to Sudharmā and reported the matter there. This hall had the name 'Dāśārhī' also. This great hall was one yojana long and one yojana broad. It was in this hall that Śrī Kṛṣṇa received Indra. (M.B. Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

SUDHARMĀ III. Wife of Mātali, who was the charioteer of Indra. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 95, that a daughter named Guṇakeśī was born to Mātali by Sudharmā.

SUGOPTĀ. An eternal Viśvadeva (god concerned with offerings to the manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 37).

SUGRĪVA I. Bāli and Sugrīva were brothers. Their mother was Aruṇa who once put the guise of a woman. At that time he was called by the name Aruṇī. Bāli was the son born to Indra by Aruṇī and Sugrīva was the son born to the Sun by Aruṇī. Both of them were brought up in the hermitage of Gautama. When the King of Kiṣkindhā Ṛkṣarajas died, Bāli was anointed the king of Kiṣkindhā. Sugrīva lived with Bāli, serving him. At this time Bāli engaged in a battle with the asura Dundubhi. Bāli chased Dundubhi into a cave. Placing Sugrīva at the mouth of the cave, Bāli went in. By the magic and sorcery of Dundubhi, it appeared to Sugrīva that Bāli was killed by Dundubhi. Sugrīva returned to Kiṣkindhā. Bāli who came out, followed Sugrīva to kill him due to misunderstanding. Bāli chased Sugrīva all over the world. It is mentioned in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 46, that the knowledge of the lay-out of the various countries in the world that Sugrīva got in this running, helped him later, in the search for Sītā.

At last Sugrīva entered Ṛṣyamūkācala. Bāli had been once cursed that if he entered this mountain his head would be broken into pieces. Hanūmān became the minister of Sugrīva. It was during this period that Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa came by that way in search of Sītā. Sugrīva and Śrī Rāma entered into a treaty. Bāli should be killed and Kiṣkindhā should be given to Sugrīva in place of which Rāma should be helped to find out Sītā and get her back.

Śrī Rāma killed Bāli and gave Kiṣkindhā to Sugrīva, who sent monkey-armies in all directions to find out Sītā. Hanūmān found out Sītā and returned to Śrī Rāma, who fought a great battle with Rāvaṇa, in which battle Sugrīva took a prominent part. It was Kumbhakarṇa, who oppressed the monkey army much. When he caught Sugrīva, Kumbhakarṇa lost his ears and nose. Then he caught hold of the monkey warriors and Śrī Rāma cut off his hands with arrows. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 1). After the war, when Rāma and others returned to Ayodhyā, Sugrīva also accompanied them. After that Sugrīva returned to Kiṣkindhā. After a few years Candragupta, the second son of Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa, carried away the daughter of Sugrīva. Hearing this, Śrī Rāma confronted Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa, who was killed by the arrow of Sītā.

Sugrīva participated in the horse-sacrifice performed by Śrī Rāma. The control of the army was in the hands of Sugrīva, the financial affairs, with Vibhīṣaṇa and central powers, with Lakṣmaṇa. When the sacrifice was completed, Sugrīva returned to Kiṣkindhā.

SUGRĪVA II. An asura. This asura was the minister of Śumbha, an asura-chief. (Devī Bhāgavata).

Bhīmasena also conquered this country during his regional conquest of the east. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 16).

SUHMA II. A country situated in the mountainous region of North India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 21, that Arjuna conquered this country during his regional conquest of the North.

SUHOTĀ. See under Suhotra II.

SUHOTRA I. A son of the hermit Jamadagni. Five sons named Rumaṇvān, Suhotra, Vasu, Viśvāvasu and Paraśurāma were born to Jamadagni by his wife Reṇukā (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 58).

SUHOTRA II. A son of emperor Bharata. (For genealogy, see under Bharata I).

Five sons were born to Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta. They were Suhotra, Suhotā, Gaya, Garbha and Suketu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SUHOTRA III.

1). General information. A king of the Candra dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24, that he was the grandson of emperor Bharata and the son of the elder brother of Bhumanyu. Puṣkariṇī was the mother of this Suhotra.

2). Other details.

(i) This Suhotra got suzerainty over the entire earth. After this he conducted horse-sacrifice and several other sacrifices. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 25).

(ii) Suhotra married Suvarṇā, a princess of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. Three sons, Ajamīḍha, Sumīḍha and Purumīḍha were born to them. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 30).

(iii) Suhotra was a generous king. (M. B. Droṇa-Parva, Chapter 56).

(iv) Being pleased at his hospitality, Indra showered a rain of gold in the country for a year. Rivers were full of golden water. Indra showered golden fishes also in these rivers. But the king divided all this gold among Brahmins. (M. B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 25).

SUHOTRA IV. Son of Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas. Sahadeva married Vijayā, daughter of Dyutimān, the king of Madra. The son Suhotra was born to them. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 80).

SUHOTRA V. A hermit. This hermit honoured Yudhiṣṭhira to a great extent. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 24).

SUHOTRA VI. A king of the Kuru dynasty. Once this king obstructed the way of Śibi, born in the family of King Uśīnara. He let Śibi go only after the intervention of Nārada. (See under Śibi).

SUHOTRA VII. A giant. This giant was one of those kings who had ruled over the entire earth and had to leave the place due to fate. (M. B. Śānti Parva. Chapter 277, Verse 51).

SUHU. A Yādava king who was the son of Ugrasena. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUHVA. (SUHMA) A king of the Bharata dynasty. Suhva was the son of Bali, and grandson of Sutapas. Bali had no direct sons. Being miserable due to the absence of sons, Bali approached the hermit Dīrghatamas, by whom the queen gave birth to six sons. They were Aṅga, Vanga, Kaliṅga, Suhva(or Suhma), Puṇḍra and Adrūpa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUJĀNU. A great saint. This hermit stopped Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to Hastināpura and conversed with him. (Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

SUJĀTA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He attacked Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata and Bhīmasena killed him. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 5).

SUJĀTA II. A monkey King. Sujāta was one of the sons born to Pulaha by his wife Śvetā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 2 : 7, 180-181).

SUJĀTĀ. The daughter of the hermit Uddālaka. (See under Khagodara).

SUJYEṢṬHA. A King who was the son of Agnimitra and the father of Vasumitra. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

ŚUKA I. (ŚUKADEVA). The son of Vyāsa.

1) Birth. The sage Vyāsa once wished to have a son. So he began to worship Śiva for the purpose. His desire was to have a son who would combine in him the essential qualities of fire, earth, water, air and ether He did tapas for a hundred years. Because of the austerity of his tapas, his locks of hair began to blaze like flames of fire. At last Śiva appeared and blessed him to have a son according to his wish.

After receiving his boon, Vyāsa returned to his āśrama. Soon after his arrival there, an Apsaras named Ghṛtācī came there in the form of a parrot. On seeing her beauty Vyāsa had an involuntary emission of semen. Śuka's birth was from this semen. (For further details see Para 2, under Ghṛtācī).

2) Śuka's Boyhood. It was Śiva who performed the Upanayana (wearing the sacred thread) ceremony of Śuka. Since he was born out of the semen which was the result of the fascination for a parrot, the boy was named "Śuka". He was a divine boy. Soon after his birth, he grew up into an exceptionally brilliant boy. He went to Bṛhaspati and mastered all knowledge. After staying with Bṛhaspati for some years, he returned to his father's āśrama.

3) In Vyāsa's hut. Vyāsa was very happy at the arrival of his son after completing his education. In due course he thought of getting his son married to a suitable girl and to prepare him for an ideal Gṛhasthāśrama. But Śuka did not fall in with his father's proposal. All the efforts of Vyāsa to persuade him were in vain. At last he told Śuka that he was pleased with his stern resolve and allowed him to pursue his life as a Sannyāsī, if he wished for it.

From that time Śukadeva and Sūta, the disciple of Vyāsa began the study of Bhāgavata. But Śuka did not find happiness in that study either. Vyāsa taught him spiritual philosophy. Even then Śuka could not find mental satisfaction. So his father sent him to Mithilā. At that time there was none who equalled Janaka, the then King of Mithilā. Before sending him away, Vyāsa made his son promise that he would return to his āśrama, immediately after leaving Mithilā.

4) Śuka in Mithilā. Śuka started his journey to Mithilā on foot. He passed through many lands and cities on his way. He visited many places inhabited by different classes of people like yogins, sages, mendicants, Vaikhānasas, Śāktas, Pāśupatas, Sauras, Śaivas, Vaiṣṇavas, etc. After taking two years to cross Mahāmeru and one year for crossing Himālaya he reached Mithilā. At the very sight of the land of Mithilā with its inhabitants living in luxury and prosperity, Śukadeva was filled with wonder.

One of the sentries at the palace gate who saw the dignified bearing and majestic figure of Śuka, standing at the entrance, greeted him with joined palms and conducted him into the royal palace. From there, a minister took him to the interior of the palace, where a passage led him to a beautiful park full of flowering trees and swimming pools. After giving him a seat in the park the minister left the place. There, he was attended by women who were like celestial beauties. But Śuka was not happy even in their company or attentions. He spent the whole night in deep meditation. The next morning King Janaka visited Śuka. After the exchange of customary greetings, Janaka enquired of him the object of his visit. Śuka answered that he came there to learn from Janaka the way to salvation, as directed by his father.

On hearing this, Janaka said :—"After Upanayana, (investiture with the sacred thread) a Brāhmaṇa should study the Vedas. He should discharge his debts to the Devas and to his Pitṛs by tapas, worship of the guru and Brahmacarya. After the study of the Vedas, after mastering the senses, he should give Gurudakṣiṇā (fee to the teacher). Then the pupil may return home with the permission of the Guru (preceptor). After reaching home he should begin gṛhasthāśrama. After the birth of children, he should follow Vānaprasthāśrama. In that āśrama, a Brāhmaṇa should kindle fire in his soul. He should then renounce the dual state, rise above all desire and remain in Brahmāśrama."

After receiving Janaka's advice, Śuka returned to his father.

5) Domestic Life. Śukadeva married the beautiful Pīvarī, daughter of the Pitṛs and thus began his gṛhasthāśrama in Vyāsa's āśrama. He had four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devaśruta and a daughter named Kīrti, by Pīvarī. Kīrti was married by Aṇu, the son of King Vibhrāja. (Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha).

6) Other details.

(i) Vyāsa composed Bhārata and taught it to Śuka. (M.B. Chapter 1, Verse 104).

(ii) Śukadeva recited the Mahābhārata story containing 14 lakhs of stanzas to Gandharvas, Yakṣas and Rākṣasas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 106; Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 55).

(iii) Śukadeva taught them the entire Vedas and the Mahābhārata story. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 89).

(iv) Śuka attended Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 11).

7) The End. While Śukadeva was thus leading his family life, teaching the Vedas and reading the Purāṇas, Nārada happened to pay a visit to him. His conversation with Nārada drew Śukadeva nearer to the path of Mokṣa. He left his father, Veda Vyāsa and his own family, went to the peak of Kailāsa and stayed there doing tapas to Paramaśiva. At last he became a perfect Siddha and rising up to the Heavens shone there as a second sun. Devarṣis began to praise Śukadeva.

His father Vyāsa was in deep grief at his disappearance and left his āśrama in search of Śuka. After wandering in many places he came to Kailāsa where Śuka had performed tapas and called him. Śiva who saw him utterly tired and weak took pity on him and comforted him in the following words: "Did you not pray to me for a son who would combine in himself the essences of the Pañcabhūtas? As a result of the tapas you have done and by my blessing, such a glorious son was born to you. Śuka has attained the highest position which is inaccessible to those who have not conquered their senses and difficult to attain even by the gods. Why do you worry about Śuka? The glory acquired by your eminent son will continue undiminished as long as the mountains and oceans exist. I give you my blessing that an image exactly like your son will always accompany you from today." Just then, an image which closely resembled his son appeared before Vyāsa who was filled with rapture.

It is believed that even today if any one calls Śiva at the place where Śiva spoke to Vyāsa in answer to his call, Śiva would respond to the call. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapters 332 and 333; Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha).

ŚUKA II. A messenger of Rāvaṇa. This Śuka had a friend named Sāraṇa. These two persons were expert spies who used to gather secret and important pieces of information from the strongholds of Rāvaṇa's friends and enemies and passed them on to Rāvaṇa.

Soon after Śrī Rāma entered Laṅkā, Rāvaṇa sent Śuka and Sāraṇa to Śrī Rāma's camp. After taking a distant view of the surroundings, they entered the camp of Śrī Rāma in the form of monkeys. Taking care not to come within the observation of Vibhīṣaṇa, they went about the military camps, gathering secret information. Just then they were met by Jāmbavān and Hanūmān. After closely observing them for a considerable time, they understood that they were enemy spies. The monkey-heroes promptly seized them and produced them before Sugrīva. Confused and frightened under a shower of questions they sought the protection of Śrī Rāma. While Śrī Rāma was interrogating them, Vibhīṣaṇa happened to come there. At his sight, Śuka and Sāraṇa were alarmed. Grasping the whole situation in an instant, Vibhīṣaṇa kicked both of them when they assumed their former shapes as Rākṣasas. The monkey-leaders sprang at them. The Rākṣasas begged for pardon and prayed for Śrī Rāma's protection. Śrī Rāma forgave them and set them free. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa; Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

ŚUKA III. A king of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚUKA IV. A king of the Śaryāti dynasty. He was the son of Pṛṣata. He had conquered all countries in the world and after performing many yāgas, he renounced his kingdom and attained Mokṣa by doing tapas on Śataśṛṅga mountain. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 123).

ŚUKA V. Son of Subala, king of Gāndhāra. He was slain by Irāvān in the course of the Bhārata Yuddha. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 26).

ŚUKA VI. Son of the monkey Śarabha. Ṛkṣa was the son of Śuka by Vyāghrī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3, 8, 208).

ŚUKA VII. A Maharṣi who was the contemporary of Aṇuha of Dakṣiṇa Pāñcāla and of king Brahmadatta. This sage lived before the time of the other Śuka who was the son of Vyāsa.

This sage Śuka had six sons, named Bhūriśravas, Śambhu, Prabhu, Kṛṣṇa, Saura (Sauraprabha) and Devaśruta by his two wives Pīvarī and Ekaśṛṅgā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3-8-93: Vāyu Purāṇa, 70-84; Devī Bhāgavata, 1-14; Nārada. 1-58).

SUKALĀ. A woman who loved and honoured her husband.

SUKAKṢA. A mountain. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38, that this mountain, which is famous in the Purāṇas, stands on the western side of Dvārakā.

SUKAMALA. A Yakṣa. This Yakṣa was the son born to Maṇivara by Devajanī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3. 7. 129).

ŚUKANĀBHA. A Rākṣasa on the side of Rāvaṇa. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 6).

SUKANDAKA. A country in ancient India. (Mahābhārata Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 53.)

SUKANYĀ I. The wife of the hermit Cyavana. See under Cyavana, Para 3.

SUKANYĀ II. The wife of the hermit Mātariśvā. The hermit Maṅkaṇaka was the son born to Mātariśvā by Sukanyā. (See under Maṅkaṇaka).

ŚŪKARA. A country celebrated in the Purāṇas. Kṛti, King of Śūkara had presented thousands of Elephants at Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya yāga. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 25).

SŪKARA. A hell. (See under Kāla, the section 'Hell').

SŪKARAMUKHA. A hell. (See under Kāla, the section 'Hell').

SUKARMĀ I. One of the two followers given to Subrahmaṇya by Vidhātā. Suvrata was the other follower. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 42).

SUKARMĀ II. One of the teacher priests of Sāmaveda. This Sukarmā, the son of Sutvā, divided the Sāmaveda into a thousand branches. (See under Guruparamparā.)

SUKARMĀ III. A Brāhmaṇa who had earned merits of good deeds by serving his parents. (For further details see under Pippalāda I).

ŚUKASAṄGĪTI. A Gandharva. (For further details see under Pramohinī).

SUKEŚA (SUKEŚĪ).

1) General information A rākṣasa (giant) who was the son of Vidyutkeśa and Sālakaṭaṅkā. When Brahmā asked the Subjects to look after his creation those who said 'Rakṣāmahe' became Rākṣasas (giants) and those who said 'Yakṣāmahe', the Yakṣas (a clan of semi gods). Once two brothers named Heti and Praheti were born in the clan of Rākṣasas. Praheti remained unmarried and entered the life of penance. Heti married Bhayā the sister of Kāla. A son named Vidyutkeśa was born to the couple. Vidyutkeśa married Sālakaṭaṅkā, the daughter of Sandhyā. Sālakaṭaṅkā delivered a son. But wishing to enjoy the company of her husband, she abandoned the son and lived with her husband. The child which was as bright as the rising Sun, putting its folded fist in its mouth, cried aloud. Paramaśiva and Pārvatī who were travelling along the sky mounted on the bull, heard the cry of the infant and looked at the spot from which the cry arose. On seeing the infant, Pārvatī took pity on it. Śiva blessed the child, which instantly grew as old as its mother. Śiva gave the Rākṣasa prince immortality and a city which could travel through the sky. Pārvatī said that Rākṣasa women would, in future deliver the moment they became pregnant and that the child would grow equal to its mother in age, as soon as it was born. Sukeśa was the son of Vidyutkeśa and Sālakaṭaṅkā. Sukeśa was delighted at the boons he got, and travelled wherever he pleased, in his city.

Sukeśa married Devavatī the daughter of Grāmaṇī a Gandharva. Mālī, Sumālī and Mālyavān were the sons of this couple. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

2) The city of Sukeśa fell on the ground. Sukeśa pleased Śiva by penance. Śiva made him invincible and gave him a city which travelled through the sky. Because of these boons, the Rākṣasa became righteous and pious. He lived in the city with other Rākṣasas. Once Sukeśa went to the forest Māgadha and visited the hermits there. He asked them about the means to attain prosperity in this world and the other worlds. The hermits gave him long exhortations. They told him about the various hells given to sinners. Thus Sukeśa became righteous-minded and saintly. He returned to his city and called together all the other Rākṣasas and spoke to them about what he had learned from the hermits. He said: "The hermits taught me the means to attain heaven. They are Non-killing, Truth, not stealing, cleanliness, control of all outward going energies, liberality, kindness, forgiveness, abstinence, good usages etc. So it is my order that all of you observe these good things." The Rākṣasas were pleased at the words of Sukeśa. They began to lead a righteous life. In this way they got wealth and prosperity. Their radiance increased to such an extent that the Sun and the moon and the stars found it difficult to continue their travels.

Thus the city of the Rākṣasa shone as the sun in the day and as the moon in the night. The progress of the Sun in the day became indiscernible. Due to its brightness the Rākṣasa city seemed to be the moon and thinking that it was night, the lotus flowers folded in the day and bloomed in the night. Havoc was caused in the earth as well as in the world of the gods. The sun became unpopular. So he tried to find out the cause. At last he found out the cause. He became angry. He looked with fury at the city of the Rākṣasas. Hit by the look, the city lost its merits and began to sink down to the earth.

When the city fell down Sukeśa called Śiva and cried aloud. Śiva looked round to see what happened to his devotee. He understood that the sun was the culprit. Śiva looked at the sun with furious eyes. Instantly the sun was dropped from the Solar region to the air. The hermits saw the Sun coming slowly to the earth. They called out loudly. "If you want to be well in falling, go and fall in Harikṣetra." The sun called out, "What is Harikṣetra?" "Harikṣetra is Vārāṇasī from Yogaśāyī to Keśavadarśana", the hermits replied. Hearing this the Sun fell in Vārāṇasī. Then to lessen the heat the sun dipped and splashed in Asi tīrtha and Varuṇā tīrtha.

Brahmā knew this, and informed Śiva of it. Śiva came to Vārāṇasī and took the sun by his hands and gave him the name 'Lola' and sent him back in the chariot. After that Brahmā went to Sukeśa and sent his city with the Rākṣasas in it, back to the sky, and the Sun was fixed in the sky as before. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 15)

SUKEŚĪ I (SUKEŚA). See under Sukeśa.

SUKEŚĪ II. The daughter of the king of Gāndhāra. This Sukeśī was the wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38 that Śrī-Kṛṣṇa gave her a palace, the doors of which shone as the gold of Jāmbūnada.

SUKEŚĪ III. A celestial maid of Alakāpurī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 45, that she performed a dance in honour of the visit of Aṣṭāvakra, in the palace of Kubera.

SUKEŚĪ IV. The daughter of Ketuvīrya the king of Magadha. She was married to Marutta (the third). (Markaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 128).

SUKETANA. A king of the Bhṛgu family. He was the son of Sunīta and the father of Dharmaketu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUKETU I. A king of the Solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9 that this king was the son of Nandivardhana and the father of Devarāta.

SUKETU II. A. king of the Pūru dynasty. He became famous under the name Viratha. He was one of the five sons of Bharata. The five sons were Suhotra, Suhotā, Gaya, Garbha and Suketu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SUKETU III. A king of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 9, that this Suketu and his son Sunāmā were present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī.

SUKETU IV. A son of Śiśupāla. He was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Droṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 33).

SUKETU V. A mighty king who stood on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas in the Bhārata-battle. This king who was the son of Citraketu, was killed by the arrow of the teacher Kṛpa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 21).

SUKETU VI. The father of Tāṭakā. It is stated in Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, that this Suketu was the son of the Gandharva King Surakṣaka. (See under Tāṭakā for further details).

ŚUKĪ. A daughter of Kaśyapa Prajāpati. Five daughters named Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī were born to Kaśyapa by his wife Tāmrā. Krauñcī gave birth to owls. Bhāsas were born to Bhāsī and eagles and kites were born to Śyenī. Dhṛtarāṣṭrī gave birth to swans and Cakravākas. Śukī gave birth to Natā and Vinatā was the daughter of Natā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

ŚUKLA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was a native of Pāñcāla country.

Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 45, mentions that he was slain by Karṇa during the Bhārata battle.

ŚUKRA (ŚUKRĀCĀRYA) I. Preceptor of the Asuras.

2) Love story. Once the sage Bhṛgu lived in the valley of Mandara mountain, performing austere tapas. Śukra who was then a boy, used to attend on his father. One day when Bhṛgu was absorbed in "Nirvikalpasamādhi" (deep meditation) the lonely Śukra was appreciating the beauty of the sky above him. There was no one else by his side. At that time he happened to see an exceptionally beautiful Apsarā woman passing across the sky. His heart was filled with delight at the sight. All his thoughts were centred on her and he sat absorbed in her bewitching charm. In his imagination he followed Indra and reached Indraloka. Indra greeted him with honour. After that Śukra, attended by the heavenly beings went about sight-seeing in Heaven. There he unexpectedly came across the Apsarā beauty whom he had seen earlier, in the midst of several other women. They fell in love at first sight. To fulfil his desire Śukra enveloped the whole place in darkness. The other women left the place. The apsarā beauty approached Śukra and both of them entered a hut formed by the thick foliage of creeping plants and indulged in sensual pleasures. Since Śukra spent a period of eight Caturyugas like this in her company, he became weak in his virtue and descended to the earth. Then he became conscious of his physical being. His depraved soul was stopped at the moon. It reached the earth through mist and grew up as paddy plants. A Brāhmaṇa who was a native of Daśārṇa land ate the rice which was cooked from the ears of those paddy plants. Śukra's soul in the shape of Śukra entered the womb of the Brāhmaṇa's wife and in due course took his birth. Because of his close association with Munis, that boy grew up like a sage and spent a period of one Manvantara, leading an austere life in the valley of the Meru mountain. At that time his Apsarā woman had been born as a female deer, as the result of a curse. By their connection in the previous birth, the Brāhmaṇa fell in love with that female deer and begot a human child by his union with her. With that the austerities of his life were at an end. All his thoughts were now directed towards the future glory of his son and he ignored even his spiritual duties. Not long after, he died of snake bite. Later, he was born as the son of the king of Madra and ruled the country for many years. After that he took birth in many other wombs and at last was born as the son of a Maharṣi living on the bank of the river Gaṅgā. Śukra's body which was by the side of Bhṛgu dropped to the earth after being exposed to the wind and sun for a long time. But owing to Bhṛgu's power of tapas and the holiness of the āśrama, birds and animals did not eat the body. After 1,000 divyavatsaras, sage Bhṛgu opened his eyes from his samādhi but he did not find his son near him. A famished and worn out body was lying before him. Within the wrinkles of the skin, small birds were nesting and frogs took refuge in the hollow of the stomach. Enraged at the premature death of his son, he was about to curse Yama, the god of Death. Coming to know of this Dharmarāja (Yama) appeared before him and said :— "We honour and adore you as a great tapasvī. You should not ruin your tapas. I have devoured numerous Brahmāṇḍas. I have already swallowed Rudras and Viṣṇudevas many times. All of you are my food. It is ordained by Fate. Even Brahmā is not indestructible at the end of a Kalpa. Knowing all these facts, why do you think of cursing me ? Your son fell into this state because of his own act. While you were in a state of Samādhi your son's mind left its body and went up to Heaven. There he spent many years indulging in sensual pleasures in the company of the celestial beauty Viśvācī. Then he was born as a Brāhmaṇa in Daśārṇa country. In his next birth he became the King of Kosala. After that passing through many births in succession he is now performing tapas on the bank of the river Samaṅgā as the son of a Brāhmaṇa, under the name, Vāsudeva. Open your inner eye and see for yourself."

After saying this Dharmarāja revived the body of Śukra who rose up and did obeisance to his father. (Jñānavāsiṣṭha, Sthitiprakaraṇam).

(3) Domestic Life. It is seen that Śukra had several wives and children. In Devī Bhāgavata there is a story of Jayantī, daughter of Indra who was Śukra's wife for about ten years. (See under Jayantī II). Priyavrata, the brother of Uttānapāda had a daughter named Ūrjjasvatī by his wife Surūpā. In Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha it is stated that Śukrācārya married Ūrjjasvatī and he had a daughter Devayānī by her. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65 mentions that Śukra was the ācārya (preceptor) of the Asuras and his four sons were the priests of the Asuras. Śukra had a daughter named "Arā". (See under Arā). Besides, Śukra had another wife named Śataparvā.

But no child was born to Śataparvā.

Devī, wife of Varuṇa's elder brother, was a daughter of Śukra. Ūrjjasvatī was the most famous among Śukra's wives.

4) Revived his mother. See under Kāvyamātā.

5) Jamadagni was restored to life. See the 8th para under Jamadagni.

6) Śukra cursed Daṇḍa. See under Arā.

7) Cursed Yayāti. See the 4th Para under Devayānī.

8) How Śukra lost his eye. Śukrācārya lost one of his eyes during the time of Mahābali, the Asura King. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Vāmana and begged three feet of earth from Mahābali. Since Śukra tried to obstruct it, Viṣṇu put out one of Śukra's eyes with the point of a darbha grass. (For more details see 3rd Para under Mahābali).

9) Śiva swallowed Śukra. Once Śukra invaded Kubera and plundered all his wealth. The distressed Kubera informed Śiva about it. Śiva at once started up with his weapon, shouting "Where is he?" Śukra appeared on the top of Śiva's trident. Śiva caught hold of him and swallowed him. Śukra who moved about in Śiva's stomach found the excessive heat there, unbearable and soon became exhausted. In his helpless state he began to worship Śiva for his mercy. At last Śiva permitted him to escape through his penis and Śukra thus came out. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 290).

10) Other details.

(i) Once Śukrācārya had adorned the office of Education Minister of Mahiṣāsura. At that time Cikṣura was the War Minister, Tāmra was Finance Minister, Asiloma was the Prime Minister, Viḍāla was the Foreign Minister, Udarka was the Military Commander and Śukra was the Education Minister. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

(ii) Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51 states that Śukra should be installed in temples with his Kamaṇḍalu (a vessel for carrying water) and wearing his garland.

(iii) At the time of the war between Devas and Asuras. Śukra taught Surasā a mantra to destroy everything. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

(iv) Śukra was Prahlāda's Guru (preceptor). (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha kāṇḍa).

(v) Śukra worshipped Śiva and received from him "Mṛtasañjīvanī Mantra" (Mantra having power to revive the dead). (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 62).

(vi) Śukra had prohibited drinking. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 57).

(vii) He had shone in Indra's assembly. (M.B. Chapter 7, Verse 22, Sabhā Parva).

(viii) Śukra exists in Brahmā's assembly in the form of a planet. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 29).

(ix) Śukra resides with other Asuras on the top of the Meru mountain. All precious stones are in the possession of Śukra. Even Kubera (the god of wealth) lives by borrowing one-fourth of Śukra's wealth. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 22).

(x) Śukra was among those who visited Bhīṣma as he lay on the bed of arrows. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 8).

(xi) Once Śukrācārya was the priest of Emperor Pṛthu. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 110).

(xii) On another occasion Śukra sent Indra to Prahlāda to obtain prosperity. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 124, Verse 27).

(xiii) By his power of Yoga Śukra once grabbed all the wealth of Kubera. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 9).

(xiv) He got the name "Śukra" because he came out through "Śivaliṅga" (Śiva's penis) and thereby became a son of Pārvatī. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 32).

(xv) Śukra learnt Śiva's Sahasranāma (Thousand names) from the sage Taṇḍi and taught it to Gautama. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 177).

(xvi) Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 129, mentions that Bhṛgu had seven sons-Cyavana, Vajraśīrṣa, Śuci, Aurva, Śukra, Savana and Vibhu.

(xvii) Once in answer to a question of Mahābali, Śukra referred to the importance of Puṣpadāna (gift of flowers). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 98).

(xviii) In his old age Śukra observed Vānaprastha and attained Heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 244, Verse 17).

(xix) In Mahābhārata, several other names like Bhārgava, Bhārgavadāyāda, Bhṛguśreṣṭha, Bhṛgūdvaha, Bhṛgukulodvaha, Kaviputra, Kāvya and Uśanas are given for Śukra.

ŚUKRA II. A son of Vasiṣṭha. Seven sons were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Ūrjjā; they were, Rajas, Gotra, Ūrddhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Śukra. All these seven persons were the Saptarṣis of the third Manvantaram (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 the names of the seven sons of Vasiṣṭha and Ūrjjā are given as Rajas. Gātra, Ūrddhvabāhu, Savana, Alaghu, Śukra and Sutapas.

ŚUKRA III. A king who belonged to the dynasty of Emperor Pṛthu. Two sons, Antardhāna and Vādī were born to Pṛthu. Antardhāna had a son named Havirdhāna by wife Śikhaṇḍinī. Havirdhāna married Dhiṣaṇā who was born in Agnikula. Six sons were born to them. They were, Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 14).

SUKRATU. A King in ancient India. When once Sañjaya talked in praise of the ancient Kings of fame in India, this King Sukratu also was mentioned. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, 235).

SUKṚṢA. A liberal hermit. A story about this hermit occurs in Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa.

Once Indra wanted to test Sukṛṣa. So he came in the guise of a bird and requested for human flesh. Then the hermit called his sons and asked them to give their flesh to the bird. They were not prepared to do so. Sukṛṣa got angry and cursed his sons that they would be born as birds. Accordingly the sons of the hermit took birth in the Garuḍa family under the names Droṇaputra, Piṅgākṣa, Vibodha, Suputra and Sumukha. As a remission of the curse, the hermit said that even as birds they would be having wisdom and knowledge. After this, to keep his word, Sukṛṣa got ready to cut his own flesh for the bird. Then Indra appeared in his own form and blesssed the hermit.

SUKṢATRA. A heroic warrior who fought in the Kurukṣetra on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was the son of the King of Kosala. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 57).

SŪKṢMA. A notorious Dānava, who was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. The King Jayadratha, was the rebirth of this Dānava. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 18).

SŪKṢMAPRAKṚTI. The cause which is indestructible, not clear and having always goodness as its form is Sūkṣmaprakṛti. That unspeakable nature has no base. Sūkṣmaprakṛti is immovable and indestructible. There is no sound or form or touch in it. This nature which has no beginning or end, which has only three attributes is the root cause of the universe. This entire universe was pervaded by this power from the beginning of the great deluge to the beginning of creation. Then there was no night or day, no earth or Sky, no light or darkness. Then there was only Brahman the union of Prakṛti and Puruṣa which could not be perceived by sense organs or intelligence. (See under Prakṛti).

SŪKṢMAŚARĪRA. See under Punarjanma.

ŚUKTIMĀN. A mountain which was subdued by Bhīmasena in the course of his conquest of the eastern country. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 5).

ŚUKTIMATĪ I. A river which used to flow by the side of Uparicaravasu's capital city. There is a story about this river. Once the Kolāhala mountain fell in love with this river and kept it within himself. Uparicaravasu who came to know of this, gave a kick to the mountain. The kick produced a hole in the mountain and the river emerged through that hole. Śuktimatī had a son and a daughter by Kolāhala mountain. The river presented them to the King. The King appointed the son as his military commander. Girikā, the daughter of the river became the King's wife. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 34).

ŚUKTIMATĪ II. The capital city of Dhṛṣṭaketu, King of Cedi. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 50).

SUKUMĀRA I. A Pulinda King. The name of the capital of this King was also Sukumāra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 10, that King Sukumāra was the son of King Sumitra. It is stated in some other Purāṇas that Sucitra was the father of Sukumāra and that during his regional conquest of the east Bhīmasena had defeated both. On another occasion Sahadeva, who had gone for the regional conquest of the south, also defeated both Sukumāra and his father. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 4).

When the battle of Bhārata was about to begin, Sukumāra, the King af Pulinda joined the side of the Pāṇḍavas. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 15, that King Sukumāra became one of the prominent chariot-fighters of the Pāṇḍava army.

SUKUMĀRA II. A nāga (serpent) who was born in the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burned to death in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).

SUKUMĀRA III. A King of the Puru dynasty. The father of this King was Vibhu, the son of Varṣaketu. Two sons named Ānarta and Sukumāra were born to Vibhu. The King Satyaketu was the son of Sukumāra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SUKUMĀRA IV. A Sanskrit poet. There is a story about the devotion of Sukumāra to his teacher. Though Sukumāra was a dutiful student his teacher used to scold him always. Consequently Sukumāra harboured malice in his heart against his teacher. One night Sukumāra got on the upper attic of the house of the teacher with a big stone. His aim was to drop the stone on the head of the teacher. But that night the conversation of the teacher and his wife was about Sukumāra. The wife asked the teacher why he was scolding his disciple so often, when he was so dutiful and righteous. The teacher said that he loved him most and that the chastisement was meant to make him better and better. When Sukumāra heard this his heart was broken. With tears in his eyes, he got down with the stone and disappeared in darkness.

Next morning Sukumāra had no peace of mind. He approached the teacher. He asked the teacher "What is the punishment destined for him who had tried to kill his teacher?" The teacher replied that he should die a slow death in the fire made by the husk of paddy. Instantly Sukumāra made a pit and stood in it and filled the pit with husk up to his neck and set fire to the pile. When the teacher knew that the culprit was Sukumāra, he was filled with grief. He tried his best to dissuade his beloved disciple from his attempt. But it was in vain. While he was slowly burning in the fire he composed and sang the great poem 'Śrī Kṛṣṇa Vilāsa'. The poet was not able to complete the twelfth Sarga of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Vilāsa.

The sixtysixth stanza was the last one he sang. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was showing Satyabhāmā, the various countries and describing the prominence of each, when they had reached the earth after obtaining the Pārijāta flowers from the world of the gods. After having described the kingdoms of Pāṇḍya and Cola, the poet was beginning to describe the natural beauty of 'Saptakoṅkaṇas' (the seven Koṅkaṇa countries). The story says that when he had sung the last line of that stanza his tongue was burnt and he could not proceed with the rest of the poem.

SUKUMĀRA V. The son of King Bhavya who was the ruler of Śāka Island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 26).

SUKUMĀRA VI. An ancient place. This place was near the mountain Jaladhāragiri in the Śāka Island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 21).

SUKUMĀRA VII. The capital city of the Pulindas. (See under Sukumāra III).

SUKUMĀRĪ I. A river in the Śāka Island. This river is famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 3).

SUKUMĀRĪ II. Daughter of King Sṛñjaya. This Sukumārī was a wife of Nārada. (See under Parvata, Para 2).

SUKUṆḌALA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 98).

SUKUSUMĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 24).

SUKUṬA. An ancient country in India, very famous in the Purāṇas. The people of this country were called the Sukuṭas. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 16).

SULABHĀ. A female ascetic (Sannyāsinī). She acquired several powers (Siddhis) by tapas. She had the power of giving up her body and receiving new bodies. Once she went to Mithilā and held a learned discussion with King Janaka. She went to Mithilā as a beggar woman. By her yogic powers she entered the mind of Janaka. She and Janaka were thus in the same body when they carried on the discussion. After remaining in Janaka's body for a day, she left the palace. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 320).

SULAKṢAṆA. A king. It was this king who ordered Māṇḍavya maharṣi to be pierced with a śūla as a punishment for stealing a horse. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, 121).

SULAKṢMĪ (LAKṢMĪ). One of the four divine women who rose out of the Kṣīrābdhi (Sea of Milk). They were Sulakṣmī, Vāruṇī, Kāmodā and Śreṣṭhā. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi Khaṇḍa, 119).

ŚŪLAPROTA. One of the twentyeight Narakas. (See the section on Naraka under Kāla).

SULOCANA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in battle of Kurukṣetra. (Mahā-Bhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 37).

SUMADA. A muni who did penance at Vimala on the Hemakūṭa mountain. When twelve years had passed thus Indra got frightened and deputed Kāmadeva to disturb the muni's penance. Many Deva women also accompanied Kāmadeva. All their attempts failed to have any effect on the muni. Ultimately Devī appeared before him and asked him to choose his boon to which he answered thus: "I do penance to regain my kingdom lost to enemies. Also, I should develop eternal devotion to you and finally attain salvation."

Devī assured him recovery of his lost kingdom which he would rule till the sacrificial horse of Śrī Rāma in connection with the aśvamedha yajña came to his kingdom. Accordingly Sumada conquered his enemies and became king in Ahicchatra. After many years, in connection with Śrī Rāma's aśvamedha, Śatrughna with the yājñic horse reached Ahicchatra. Sumada welcomed Śatrughna and in his company went to Ayodhyā and detailed everything to Śrī Rāma. He then abdicated his throne in favour of his son and attained salvation. See under Ahicchatra. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 13).

SUMAHA. The charioteer of Paraśurāma. (M.B. Southern Text, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 12).

SUMĀLĪ I. A Rākṣasa, who was Sukeśa's son and brother of Mālī. When Agastya cursed and transformed Tāṭakā and her sons into Rākṣasas it was Sumālī who put them up in Pātāla and Laṅkā. (See under Mālī).

SUMĀLĪ II. A son of Pātālarāvaṇa. After killing Pātālarāvaṇa Śrī Rāma gave asylum to the rest of the Rākṣasas of Pātāla and crowned Sumālī, the only son of Pātālarāvaṇa king of Pātāla, subject to Vibhīṣaṇa's control. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

SUMĀLĪ III. An asura, son of Praheti and a follower of Vṛtra. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3, 7, 99).

When the asuras milked the earth (the earth became a cow in the time of King Pṛthu) this asura acted as calf. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

SUMALLIKA. An urban area in ancient India famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 55).

SUMANĀ. Wife of Somaśarman, a brahmin. (See under Somaśarman).

SUMANAS I. A kirāta (forest tribe) king who flourished in Yudhiṣṭhira's court. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 25).

SUMANAS II. A king in ancient India who worshipped Yama in his court. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 13).

SUMANAS III. A Kekaya princess who lived in Devaloka. She once held a discussion on spiritual topics with Śāṇḍilīdevī. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 123).

SUMANAS IV. A son of Pūru in Dhruva's lineage. Pūru had six mighty sons by his wife Atrī, viz. Aṅga, Sumanas, Svātī, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Gaya. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 13).

SUMANDA. A brother of king Duṣyanta. Two sons, Santurodha and Pratiratha were born to king Matināra of Pūru dynasty and to Santurodha were born three valiant sons called Duṣyanta, Pravīra and Sumanda. To Duṣyanta was born of Śakuntalā, Bharata. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278.)

SUMAṆḌALA. A king in ancient India. Arjuna, in the course of his triumphal tour of the northern kingdoms conquered him. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 32).

SUMAÑGALĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).

SUMAṆI. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by Moon the second one being Maṇi. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 32).

SUMANOMUKHA. A Nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 12).

SUMANTRA. A minister of king Daśaratha of Ayodhyā. The king had eight ministers called Jayanta, Dhṛṣṭi, Vijaya, Siddhārtha. Arthasādhaka, Aśoka, Mantrapāla and Sumantra and two priests called Vasiṣṭha and Vāmadeva. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 7). Sumantra was the right-hand-man of Daśaratha in all his activities. It was Sumantra who brought down to the palace sage Ṛṣyaśṛṅga for the yajña conducted by the king to have issues. According to chapter 12, Virāṭa Parva of Mahābhārata (Southern Text) Sumantra was Daśaratha's charioteer as well.

SUMANTU.

1) General. A maharṣi, disciple of Vyāsa. Asita, Devala, Vaiśampāyana, Sumantu and Jaimini were the chief disciples of Vyāsa. (See under Guruparamparā and Bhārata).

2) Other information.

(i) Vyāsa taught him all the Vedas and the Mahābhārata. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 89).

She detected Damayantī conversing with the brahmin named Subāhu, who came to Cedi in search of the latter and reported about their meeting to the queen mother. The name of the father of Sunandā and Subāhu was Vīrabāhu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 63, 68 and 69).

SUNARTAKA NAṬA. The name Śiva assumed when he appeared before Pārvatī, in disguise. Pārvatī was engaged in tapas then. (Śiva-Stotraśataka, 34).

ŚUNASSAKHA. Indra. Once Indra disguised himself as a Sannyāsī and travelled in the company of a dog. At that time, he made an attempt to steal lotus flower from Brahmasaras in Kauśikī tīrtha. Indra struck down at a single blow, Yātudhānī, the woman guard of the saras, who opposed him. From this time when Indra went about in the company of the dog, he got the name "Śunassakha". (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94).

ŚUNAŚŚEPHA (DEVARĀTA). The story of a Brāhmaṇa youth who was to be offered as human sacrifice and who was saved by Viśvāmitra, is famous in the Purāṇas. The name of the Brāhmaṇa youth was Śunaśśepha. But even in the Purāṇas there are two versions of this story. In one of them, Śunaśśepha is referred to as the son of Ṛcīkamuni. In the other, it was Hariścandra who performed the yāga and Śunaśśepha who was brought for sacrifice, was the son of a Brāhmaṇa named Ajīgarta. After Viśvāmitra saved the boy, he got another name, "Devarāta". (For details of the two versions, see under Ambarīṣa and the 4th Para under Viśvāmitra).

Śunaśśepha later became a Maharṣi. He composed Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Aṣṭaka. Besides in Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 6th Anuvāka, 30th Sūkta it is stated that Indra had given a golden chariot to Śunnaśśepha.

SUNAYA II, A region famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64).

SUNDA. An asura. He had a brother named Upasunda, and their father was Niśumbha alias Jharjha. Sunda and Upasunda were very cruel asuras.

The two brothers performed tapas on the Vindhya mountain with the object of conquering the three worlds. All attempts made by Devas to break up their penance failed and ultimately Brahmā appeared before them. They secured from Brahmā a boon to the effect that they would not be killed by anyone else but only mutually by them. Swollen-headed by the boon the brothers conquered the three worlds and none could kill them. Ultimately the Devas sent Tilottamā, the celestial damsel to them and she made them quarrel with each other. Both of them who fell in love with Tilottamā and wanted her as wife fought with each other and got killed. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 19). For details see under Upasunda and Tāṭakā).

SURAKṢAKA. A Gandharva King. He was the grandfather of Tāṭakā (See under Tāṭakā).

ŚŪRAPADMA. An asura hero. This asura invaded Devaloka with a huge army. Skanda Purāṇa mentions that in the battle that followed, Indra, who was defeated, fled to the place called Śiyāli in Tanjore District in South india and did tapas to Śiva.

SURAPRAVĪRA. Son of Tapa, the Pāñcajanyāgni, one of the Agnis which cause hindrances to yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 13).

SURĀRI. A King in ancient India. He was invited by the Pāṇḍavas to participate in the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

SURASĀ I. Mother of nāgas (serpents).

1) Birth. Ten daughters were born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Krodhavaśā, daughter of Dakṣa including Surasā. From Surasā were born all the nāgas. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

Nāgas and Uragas are two sects of serpents.From Surasā were born Nāgas and from Kadrū, Uragas. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Canto 14, Verse 28).

Surasā was born from the wrath of Krodhavaśā and the former had three daughters called Analā, Ruhā and Vīrudhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 61).

2) Obstructed the passage of Hanūmān. To test whether Hanūmān, who jumped into Laṅkā to seek out Sītā, possessed power enough for the purpose, Devagandharvas backoned Surasā to them and told her as follows: "You mother of nāgas, do please assume a terrible form like a big mountain and appear before Hanūmān and obstruct his passage. As soon as she heard the injunction, she jumped before Hanūmān and attempted to devour him In spite of Hanūmān's earnest pleadings she stood before him with her mouth opened wide. Hanūmān then, by his power of illusion, grew ten yojanas in size. Then Surasā opened her mouth twenty yojanas wide. Hanūmān then grew thirty yojanas in size and Surasā opened her mouth forty yojanas wide. In this competition ultimately when Surasā opened her mouth hundred yojanas wide, Hanūmān reduced his size to that of a finger, entered Surasā's mouth and came out through her ear. Surasā was pleased and blessed Hanūmān. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Canto 1).

3) Other information.

(i) Surasā lives in the court of Brahmā worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 39).

(ii) Rohiṇī, mother of Balabhadrarāma, was an incarnation of Surasā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

SURASĀ II. A deva woman who danced at the birthday celebration of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 63).

ŚŪRASENA I. A King of Yaduvaṁśa.

1) General. Śūrasena's kingdom was Mathurāpurī. This country was originally ruled by Kings of the Solar dynasty. Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha explains how the Yādava Kings came to rule over Mathurā.

There was a region called Madhuvanam in the Kālindī river valley. Madhu, the Asura, who lived in Madhuvana had a son named Lavaṇa. Lavaṇa who was a tyrant and an oppressor of the gods, was killed by Śatrughna who established his rule there. In course of time, the place came to be known as "Madhurā". After Śatrughna's time his two sons ruled over the country. Thus the Solar dynasty came to an end and Mathurā purī came under the rule of Yadus. The first King of Yaduvaṁśa was Śūrasena. Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the son of this Śūrasena. After the death of his father, since Vasudeva took up the occupation of tending cows, Ugrasena became King there. Kaṁsa was the son of this Ugrasena.

2. Other details.

(i) Śūrasena's daughter Kuntī was adopted and brought up by the king named Kuntibhoja. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Refer Chapters 67, 109 and 110).

(ii) Devamīḍha, father of Śūrasena had another name, "Citraratha". (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 29).

ŚŪRASENA II. A son of Kārttavīrya. In Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 86, it is mentioned that this Śūrasena killed Jamadagni. (See under Śūra II)

ŚŪRASENA III. "Śūrasena was the old name for the region now known as Mathurāmaṇḍala or Vrajamaṇḍala. The natives of this place were called "Śūrasenas". The following pieces of information are given about the Śūrasenas in the Mahābhārata :—

(i) The Śūrasenas who were afraid of Jarāsandha, fled to the southern lands. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 26).

(ii) In the course of his southern campaign, Sahadeva conquered the Śūrasenas. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 1).

(iii) The Śūrasenas offered presents at Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 13).

(iv) It was between the two countries, South Yakṛllomam and Śūrasenam that the Pāṇḍavas travelled from the land of Pāñcāla to Matsyadeśa. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva Chapter 5, Verse 4).

(v) Śūrasenas were the body-guards of Bhīṣma during the Bhārata Yuddha. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 12).

(vi) The Śūrasena forces once stopped Arjuna on the way. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 37).

(vii) Śūrasena attacked Arjuna and Sātyaki in Bhārata battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 9).

(viii) Yudhiṣṭhira soaked the earth with blood by killing the Śūrasenas at Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Droṇa Parva Chapter 157, Verse 29).

(ix) Bhīmasena butchered the Kṣatriyas of Śūrasena by hundreds. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 4).

(x) Kṛpācārya, Kṛtavarmā and Śakuni from the Pāṇḍava side fought against the Śūrasenas. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 16).

ŚŪRASENA IV. A king who fought against the Pāṇḍavas from the Kaurava side in the Bhārata Yuddha. He stood by Duryodhana in the "Krauñcavyūha" formed by Bhīṣma. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 75 Verse 18).

ŚŪRASENA V. A king of the Somavaṁśa of Pratiṣṭhānapura. Śūrasena, who was childless, tried to propitiate the gods in many ways to obtain a son. In the end he got a son in the form of a serpent. But to keep it a secret, he performed the usual ceremonies connected with his son's Upanayana, marriage etc. in the usual manner. At last by the mercy of Gautamīdevī Śūrasena's son obtained human form. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 111).

ŚŪRASENAPURA. The city of Mathurā.

SŪRASENĪ. Wife of Pravīra, the son of King Puru. A son named Manasyu was born to Pravīra by Śūrasenī (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 76).

SURĀṢṬRAM I. A kingdom of Purāṇic fame on the south-western part of ancient India. Ākṛti, king of this country, was once defeated by Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 61). Holy place like Camasodbheda, Prabhāsakṣetra, Piṇḍāraka etc. are situated in this area. (Vana Parva, Chapter 81, Verse 19).

SURĀṢṬRAM. II A Kṣatriya dynasty. Ruṣarddhika was a wicked King born in this dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74 Verse 14).

SURATĀ. A celestial damsel, daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Pradhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 50). She gave a dance performance at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 63).

ŚŪRATARA. A king who killed the mighty Rākṣasa named Paṭaccara. During the Bhārata Yuddha, Paṭaccara had taken his stand on the Kaurava side. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 58).

SURATHA I. A king in ancient India. (See under Samādhi Cheṭṭiyār).

SURATHA II. A king of the Puru dynasty. Suratha was one of the sons of Jahnu, the other sons being Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SURATHA III. One of the two sons of Janamejaya, the other one being Mahimān. Suratha had a son called Vidūratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SURATHA IV. Husband of Citrāṅgadā, daughter of Viśvakarman. See under Viśvakarmā, Para 2.

SURATHA V. A king born from an aspect of asura called Krodhavaśa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 62).

SURATHA VI. Father of King Koṭikāsya of Śibideśa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 6).

SURATHA VII. A king of Trigarta. He was a dependant of Jayadratha. In the battle that followed Jayadratha's abduction of Draupadī, Suratha was killed. (Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 18)

SURATHA VIII. A warrior who fought against the Pāṇḍavas in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 20).

SURATHA IX. A son of Drupada. He was killed by Aśvatthāmā in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 180).

SURATHA X. A Pāñcāla mahāratha who fought on the Pāṇḍava side in the great war. He was killed in battle by Aśvatthāmā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 37).

SURATHA XI. Son of Jayadratha by his wife Duśśalā. Jayadratha was killed by Arjuna. When Suratha got the news that Arjuna, leading the yājñic horse had reached Sindhudeśa, he ended his life in great fright. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 28).

SURATHA XII. A king who ruled over Kuṇḍalanagarī. He captured Śrī Rāma's yājñic horse and also took Hanūmān, Sugrīva etc. prisoners. At last Śrī Rāma himself appeared on the scene, defeated Suratha and released the captives: (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, 49, 52).

SURATHĀ. Mother of Emperor Śibi. (Vana Parva, Chapter 197 Verse 25).

SURATHĀKĀRA. A particular region in the Kuśa Island. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 13).

SURĀVĀN. Name of the horse attached to the chariot given to Agastya by the maharṣi called Ilvala. (See under Agastya).

SURAVĪTHĪ. A famous orbit of stars in Indraloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 12).

SUREṆU. A tributary of the river Sarasvatī flowing through Ṛṣabha island. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 26)

SUREŚA I. A son of Tala, the Pāñcajanyāgni, one of the fifteen Agnis who cause hindrances to yajñas. (Vana Parva. Chapter 220, Verse 13); SUREŚA II. A Sanātana Viśvadeva (eternal lord of Universe). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35).

SUREŚVARA. One of the eleven Rudras. (Śānti Parva Chapter 208, Verse 19).

SUROCANĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 29).

SUROCIS. A son of Vasiṣṭha by Arundhatī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4)

SURODA. One of the seven seas, filled with Madya (wine). (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 2)

SUROMAN. A serpent belonging to the family of Takṣaka. He was burnt at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 10).

ŚŪRPAṆAKHĀ. Rāvaṇa's sister.

1) Viśravas, son of Brahmā and Kaikasī daughter of Sumālī lived in the forest called Sleṣmātaka. Once Kaikasī had a sexual union with Viśravas at an untimely hour. As a result of this union, Kaikasī gave birth to four children at intervals of one Yāma each. These children were, Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa and Śūrpaṇakhā. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa).

2) Domestic Life. Śūrpaṇakhā was married to the Rākṣasa, Vidyujjihva. The son who was born to the couple was named Śambhukumāra.

The Kālakeyas were the brothers of Vidyujjihva. At the time of Rāvaṇa's return after his triumphal march, a battle took place between him and the Kālakeyas. The Kālakeyas fell under the sword of Rāvaṇa. Enraged at the death of his brothers, Vidyujjihva encountered Rāvaṇa. In the battle that followed, Vidyujjihva was killed. On hearing about her husband's death, Śūrpaṇakhā went to Rāvaṇa wailing and lamenting. Moved to pity at the sight of her tears, Rāvaṇa said:- "Dear Sister! You may travel through the three worlds and accept any man you like as your husband. Is there any one who would not wish to become my relative? Go and marry a husband suited to you. If any one turns down your proposal, just inform me. I shall come and make him your husband."

Śūrpaṇakhā was pleased. She at once started going round the three worlds with Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa; Kambarāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa).

3) Before Lakṣmaṇa. Śūrpaṇakhā's son, Śambhukumāra was performing tapas to Śiva in Daṇḍakāraṇya. It was at this time that Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa arrived in the forest, accompanied by Sītā. They reached the place called Pañcavaṭī in Daṇḍakāraṇya. Śrī Rāma wished to set up his hermitage in the middle of the five "vaṭa" trees in Pañcavaṭī.

At the very sight of Sītā, Śambhukumāra fell in love with her. He stood there in the form of a tree. While building the hermitage, Lakṣmana felled that tree and thus Śambhukumāra was killed. (See under Śambhukumāra).

The widowed Śūrpaṇakhā, in her search for a suitable husband happened to reach and settle down at the southern border of Daṇḍakāraṇya. She had failed in her search so far.

It was at this stage that she came to know of Śrī Rāma and his party. She disguised herself as Lalitā and entered Śrī Rāma's āsrama. The sight of Śrī Rāma made her a victim to carnal passion. She submitted her desire to him, but he turned down her prayer. The disappointed Śūrpaṇakhā left the āśrama at once. But she appeared again in front of Sītā. Feeling that so long as Sītā was alive, Śrī Rāma would not be prepared to court her, Śūrpaṇakhā rushed furiously at Sītā.

Lakṣmaṇa who was watching the whole scene, suddenly rushed to the spot and pushed her out of the āśrama. He cut off her ears, nose and breasts.

Śūrpaṇakhā, bleeding profusely from her mutilation, hastened to her brother Rāvaṇa to inform him of the calamity. In obedience to Rāvaṇa's command, Khara, Dūṣaṇa and others who came and encountered Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, were also slain in the battle. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa).

ŚŪRPĀRAKA. Another name for Kerala. In Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 99, we read that Paraśurāma threw a "Śūrpa" winnowing basket from Gokarṇa southwards and the ocean up to the spot where the Śūrpa fell, became dry land. Since the land was formed by throwing the Śūrpa, it came to be called "Śūrpāraka". References to Śūrpāraka in the Mahābhārata, are given below:-

(i) In the course of his triumph of the southern lands, Sahadeva conquered "Śūrpāraka". (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 65).

(ii) There is a sacred bath here, known as "Śūrpāraka tīrtha". By bathing here, one would obtain golden rāśis. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 43).

(iii) In Śūrpāraka Kṣetra, there is a sacrificial platform originally used by Jamadagni. Close by, there are two holy places called "Pāṣāṇa tīrtha" and "Candra tīrtha". (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 12).

(iv) Yudhiṣṭhira once happened to visit this sacred place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 8).

(v) Śūrpāraka is the land formed by the withdrawal of the ocean. It is also called "Aparāntabhūmi". (Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 66).

(vi) Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 50 states that by bathing in the water of Śūrpāraka Kṣetra and observing a fast for a fortnight, one would be born as a prince in the next birth.

SURUCA. A son of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 3).

SURUCI. A wife of Uttānapāda. Svāyambhuva Manu had two sons called Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Uttānapāda married Suruci and Sunīti. A son called Uttama was born to Suruci and to Sunīti was born Dhruva, (For details see under Dhruva).

SURŪPĀ. A daughter of Viśvakarman. Priyavrata, son of Svāyambhuva Manu married Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī, the beautiful daughters of Viśvakarman. Surūpā had ten sons. They had a younger sister called Ūrjasvatī. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

SŪRYA I. The God who gives light to the worlds.

1) Birth. It is said that the Sun was born to Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi. Mahāviṣṇu begot Brahmā and Brahmā begot Marīci. Prajāpati Kaśyapa was born from Marīci. Several sons were born to Kaśyapa by Aditi the daughter of Dakṣa. They are known by the names Ādityas, Vasus, Rudras and so on. Of these, Ādityas are tewelve in number. (Āditya means the son of Aditi). There is a difference of opinion as to who these twelve Ādityas are. According to Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51, the twelve Ādityas are Varuṇa, Sūrya (the Sun), Sahasrāṁśu, Dhātā,, Tapana, Savitā, Gabhasti, Ravi, Parjanya, Tvaṣṭā, Mitra and Viṣṇu. (See under Dvādaśādityas). But in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15, it is stated that the twelve Ādityas are Dhātā, Aryamā, Mitra, Śukra, Varuṇa, Aṁśa, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pūṣā, Savitā Tvaṣṭā and Viṣṇu.

Very often these names are used as synonyms of the Sun. So it is better to assume that there are several Ādityas and that it is the sun who gives light and heat to the worlds. Vivasvān is this sun because it is said that from this Vivasvān the Manu Vaivasvata was born and from this Vaivasvata, Ikṣvāku, the first king of the Solar dynasty, was born.

2 The chariot of the Sun. The sun rises in the east and sets in the west, in consequence of which days and nights occur. The Purāṇic assumption is that the sun travels in a very big chariot. The chariot of the Sun is nine thousand yojanas long. The wheel is fixed to this. The great wheel of time with three centres, five tyres and six spokes, is fixed on that indestructible year. It has seven horses, which are the seven Vedic metres, called by the names Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagatī, Triṣṭubh, Anuṣṭubh and Paṅkti. Another axle used for the chariot of the Sun is fortyfive thousand five hundred yojanas long. The length of each half of the Yoke is proportionate to the length of the axle. The short axle of the chariot with the small half of the yoke is fixed on Dhruva. The wheel fixed on the other axle rests on the mount Mānasottara.

Separate Ādityas, hermits Gandharvas, celestial maids, Yakṣas, serpents and giants sit, in the chariot of the Sun every month. In the month of Caitra, which is also called Madhumāsa, the seven officers of the month who travel daily in the chariot, are the Āditya Dhātā, the celestial maid Kratusthalā, the hermit Pulastya, the serpent Vāsuki, the Yakṣa Rathabhṛt, the gaint Heti, and the Gandharva Tumburu. In the month of Vaiśākha also called Mādhava, the Āditya Aryaman, the hermit Pulaha, the Yakṣa Rathaujas, the celestial maid Puñjikasthalā, the giant Praheti, the serpent Kacavīra and the Gandharva Nārada sit in the chariot. In the month of Jyeṣṭha, the Āditya Mitra, the hermit Atri, the serpent Takṣaka, giant Pauruṣeya, the celestial maid Menakā, the Gandharva Hāhā, and the Yakṣa Rathasvana, sit in the chariot. In the month of Āṣāḍha, the Āditya Varuṇa, the hermit Vasiṣṭha, the serpent Nāga, the celestial maid Sahajanyā, the Gandharva Hūhū, the giant Ratha and the Yakṣa Citraratha, travel in the chariot. In the month of Śrāvaṇa, the Āditya Indra, the Gandharva, Viśvāvasu, the Yakṣa Srotas, the serpent Elāputra, the hermit Aṅgiras, the celestial maid Pramlocā, and the giant Sarpī travel in the chariot. In the month of Bhādrapada the Āditya Vivasvān, the Gandharva, Ugrasena, the hermit Bhṛgu, the Yakṣa, Āpūraṇa, the celestial maid Anumlocā, the serpent Śaṅkhapāla and the giant Vyāghra sit in the chariot. In the month of Aśvanī, the Āditya Pūṣā, the Gandharva Vasuruci, the giant Vāta, the hermit Gautama, the serpent Dhanañjaya, the Yakṣa Suṣeṇa and the celestial maid Ghṛtāci sit in the chariot. In the month of Kārttika, the Gandharva is another Viśvāvasu, the hermit Bharadvāja, Āditya Parjanya, the serpent Airāvata, the celestial maid, Viśvācī, Yakṣa Senajit and the giant Āpa, sit in the chariot. In the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, the Āditya Aṁśa, the hermit Kaśyapa, the Yakṣa Tārkṣya, the serpent Mahāpadma, the celestial maid Urvaśī, the Gandharva Citrasena, and the giant Vidyut travel in the chariot. In the month of Pauṣa, the hermit Kratu, the Āditya Bhaga, the Gandharva Ūrṇāyu, the giant Sphūrja, the serpent Karkoṭaka, the Yakṣa Ariṣṭanemi and the celestial maid Pūrvacitti travel in the chariot. In the month of Māgha, the Āditya Tvaṣṭā, the hermit Jamadagni, the serpent Kambala, the celestial maid Tilottamā, the giant Brahmopeta, the Yakṣa Ṛtajit and the Gandharva Dhṛtarāṣṭra sit in the chariot. In the month of Phālguna the Āditya Viṣṇu, the serpent Aśvatara, the celestial maid Rambhā, the Gandharva Suvarcas, the Yakṣa Satyajit, the hermit Viśvāmitra, and the giant Yajñopeta travel in the chariot. These seven persons live in the region of the Sun in their time. The hermits praise the Sun; the gandharvas sing; the celestial maids dance; the giants walk behind as guards. The serpents prepare the horses to be yoked; the Yakṣas hold the bridle and the Bālakhilyas stand round the Sun. These groups of seven in each month are responsible for heat, coldness, rain etc. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 8).

3) The Vedic figure of the Sun. Even though the sun is only one of the seven groups, he is above the others in prominence. The complete power of Viṣṇu is the three Vedas Ṛg, Yajus and Sāma. The power in the form of the three Vedas blazes in the form of the Sun. That power destroys all the sins in the world. Viṣṇu stays inside the sun in the form of Ṛg, Yajus and Sāma for the Sustenance and protection of the world. As said before, the three Vedas are the parāśakti, or the feminine supreme power of Viṣṇu. She is the three Vedas themselves. Every month she stays inside that particular Āditya of the month. In the morning the Ṛgveda praises the Sun. At noon the Yajurveda praises the Sun and in the evening the Sāmans such as Bṛhad Rathantara and so on. The three Vedas Ṛg, Yajus and Sāman are portions of Viṣṇu. This power of Viṣṇu stays in Āditya always. It stays not only in the Sun, but also in the three godheads Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva. At the time of creation Brahmā was pervaded by Ṛg. At the time of sustenance, Viṣṇu is pervaded by Yajus. At the end

Rudra will be pervaded by Sāman. So the sound of Sāman will be unpalatable. Thus this Vaiṣṇavite power which is having the attribute of purity (Sattva) and Vedas, pervades mainly the sun though it remains on the seven groups also. Being the seat of this power, the Sun blazes with his rays and destroys the darkness in all the worlds.

Such a Sun is praised by the hermits. The Gandharvas sing in front of the Sun. The celestial maids dance before him. The giants guard him, the serpents prepare his chariot, the Yakṣas hold the bridle and the Bālakhilyas stand around him. Viṣṇu who is having the figure of the Sun pervaded by the power of the Vedas, never rises or sets. The seven groups are separate from that Viṣṇu. As the figures of those who approach, are reflected in a mirror fixed on a post, that power of Viṣṇu, without separating itself from that chariot, pervades them who come every month in turn. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 11).

4) The direction of the sun. The Sun starts from the east and goes to the western ocean. The directions east and west originate from this rising and setting. As a matter of fact when the sun rises in the east it is bright in places behind it. But it does not shine in the palace of Brahmā on the top of Mahāmeru. The rays of the sun which enter the palace are driven back by the radiance of the palace. The Mountain Meru is north to all islands and countries. So on one side of that mount it is always day and on the other side it is always night. When the Sun sets his light enters fire. So at night the light of fire goes far. In the same way, at day time, the light of fire enters the sun. So the sun shines more. Thus because the light of the sun and fire enter each other the day and the night wax when the sun shines on the southern and northern hemi-spheres. The dark nights and bright days enter water gradually. The water seems a little red, in day time because darkness has entered it in the night. After sunset the water seems a little white because the day has entered the water.

Thus when the sun passes through the middle of the island Puṣkara, the change of the Sun to one thirtieth portion of the earth is called 'Mauhūrtikagati' (covering the distance in a muhūrta—48 minutes). The sun, like a fly sitting on the circumference of the wheel of a potter travels round the earth inclining a portion of a thirtieth of the earth, and making day and night. In the beginning of the transit to the Tropic of Cancer, the sun passes into the zodiac of Makara, and then to Kumbha and Mīna. After having completed the three zodiacs, the sun makes the day and night equal and enters Viṣuva. At the end of travelling in the Northern hemi-sphere the sun enters the zodiac of Karkaṭaka and transit to the south begins. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 8).

5) The Sun in the clutches of the giants. The Sun is being attacked daily by a kind of giants called the Mandehas.

6) Family life. The Sun married Saṁjñā, the daughter of Viśvakarmā. Three children Manu, Yama and Yamī were born to him by Saṁjñā. By Chāyā, the maid of Saṁjñā, three children, Śanaiścara, Manu and Tapatī were born to the Sun. Aśvinīkumāras and Revanta were born by Saṁjñā to the sun who took the form of a horse. (See under Saṁjñā and Chāyā).

On several occasions other sons such as Sugrīva, Kālindī Karṇa and so on were born to the Sun. (For details see under those entries).

7) The rising delayed. A story stating that the rising of the sun was delayed because of the curse of Śīlavatī, is stated in Mahābhārata. (See under Śīlavatī).

8) The Sun and the Syamantaka. Once the King Satrājit did penance and got the jewel Syamantaka from the Sun. (For detailed story see under Prasena).

9) The Sun and Rāhu. Once the Sun and the moon pointed out Rāhu who had come to partake of the Amṛta (Ambrosia) in stealth and Mahaviṣṇu cut off his head. (For detailed story see under Amṛta, Para 4).

10) The Sun the teacher of Hanūmān. The Sun is the teacher of Hanūmān. (See under Hanūmān).

12) Fight with Śiva. See under Śiva Para 7, Sub para 7.

13) The Sun lost his lustre. See under Sukeśa.

14) Artificial Sun. See under Brahmā, para 13.

15) The Sun and Karṇa. See under Karṇa.

16) The hermit Atri and the Sun. See under Atri, para 4.

17) The names of the Sun. Once the hermit Dhaumya repeated to Dharmaputra the one hundred and eight names of the Sun. Those names are given in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3.

13) Other details.

(i) Once Pāñcālī worshipped the Sun. The Sun created an unseen giant for her protection. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 19).

(ii) Pāñcālī did penance before the Sun and procured the 'Akṣayapātra' (the pot that never became empty). (See under Akṣayapātra).

(iii) The Sun destroys the ungrateful asuras (demons). (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 16).

(iv) There is a story connecting the Sun and the South. In days of old the Sun performed a sacrifice according to the Vedas, and to Kaśyapa who was the ministerial priest, he gave the South as dakṣiṇā (offering). So the south got the name 'Dakṣiṇa'. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 1).

(v) The west is the place where the Sun pours his rays after the end of the day. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 2).

(vi) When Karṇa and Arjuna confronted each other in the battle of Bhārata, the Sun boasted to Indra that Karṇa would come out victorious. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 57).

(vii) The Sun gave Subrahmaṇya two attendants named Subhrāja and Bhāsvara. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31).

(viii) Once Śiva anointed the Sun as the King of all the planets. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 112, Stanza 31).

(ix) The Sun once gave Yājñavalkya the boon that he would get knowledge of the Vedas. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 6).

(x) The story of one who had attained the region of the Sun by 'Uñchavṛtti' (Living on the grains fallen on the field) is given in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, a few Chapters from 353, as follows :

There was a Brahmin in a place called Mahāpadma on the banks of the Ganges. He wandered here and there for knowledge of Vedas. Once a hermit met him and directed him towards a Nāga named Padmanābha. Padmanābha is the serpent which supports the chariot of the Sun. The Brahmin-hermit started in search of Padmanābha. At last he found out his house. But there was the wife of Padmanābha only. She said that her husband would return within a few days. Accordingly he remained on the banks of the Ganges without any food. Padmanābha returned and both of them met together. The hermit asked the nāga what he should do in order to get merged in God. The Nāga replied that he could become one with God by Uñchavṛtti. The Nāga continued. "The Sun is a god who had invoked into himself a saint who had lived only by the fallen grains in the field. The activities of that Sun are wonderful. The hermits and saints attach themselves to the rays of the Sun as birds attach themselves to the branches of trees. The great storms arising from the Sun spread wide in the sky. I saw once a person sitting inside that Sun who was a wonder of wonders. When that person as shining as the Sun came to him in the noon the Sun embraced him and seated him inside him. I asked him who he was. The Sun replied that he was a person who had attained heaven by Uñchavṛtti." Hearing the advice given by the Nāga, the Brahmin engaged in Uñchavṛtti and attained heaven.

(xi) The Sun gave Subrahmaṇya shining beauty. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 23).

(xii) The Sun gave the hermit Jamadagni an umbrella and slippers. (See under Cherippu).

(xiii) In olden days when a war between the Devas and the Asuras was drawing near, Rāhu wounded the Sun and the moon. Along with that the universe fell in darkness, and the asuras began to destroy the Devas. At this time according to the prayer of the gods the hermit Atri assumed the figure of the Moon and made the Sun as shining as of old. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 2).

(xiv) The Synonyms of Sun according to the Amarakośa are given below :—

(Sūra, Sūrya, Aryamā, Āditya, Dvadaśātmā, Divākara, Bhāskara, Ahaskara, Bradhna, Prabhākara, Vibhākara, Bhāsvān, Vivasvān, Saptāśva, Haridaśva, Uṣṇaraśmi, Vikartana, Arka, Mārtaṇḍa, Mihira, Aruṇa, Pūṣā, Dyumaṇi, Taraṇi, Mitra, Citrabhānu, Virocana, Viśvāvasu, Grahapati, Tviṣāmpati, Aharpati, Bhānu, Haṁsa, Sahasrāṁśu, Savitā, Tapana, Ravi, Padmākṣa, Tejasāṁrāśi, Chāyānātha, Tamisrahā, Karmasākṣī, Jagaccakṣus, Lokabandhu, Trayītanu, Pradyotana, Dinamaṇi, Khadyota, Lokabāndhava, Ina, Bharga, Dhāmanidhi, Aṁśumālī and Abjinīpati.

SŪRYA II. An asura (demon). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 26, that this asura was the son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrū. The King Darda was the rebirth of this asura.

SŪRYABHĀNU. A gate-keeper of Alakāpurī. A statement occurs in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, that in the fight between Kubera and Rāvaṇa, this gate-keeper helped Kubera.

SŪRYADATTA. A brother of King Virāṭa. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 11, that this Sūryadatta was known by the name Śatānīka also. Sūryadatta also took part in the fight following the theft of the cattle of Virāṭa by Duryodhana and others. After killing the hundred warriors in the army of Trigarta, this Sūryadatta entered into the midst of the enemies and was killed by Droṇa in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 34).

SŪRYADHVAJA. A King in Ancient India. He was present in the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 10).

SŪRYAGRAHAṆA. To know in detail about the view of the Purāṇas regarding the Solar eclipse, see under Candra IV, Para 4.

SŪRYAKETU. A daitya (demon). Once this daitya conquered the world of the gods and expelled Indra. At that time Purañjaya was the King of Ayodhyā, who was born in the Solar dynasty. Indra requested for his help. Purañjaya agreed to help Indra, on condition that Indra should stand as an ox and that he would sit on the hump of that ox and fight. Accordingly he sat on the 'Kakud' (hump) of the ox and fought in the battle, killed Sūryaketu, and reinstated Indra in his former position. Because he sat on the 'Kakud', Purañjaya got the name Kakutstha. The dynasty of the King came to be called by the name Kākutstha. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

SŪRYĀKṢA. A King in ancient India. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 57, that this King was born from a portion of the King Kratha.

SŪRYASĀVITRA. An eternal god of offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

SŪRYAŚRĪ. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

SŪRYATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 48, that by bathing here and worshipping the manes one may attain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agniṣṭoma and go to the region of the Sun.

SŪRYAVAṀŚA. An important dynasty of ancient Bhārata. It is stated in Devībhāgavata, Skandha 7, as follows about the origin of this Solar dynasty.

The Lord of creation Brahmā originated from the lotus in the navel of Viṣṇu. That Brahmā did penance for ten thousand years and pleased Parāśakti, the great goddess of power, and started creation. First of all he created seven mental sons. Of them Marīci became expert in creation. Prajāpati Kaśyapa the son of Marīci became a greater expert. The Sun is the son of Kaśyapa. Nine sons named Ikṣvāku, Nābhāga, Dhṛṣṭa, Śaryāti, Nariṣyanta, Prāṁśu, Nṛga, Diṣṭa, Karūṣa and Pṛṣadhra were born to the Sun. Of these Ikṣvāku became King. This line of Kings born from the Sun is called Sūryavaṁśa (Solar dynasty). (See the Genealogy).

SŪRYAVARCAS. A Deva Gandharva. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 55, that this Deva Gandharva born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa took part in the birth celebration of Arjuna.

SŪRYAVARMĀ. A King of the country of Trigarta. This King had a brother called Ketuvarmā. Sūryavarmā and Ketuvarmā fought with Arjuna when he was leading the sacrificial horse of Yudhiṣṭhira. Both the Trigartas were killed in that fight. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 74).

SŪTA I

2) In Naimiṣāranya. Sūta who had learned the Purāṇas directly form Vyāsa, happened to reach Naimiṣāraṇya once. (See under Naimiṣāraṇya). Naimiṣāraṇya is the abode of hermits in the Kali-age. In days of old, hermits, who were miserable because of the evils of Kaliyuga, which was fast approaching, gathered here at the end of Dvāparayuga. They went to the world of Brahmā to consult about the means and ways of preventing the evils of Kaliyuga. Having heard their complaints Brahmā brought a wheel of the figure of mind and placing it before the hermits told them thus: "You follow this wheel. The place where this wheel falls down will be a place of purity, which will not be affected by the evils of Kaliage. There you can live in peace, without being affected by the evils of Kali-age till the coming of the Satyayuga." Saying these words Brahmā set the wheel rolling in front of them. The hermits followed it. The wheel rolled on till it reached the earth, fell down and was crumbled to powder in a particular place. That place became famous later under the name Naimiṣāraṇya. Sūta came to this place.

As soon as they saw Sūta, the hermits such as Śaunaka and others who were living there welcomed Sūta with hospitality and told him thus: "Oh! hermit, you are the disciple of Vyāsa. You have learned the eighteen Purāṇas from Vyāsa We are eager to hear them. So please recite to us the Purāṇas, the hearing of which will remit all sins and secure heaven."

According to this request Sūta recited the eighteen Purāṇasto the gathering of the hermits. It is in the form of the teaching of Sūta to Śaunaka and the others, i.e. in the form of a dialogue between Sūta and Śaunaka, that the people got the Purāṇas. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha I).

3) Sūta was beheaded. In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, there occurs a story, stating how Balabhadrarāma cut off the head of Sūta as the battle of Kurukṣetra had started when Sūta had been reciting the eighteen Purāṇas in Naimiṣāraṇya and how his head was fixed in its place again and he was brought to life. (For further details see under Balabhadrarāma, Para 6).

4) Other details. Sūta was one of the hermits who visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows during the battle of Bhārata. (MB. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47 Verse 12).

SŪTA II. One of Viśvāmitra's sons who were expounders of the Vedas. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 57.)

SUTANU II. The daughter of Āhuka otherwise called Ugrasena. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33) Śrī Kṛṣṇa made Akrūra marry this Sutanu.

SUTAPAS I. A King of the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of Homa and the father of Bala. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUTAPAS II. A Prajāpati who lived in days of yore. A son named Pṛśnigarbha was born to this Prajāpati by his wife Pṛśnī. That son was a partial incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. (For further details see under Aditi Para 7).

SUTAPAS III. A son of Vasiṣṭha. Seven sons named Rajas, Gotra, Ūrdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Śukra, were born by his wife Ūrjjā. All the seven of them were the Saptarṣis (seven hermits) of the third Manvantara. (See under Manvantara).

SUTAPAS IV. Father of the hermit Upamanyn. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

SUTAPAS V. A hermit of the family of Bhṛgu. (See under Ugratapas).

SUTAPAS VI. A hermit who was born in the dynasty of Bharadvāja. This hermit had two wives. A son named Kalyāṇamitra was born by Pitṛkanyakā, one of the two wives.

The glamour of the second wife of Sutapas attracted the sun, who raped her once and from this, the son Aśvinīsuta was born. On seeing that his wife was a harlot, Sutapas abandoned her with her son. Afterwards, at the instance of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the hermit received his wife and her son back. (Brahmavaivarta: 1: 11).

SUTAPAS VII. A hermit. This hermit once approached the princess Utpalāvatī and requested her for coition with him. The princess refused. Then he cursed her, to become an animal. Utpalāvatī begged for liberation from the curse. Sutapas felt pity for her and blessed her thus:—"A son named Lola will be born to you. He will become the Manu of Tāmasa Manvantara." (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

SUTĀRĀ. A Gandharva damsel who had been cursed. (For further details see under Pramohinī).

SUTASOMA. The son born to Bhīmasena by his wife Draupadī. The information regarding this Sutasoma, taken from Mahābhārata, is given below:

(i) Sutasoma took birth from a portion of the Viśvadevas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 127).

(ii) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 28, that this prince was given the name Sutasoma, because he was born by the blessings of Candra (Moon).

(iii) Sutasoma had a combat with Vikarṇa on the first day of the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

(iv) He rescued Śrutakarmā from the hold of Durmukha in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 39).

(v) Sutasoma fought with Viviṁśati. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 24).

(vi) Sutasoma fought with Śakuni and was defeated. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 18).

(vii) There was a severe fight between Sutasoma and Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 14).

(viii) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sauptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 55, that in the battle of Bhārata, Aśvatthāmā entered the camp of the Pāṇḍava army in the night and killed Sutasoma.

SUTEJANA. A King who was a friend of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Bhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 40).

SUTĪRTHA. An ancient holy place in Kurukṣetra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 54, that the Devas and the manes would come to this place, and that if offerings to the manes are given at this place, one would get the merits of performing horse sacrifice.

SUTĪKṢṆA. A hermit. While Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were living in the forest with Sītā, they visited the hermi-of hermits such as Śarabhaṅga, Sutīkṣṇa and others. Once Indra came to the hermitage of Sutīkṣṇa and invited him to the world of gods. It was at this time that Śrī Rāma came to the hermitage with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. When they were nearing the hermitage, Indra said "I shall see Rāma later when he has completed his great task." Saying thus Indra went away from the hermitage. Śrī Rāma and his wife and brother asked the hermit, where in the forest, they were to live. The hermit told them that they could live in that hermitage itself.

This hermit was the brother and disciple of Agastya. Once Sutīkṣṇa changed a wicked and cruel man named Duṣpaṇya to a good and righteous man by sprinkling holy water of Gaṅgā on him. (See under Duṣpaṇya). (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 7).

SUVARṆAṢṬHĪVĪ. Son of King Sṛñjaya. While sages Nārada and Parvata were living in that King's palace the following incident took place.

Sṛñjaya expressed his sorrow over having no issues to Nārada who then blessed him to have a son called Suvarṇaṣṭhīvī. The King began performing Yajñas from that day onwards and his queen conceived and in due time delivered a child who was named Suvarṇaṣṭhīvī and he became an ascetic even as a boy. Indra got alarmed by the penance of Suvarṇaṣṭhīvī and tried to frighten him by assuming the forms of various cruel beasts. He also sent his Vajrāyudha against the ascetic, but all to no purpose.

The boy became four or five years old when one day while strolling in the company of his mother on the banks of the Gaṅgā, a tiger jumped upon him. This tiger of illusion had been sent by Indra and the tiger killed the boy. His mother wept aloud and people in the palace gathered around her. Sṛñjaya wept bitterly. Ultimately Nārada appeared, consoled the King and with the permission of Indra brought the boy back to life. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 31; also see under Sṛñjaya)

SUVARṆATĪRTHA. A very ancient holy spot in India. Before creation Mahāviṣṇu once did penance here to please Rudra whe appeared before him and granted him boons. That is the great importance of the place. He who worships Śiva here will derive benefits equal to those of conducting an Aśvamedha yajña and also will attain the status of Gaṇapati. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 18).

SUYAŚĀ II. Consort of King Divodāsa of Kāśī. (For details see under Nikumbha).

ŚVABHOJANA (M). A naraka (Hell). (For further details, see the section on Naraka, under Kāla, Yama).

SVADHĀDEVĪ. Wife of the Manes. There is a story, as given below, in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, about the birth of this goddess.

At the beginning of creation Brahmā created seven groups of Manes of whom four were embodied and three were lustrous ones. The deities called the Manes are the Agniṣvāttas, the Barhiṣadas, the Somapās, Yama, Anala, Soma and Aryaman. The Śrāddhas (oblations offered to the manes) were stipulated as the food of these manes. It was ordered that the Brahmin who does not make offerings to the manes, will be as mean and despicable as the Brahmin, who has not learned the Vedas, who has not eaten meals presented to an idol in temples, and who has not worshipped Devī (goddess), and that he would not be eligible to perform any religious ceremonies. Thus Brahmā meant Śrāddha as food for the manes. But the portion of the rice balls offered by the Brahmins stipulated as the food of the manes, seldom reached them. At last the manes complained to Brahmā. Then Brahmā created a woman of beauty, youth, knowledge and power to grant boons, and of good character, from a portion of pure nature. She was named Svadhā, and was given to the manes as wife. Then Brahmins were ordered to give offerings to the manes only with the spell (Mantra) of Svadhā. When the Brahmins began to do as they were ordered, the manes also began to get food, and they became contented.

Two daughters named Menā and Dhāriṇī were born to the manes by Svadhādevī. It is mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10, that both of the daughters were expounders of Vedas, full of knowledge and the seat of all good qualities.

SVĀHĀ. A daughter of Bṛhaspati. This Svāhā who was always angry had a son named Kāma. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 22).

SVĀHĀDEVĪ.

1) General information. Wife of god Agni (fire). There is a story about the birth of this goddess, as given below, in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9.

In the beginning of creation sufficient arrangements had not been made for food to be supplied to the Devas (gods). They were in misery. At last the devas reached Satyaloka and requested Brahmā to make some arrangements for their food. Brahmā pacified them by saying that he would make available to them, the 'havis' offered by Brahmins as food. Then Brahmā meditated on the Mūla-Prakṛti. A particle of Mūla-Prakṛti appeared before Brahmā and asked him what boon he required. Brahmā said thus :—Oh Goddess ! The gods are miserable due to lack of food. The fire is not powerful enough to digest the 'havis' offered by Brahmins in the fire so as to convert them as food for the gods. The fire would become powerful to digest the havis only if your esteemed self would reside in fire as the power of digestion. Only the havis offered, with the mantra, (spell) ending with the holy name of your glorious self could be digested by fire and taken to the gods as food, and they could accept it as food. So it is my request that your gracious self would become the power that dwells in fire as the figure of wealth and prosperity, adored by men and gods."

But that goddess said that her desire was to get Śrī Kṛṣṇa as her husband. She did penance to Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who appeared and said : "Devī ! you will take birth as the daughter of King Nagnajit in Varāha Kalpa (a world-age) and then you will become my wife. Now you have to become the wife of Agni under the name Svāhādevī and become the power of digestion, and part of the spell (mantra). You and Agni will be worshipped together by all. From that day onwards Svāhādevī became the wife of Fire. It is mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10, that three sons Pāvaka; Pavamāna and Śuci, were born to the couple. (See under Devī).

2) Other details.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42, that Svāhādevī remains in the court of Brahmā, glorifying him.

(ii) Once Svāhādevī appeared among the wives of hermits. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 7).

(iii) When Subrahmaṇya was anointed as captain of the army, Svāhādevī also was present. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 13).

ŚVAITREYA. Son of Śvitrā. There is a story in Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 7th Anuvāka, 33rd Sūkta that Śvaitreya once hid himself under water for fear of enemies.

SVAKṢA. A region in India, very famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 45).

SVANA. Son of the Agni (fire) called Satya. It is said that this Agni is the agent which causes disease to living things. This agni got the name Svana because human beings produce Svana (pitiable cry) when they are afflicted by diseases. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 15).

SVANAYA. Son of King Bhāvayavya. The daughter of this King, who is praised in the Ṛgveda, was married by the hermit Kakṣīvān. (For further details see under Kakṣīvān I, Other details, Para 6).

ŚVAPHALKA. Father of Akrūra. Vṛṣṇi, a Yādava King had two sons Śvaphalka and Citraka. It was divinely ordained that there would not be epidemics and drought in the place where Śvaphalka lived. Once there was no rain for a period of three years in the land of the King of Kāśī. So the King of Kāśī took Śvaphalka with him to his country. With his arrival there was rainfall in the land and the King who was pleased at it gave his daughter Gāndinī in marriage to Śvaphalka.

There is a story about the birth of Gāndinī also. Gāndinī remained in her mother's womb for many years. At last the King of Kāśī called to the child in the womb and said, "Take birth at once; why do you remain there so long?" The child replied, "I shall come out if you allow me to offer a cow as gift every day." The King allowed it and the child was born. She was named "Gāndinī." She used to offer the gift of cows to Brāhmaṇas daily. After she married Śvaphalka, several sons including Akrūra were born to her, (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 34, Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

SVAPNA (DREAM).

1) General information. One of the four states of mind.

2) Result of Svapna. The Indians believe that there are two kinds of dreams and that they have the power to suggest things going to happen in future. So Indian sages have classified dreams as good dreams and bad dreams.

Bad dreams:—

Seeing the following in dream is bad.

(1) Grass and trees have grown all over the body except the navel. (2) The dust of bronze was sprinkled on the head (3) The head was completely shaved. (4) One (the dreamer) had been nude. (5) He (the dreamer) had worn dirty clothes (6) He had applied oil on the body. (7) One is smeared with mud. (8) He had fallen from a higher level to a lower level. (9) He had married. (10) He had sung songs. (11) He had amused himself by playing a lute etc. (12) He had got on a swing (13) He had obtained lotus flower and metals. (14) He had killed serpents. (15) He had climbed on trees with red flowers or on the back of low caste people, hog, dog, ass, or camel. (16) He had eaten flesh of birds or sesame oil or oil-cake. (17) He had entered the womb of his mother. (18) He had got on a funeral Pyre. (19) The flag post of Indra had been broken down. (20) The Sun and the Moon had fallen down. (21) The gods, Brahmins, Kings or teachers have been angry. (22) Stars or planets have fallen. (23) He had engaged himself in dance or playing musical instruments or singing. (24) He had played musical instruments except the lute (Vīṇā).(25) He had been carried down by the current of a river. (26) He had taken bath in muddy water or cowdung water or Ink. (27) He had embraced virgins. (28) He had engaged in pederasty. (29) Limbs of the body were damaged. (30) He had vomited and passed excrements. (31) He had gone to the south. (32) He had caught disease. (33) Fruits have been destroyed (34) Cleavages occurred in minerals. (35) The house was covered with dust. (36) He had swept the house clean. (37) He had played with devils or cruel animals or monkeys or low caste people. (38) Had suffered molestation and hurts from enemies. (39) He had worn hermit's coloured cloth or played with coloured clothes. (40) He drank oil and got immersed in water. (41) He has worn blood-coloured garland and cosmetics.

If the dreams mentioned above are seen it should not be mentioned to anybody. After the dream, either he should sleep again or take bath. To counteract the effects of bad dreams, do one of the following such as offering sesame as oblation in fire; worshipping Viṣṇu or Śiva, or the Sun or Gaṇeśvara; singing hymns of praise; reciting sūktas (verses) such as Puruṣasūkta etc. The dreams seen in the first watch of the night will come into effect within one year; dreams seen in the second watch of the night will take effect within six months; those seen in the third watch of the night will take effect within three months and those seen in the fourth watch of the night will take effect within half a month and those seen at dawn will be realized within ten days. If a bad dream and a good dream are seen in one night, the last one will take effect. So it is better not to sleep any more in the night after seeing a good dream.

B. Good dreams. Seeing that—

(1) he has climbed on a mountaian or the upper storey of a building, or on the back of an elephant, or horse, or bull or on the top of trees having white flowers, or in the sky. (2) grass has grown in the loins. (3) several heads have grown. (4) hair is turned grey or adorned with white flowers. (5) one is wearing white cloth. (6) he has caught the Moon, or the Sun or the stars and patted them. (7) one has embraced the flag of Indra or hoisted the flag of Indra. (8) held the earth and fountain. (9) one has attacked the enemies. (10) he has won a controversy, or gambling or a battle. (11) he has eaten raw flesh or pudding. (12) one has bathed in blood. (13) one has drunk Surā (liquor) or blood or milk. (14) one has handled weapons. (15) the sky is clear. (16) drank the milk of cow, buffalo-lioness, elephant or mare, by mouth as their calves do. (17) one got blessings from the gods, or Brahmins, or teachers. (18) one is anointed with water in the horn of cow or water oozed from the lunar region, or anointed as the ruler of a kingdom. (19) the head is wounded or he himself was dead. (20) houses etc. have caught fire. (21) one received the emblems of kings. (22) he has played the instrument lute. (23) a king or elephant or horse or gold or an ox or a cow comes before.

If at the end of the dream he is seen as having climbed on the back of an ox or an elephant or on the top of a house or a mountain or a tree, or as having smeared ghee or excrement on the body or gone to a prohibited woman, or seen white cloth, clear water, tree with fruits, or a clear sky, it forebodes good future. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 229).

SVARĀṢṬRA. A country in India famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 48.

SVARAVEDĪ. A celestial maid. (For further details see under Pramohinī).

SVARBHĀNAVĪ. The daughter of Svarbhānu. Āyus, the son of Purūravas married Svarbhānavī. Five sons beginning with Nahuṣa were born to the couple. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 26).

SVARBHĀNU I. A Dānava (asura) born to Kaśyapa-prajāpati by his wife Danu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 12 that Ugrasena the father of Kaṁsa was the rebirth of this Dānava.

SVARBHĀNU II. An son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Satyabhāmā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

SVARGADVĀRA. An ancient holy bath, situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 167, that one could attain heaven by bathing in this holy tīrtha.

SVARGAMĀRGATĪRTHA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 61, that those who bathe in this holy place will attain the world of Brahmā.

SVARGĀROHAṆA PARVA. An important section in Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

SVARGATĪRTHA. A holy place. This place is in the forest Naimiṣa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 33, that he who lives in this place for a month and gives offerings to the manes, will obtain the fruits of performing Puruṣamedha yajña (A sacrifice).

SVARṆĀ. A celestial woman. By the blessings of Krauñca a daughter named Vṛndā was born to Svarṇā. There were none who were not fascinated by her beauty. Once Śukra asked Svarṇā, and obtained Vṛndā, for the asura named Jalandhara. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 4).

SVARṆABINDU. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45).

SVARṆAGRĪVA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45).

SVARṆAROMĀ. A king of the Solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that this king was the son of Mahāromā and the father of Prastharomā.

SVAROCIS. A son born to the king Dyutimān by his wife Varūthinī. He had learned the languages of all the living creatures from Vibhāvarī, the daughter of Mandāra a Vidyādhara, and the art called "Padminīvidyā" from Kalāvatī the daughter of Para, a Yakṣa. Three sons, named Vijaya, Merumanda, and Prabhāva were born to Svarocis by his three wives Manoramā, Vibhāvā, and Kalāvatī. Later from a jungle goddess another son named Svārociṣa also was born to Svarocis. Svārociṣa who was also called Dyntimān, became an emperor afterwards. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 61).

SVĀROCIṢA. A Manu. See under Manvantara.

SVARŪPA. An asura. This asura remains in the palace of Varuṇa and serves him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 14).

ŚVĀSĀ. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Dharmadeva married her. Anila, the Vasu, was born as their son. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 17).

SVASTIKA I. A nāga (serpent) who lived in Girivraja. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 9, that this serpent lives in the palace of Varuṇa.

SVASTIKA II. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 65).

SVASTIMATĪ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).

SVASTIPURATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place in Kurukṣetra. Those who visit this holy place will obtain the fruits of giving thousand cows as alms. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 174).

SVASTYĀTREYA. An ancient hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 28 that this hermit had lived in South India.

SVAŚVA. A king praised in the Ṛgveda. With a view to obtain a son, he worshipped the Sun and the Sun himself took birth as his son. The son grew up and became king. Once there arose a fight between this king and hermit Etaśa, in which fight Indra saved the hermit. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 61).

SVĀTI. A grandson of Cākṣuṣa Manu. Ten sons were born to Cākṣuṣa Manu, by his wife Naḍvalā. Svāti was the son of his son Ūru by his wife Āgneyī. Svāti had five brothers named Aṅga, Sumanas, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Gaya. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

SVAVATKA (ŚVAPHALKA). Father of Akrūra. (See under Śvaphalka)

ŚVĀVILLOMĀPAHA. A holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 61).

SVAYAMBHŪ. A teacher—priest. This teacher was the first one who had given precedence to the ceremonial rites of Śrāddha (offering to the manes). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 191).

SVĀYAMBHUVA MANU. Son of Brahmā and the first of the Manus.

1) Birth. Svāyambhuva Manu was born as the mental son, and Śatarūpā as the mental daughter, of Brahmā. Svāyambhuva did penance and acquired boons for ruling over the subjects. He married Śatarūpā herself. Brahmā appointed him as the first Manu to rule over the subjects. Two sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and two daughters named Prasūti and Ākūti, were born to Svāyambhuva by his wife Śatarūpā. Of the two daughters Prasūti was given to Prajāpati Dakṣa and Ākūti to Prajāpati Ruci as wives. A son named Yajña and a daughter named Dakṣiṇā were born to Ruci by Ākūti. The children were twins.

It is believed that Svāyambhuva and Śatarūpā are the first human beings. A story as given below, occurs in Matsya Purāṇa. Brahmā took birth as a man somewhere in Kāśmīra. Brahmā who took birth as man, created Śatarūpā from his own body, without any decrease in its radiance. Svāyambhuva (Brahmā) appreciated the beauty of Śatarūpā. He grew amorous. But Brahmā was ashamed of his feeling, as Śatarūpā being half of his body, was his daughter. Being subjected to love and shame at the same time Svāyambhuva stood there, looking at Śatarūpā. To avoid the look of Brahmā, Satarūpā moved to one side. Brahmā had no courage to turn his face to that side. So another face sprang up on that side for him. Śatarūpā turned to four sides and Brahmā thus got four faces. His amour subsided. When the desire subsided, a man originated from Brahmā. That man is Svāyambhuva. (For further details see under Manvantara).

SVAYAÑJĀTA. A son born to a man by his own wife. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 119 Verse 33).

SVAYAMPRABHĀ. A daughter of Maya, an asura. Two daughters named Svayamprabhā and Somaprabhā were born to Mayāsura. From birth Svayamprabhā became a celibate. Nalakūbara the son of Vaiśravaṇa married Somaprabhā.

Svayamprabhā, the celibate, became the maid of Rambhā. (For the rest of the story, see under Rāma Para 25). (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañeukālambaka, Taraṅga 3).

SVAYAMVARA I. A sub-section of Ādi Parva in Mahābhārata. This sub-section comprises Chapters 183 to 191 of Ādi Parva.

SVAYAMVARA II. A Kṣatriya custom of princesses selecting their husbands themselves. There are three kinds of Svayaṁvara. These three types are stipulated for Kings only. The first type is Icchāsvayaṁvara, the second one is Savyavasthāsvayaṁvara and the third is Śauryaśulkasvayaṁvara. No condition is attached to Icchāsvayaṁvara. Anybody may be chosen as husband according to the wish of the bride. Damayantī Svayaṁvara is an example of this. In the second it will be stipulated that the bridegroom will have to possess certain qualifications. In Sītā-Svayaṁvara Śrī Rāma drew the bow of Tryambaka, and married Sītā. This is an example of the second type of Svayaṁvara. The third type is meant for adventurous heroes. Arjuna's marrying Subhadrā is an example of the third type of Svayaṁvara. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 3).

SVEDAJA. An asura (demon). (See under Raktaja).

ŚVETA I. A King in ancient India. By his moral and spiritual power he was able to restore his dead son to life. He did not eat meat. Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150 mentions that he was one of the few Kings who deserve to be remembered with reverence at dawn and dusk. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 233; Śānti Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 68; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 65).

ŚVETA II. A King. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dīkṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 14 mentions that he was one of the prominent Kings in India.

ŚVETA III. A son of the Virāṭa King. Śveta was the son of King Virāṭa by his chief wife Surathā, who was a princess of Kosala. Śveta had attended Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya. This distinguished warrior was killed by Bhīṣma in Bhārata Yuddha. (M.B. Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 16; Sabhā Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 20; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 48).

ŚVETA IV. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 64).

ŚVETA V. Son of the elder brother of King Sudeva. There is a story of how Śveta, who was a sinner, attained mokṣa (salvation) by a vision of sage Agastya. Towards the end of his life, Śveta attained Mokṣa by performing austere tapas. But since he failed to earn God's grace by giving food to the hungry, even in Heaven, he was tormented by hunger and thirst. His hunger was so severe that he began eating his own flesh. At last as suggested by Brahmā he was born again on earth and after a visit to Agastya re-entered Heaven.

ŚVETĀ VI. A daughter of Dakṣa. Ten daughters were born to Dakṣa by his wife Krodhavaśā, including Śvetā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, 14th Sarga).

ŚVETA VII. A mountain in Uttarā Khaṇḍa. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Verse 1, we find that the Pāṇḍavas crossed the Śveta mountain during their life in the forest.

ŚVETA VIII. A country situated on the northern side of the Nīla mountain. The region known as "Hiraṇyakam" is situated to the north of this country. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 37).

ŚVETABHADRA. A Guhyaka (guardian of treasury). Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15 mentions that he serves Kubera in Kubera's assembly. He was the guardian of Kubera's treasury.

ŚVETADVĪPA. An island. It was on this island that Mahāviṣṇu performed his austere tapas for obtaining "Brahma Vidyā". It is situated on the northern side of the ocean of milk. It is 32,000 miles above Meru mountain. The inhabitants of Śvetadvīpa are without the sense organs. They do not take food. They are rich in "Jñāna" (knowledge). Their bodies give out perpetual fragrance. These sinless people are of white complexion. Their bodies and bones are as hard as Vajrāyudha. Their heads are as broad and flat as umbrellas and their voice as loud as thunder. Each of them has four arms and sixty teeth. All of them worship Śiva. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 335).

ŚVETAKETU. A Maharṣi.

1) Birth. Śvetaketu was the son of the sage Āruṇi or Uddālaka who was born in the Gautama clan. Śvetaketu had a sister named Sujātā. Aṣṭāvakra was her son by the sage, Kahoṭaka. Thus Śvetaketu was Aṣṭāvakra's uncle. Śvetaketu and Aṣṭāvakra grew up together in Uddālaka's āśrama. (See under Aṣṭāvakra).

2) Pride perishes. Under his father's training Śvetaketu became a great scholar. With the increase in his scholarship, he became very proud. The father who understood this called him to his side and asked him :- "By studying all about what you can see, hear and understand, have you learnt anything about what you cannot see, hear or understand?" Śvetaketu admitted that he did not know. Then Uddālaka explained to him the mystery of Paramātmā (universal soul) which is without beginning or end. (Chāndogyopaniṣad).

3) Śvetaketu in Pāñcāla. After completing his education under his father, Śvetaketu went to Pāñcāla. There, in the royal assembly Jaivali, the Pravāhaṇa King asked him the following questions :—"Where do people go from this world ? How do they return ? Where do Devayāna and Pitṛyāna meet ? From where do they diverge ? Why is Pitṛloka imperfect ? What is the fifth yajñabali ?"

Śvetaketu answered that he did not know because his father had not taught him these things. Then he went to his father Āruṇi and told him about his failure to answer these questions. The father admitted that he too did not know them and suggested that they should ask Pravāhaṇa himself. Since Śvetaketu refused to go with him to see the King, Uddālaka himself went to Prāvahaṇa. The King enlightened him on the above topics and sent him back. (Chāndogyopaniṣad 1.8).

4) Ācārya of Yajña Rules. In Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa, Śvetaketu is described as the Ācārya of the rules of Yajña. He has laid down definite rules and procedures for priests officiating in Yajñas. Besides, he has suggested the different customs and practices to be observed by Brahmacārins and tapasvins. In the treatises dealing with Dharmaśāstra before his time, food of sweet taste was denied to Brahmacārins. But Śvetaketu has pointed out that it was an entirely wrong doctrine. (Gopatha Brāhmaṇa, 1.33; Sāṁkhyāyana Brāhmaṇa, 1.33).

Once an ācārya named Jātūkarṇya became the priest of the Kings of Kāśī, Kosala and Videha. Śvetaketu who was angry at this complained bitterly about this to his father. Then Uddālaka reminded his son that priests should yearn for wisdom instead of being attracted by worldly pleasures.

5) Author of Kāmaśāstra. It is more or less clear that it was Śvetaketu who abridged the original work on Kāmaśāstra by Nandi, into 500 chapters. This abridgement of Śvetaketu was again abridged after some years by Bābhravya. It was after abridging it again and adding Dattakācārya's "Vaiśika" and Suvarṇanābha's "Sāmprayogika" etc., that Vātsyāyana composed his famous treatise "Kāmasūtra". Really speaking, the basis of Vātsyāyana's "Kāmasūtra" was the works of Bābhravya and Śvetaketu on Kāmaśāstra.

It has been observed that the first person who raised his voice against the evils of drinking and adultery by the Brāhmaṇa community was Śvetaketu. There is a story in the Mahābhārata about the fact which prompted him to bring marriage within the framework of law. Śvetaketu was Uddālaka's son, born to his wife by one of his disciples. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 22). Once his mother was abducted by a Brāhmaṇa. This incident inspired him to make stringent laws insisting on monogamy for men and women.

ŚVETAKI. A King. He was mostly occupied in performing Yajñas. Mahābhārata gives the following details about this yajña lover:

(i) Śvetaki performed numerous Yajñas. He was a King who was deeply absorbed in Yajñas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 222).
(ii) Once the Yajña he performed was so prolonged that the Ṛtviks were utterly tired and left the Yajña in the middle. After that the King had to bring in other Ṛtviks to complete it. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 21).
(iii) He worshipped Śiva and propitiated him to get a blessing to enable him to perform many Yajñas. Śiva advised him that he should do "āhuti" (homa or sacrifice) in Agni continuously for twelve years. Accepting this advice, the king invited Durvāsas to make arrangements for the Yajña. Appointing Durvāsas as Ṛtvik, Śvetaki continued the Yajña for a hundred years. (For more information see under Khāṇḍavadāha).

ŚVETAPARṆA. King of the city of Bhadrāvatī, which was situated to the east of Hastināpura. In Jaimini Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15, it is stated that Bhīma after a fight captured and took with him the beautiful horse of this King for the purpose of Yudhiṣṭhira's Aśvamedha Yajña.

ŚVETARAŚMI. An elephant. A Gandharva happened to be born as a white elephant in the Kaliṅga country, as a result of a curse. Śvetaraśmi is the name of that elephant. The King Ratnādhipa mounted that elephant and did many exploits.

King Ratnādhipa was the ruler of the island Ratnakūṭa. He was a prominent Vaiṣṇava. He did tapas to Viṣṇu with the object of conquering the whole earth and to get all princesses as his wives. Mahāviṣṇu appeared before him and said:—"A Gandharva has been born in the land of Kaliṅga by a curse as a white elephant. His name is Śvetaraśmi. As directed by me, he will come to you. You may ride him and he will take you through the air across the sky. All the Kings against whom you fight, will be defeated and they will offer their daughters to you as tribute."

Next day, the elephant Śvetaraśmi descended before him through the air. As advised by Mahāviṣṇu Ratnādhipa mounted the elephant and conquered the whole world and secured numerous princesses. One day as the King was riding the elephant and travelling through the air, an eagle came and pecked at the forehead of the elephant. Ratnādhipa drove it away by a thrust with his spear. But the elephant fell down unconscious. Even after five days he did not rise. The King offered prayers to the "Lokapālakas". He was about to cut off his own head and offer it as sacrifice to them. Just then he heard a mysterious voice saying:—"Do not be rash; Śvetaraśmi will rise at the touch of a chaste woman."

The King at once went to the palace and brought his chief queen who was kept closely guarded and asked her to touch the elephant. But he did not rise. Then he ordered all the rest of his wives in turn to touch the elephant. Still the elephant did not rise. When he found that none of his 80,000 wives was a "chaste woman", the King was ashamed of himself. Then he brought every one of the women in his kingdom and made them touch the animal one by one. But it was all in vain. At this stage, when Ratnādhipa was very much depressed, a merchant named Harṣagupta from Tāmralipti happened to come there. He was accompanied by his wife Śīlavatī. She touched the elephant and immediately it stood up. Ratnādhipa was very much pleased and married Śīlavatī's sister Rājadattā. After offering many rich presents to Śīlavatī and Harṣagupta Ratnādhipa took Rājadattā on the back of Śvetaraśmi to a deserted island Catuśśāladvīpa and left her there under the protection of several women attendants. The King spent his nights at Catuśśāladvīpa and days in his own palace.

One day Rājadattā was remaining alone in her residence. The attendants had gone out to attend to various duties. At this time a man happened to arrive there from somewhere. He was Bhavanasena, the son of a Vaiśya. He reached the island with the help of a piece of wood which was floating in the sea after a shipwreck. Rājadattā who heard his story, was irresistibly attracted by him and she embraced him. Just then the King arrived on the scene. Consoling himself by thinking that this was also the will of Fate, he let off the Vaiśya youth.

The King returned to his palace and decided to spend the rest of his life by doing tapas in the forest, after giving away all his wealth and property to the poor. When he was about to mount Śvetaraśmi, the animal suddenly transformed itself into a man of divine glory, dressed in gorgeous clothes and jewels. He spoke to the King as follows:—"I am a Gandharva. My name is Somaprabha. There is my elder brother Devaprabha who lives on the Malaya mountain. My brother had a wife named Rājavatī. Once all the three of us went to worship in a Viṣṇu temple at a place called Siddhavāsa. At that time my sister-in-law sang a devotional song. A Siddha who was enchanted by her song was looking fixedly at her. Enraged at it, my brother asked the Siddha why he was staring at his wife with lustful eyes. The innocent Siddha was naturally provoked by the question and pronounced a curse that my brother and his wife would be born in human wombs and in that birth, he would see his wife having sexual union with a stranger. When I heard my brother being cursed I became very angry. I hurled a toy elephant which was in my hand at the time, at the Siddha. He then cursed me also to become a white elephant just like the toy with which I hit him. I am that younger brother and you are my elder brother. This Rājadattā, your queen was my sister-in-law Rājavatī. Our curse is now over." As soon as he concluded, all the three of them renounced their earthly bodies and were restored to their original forms. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Ratnaprabhālambaka, Taraṅga 2).

ŚVETASIDDHA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 68).

ŚVETĀŚVATARA. He was the author of the famous Upaniṣad known as "Śvetāśvatara. Many spiritual and philosophical topics are discussed in this work divided into six chapters.

ŚVETAVĀHA. Another name for Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

ŚVETAVAKTRA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 73).

SVIṢṬAKṚT I. Another name of Agni (Fire). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 22, that this Agni was the sixth son of Bṛhaspati.

SVIṢṬAKṚT II. The Agni (fire) called Viśvapati, who was the second son of Manu. Rohiṇī the second daughter of Manu also is known by the name Sviṣṭakṛt. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, that the offering in fire, of the fat portions of the sacrificial animals, is carried out properly by the help of this fire.

ŚVITRĀPUTRA. See under Śvaitreya.

SVOTTHA. A King. (See under Śaralomā).

ŚYĀMĀ. One of the nine daughters of Meru, including Śyāmā. They are called Navakanyās. They were married by the sons of Agnīdhra. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

ŚYĀMA. A mountain in Śākadvīpa. It is as dark as clouds and very tall. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 19).

ŚYĀMABĀLĀ. A heroine of great prosperity. (See under Bhadraśravā).

ŚYĀMAKA. A son of Śūra by Māriṣā. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SYAMANTAKA. A divine jewel. (For further details see under Prasena).

ŚYĀMĀŚRAMA. An ancient holy place. By bathing and living here for a fortnight one would obtain the power of "Antardhāna" according to Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 30.

ŚYĀMĀYANA. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 55).

SYANDIKĀ. A river in Kosala. This is very famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 49, Verse 12, that Śrī Rāma, who had started for forest-life, crossed the river "Syandikā where peacocks and swans called."

ŚYĀPARṆA (S). A priestly community. They were the priests of King Viśvantara. Once Viśvantara decided to perform a Somayāga. Without allowing Śyāparṇas to take part in that yāga, the King invited other priests for the purpose. At that time, Rāmabhārgaveya, one of the Śyāparṇas devised a new method concerning Somayāga and established his claim to priesthood. (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, 7, 27).

ŚYĀVĀŚVA. Son of the sage Arcanānas. (See under Arcanānas).

ŚYENA I. A class of birds. A daughter named "Śyenī" was born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati by his wife Tāmrā. Śyenas were the sons of Śyenī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 56).

ŚYENA II. An ancient sage. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva Chapter 7, Verse 11, describes him as shining in Indra's assembly.

ŚYENACITRA. A King in ancient India. This King had never eaten meat. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).

ŚYENAGĀMĪ. A military commander of Khara the Rākṣasa. In his battle with Śrī Rāma, Khara had twelve military commanders including Syenagāmī. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 26).

ŚYENAJIT I. Son of Dala, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 192, Verse 63 mentions that he was the most beloved son of his father.

ŚYENAJIT II. Uncle of Bhīmasena. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 27).

ŚYENĪ. See under Śyena.

SYŪMARAŚMI. An ancient hermit. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 238, that this hermit got into the stomach of a cow and sitting there, talked with the hermit Kapila about the ways of Karma and renunciation. This hermit Syūmaraśmi is as ancient as the Ṛgveda. A statement as follows, occurs in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112. "Ye Aśvins who are the Leaders. Come here also with those protective weapons by which you gave protection to Atri, Śaṁyu and Manu, and the arrows by shooting which you saved Syūmaraśmi."

T

TA (त). This letter means a thief or the inner down of a bird. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

ṬA (ट). This letter means the act of singing. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

TAḌITPRABHĀ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Verse 17, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

TAIJASA. A holy place. This is situated in Kurukṣetra The importance of this place lies in the fact that it wa at this place that all devas together crowned Subrahmaṇya as their Commander-in-chief. (Śloka 16, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

TAITTIRI. A celebrated sage of the Taittirīya branch of sages. He attended the Yāga conducted by Uparicaravasu. (Śānti Parva).

TAKṢA. A son born to Bharata of his wife Māṇḍavī. This prince along with his brother Puṣkara conquered Gāndhāradeśa and created Takṣaśilānagarī there. (Uttarakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, and Vāyu Purāṇa).

TAKṢAKA I. A fierce serpent.

1) Genealogy and birth. Descending in order from Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa—Takṣaka.

Kaśyapamuni got of his wife Kadrū serpents and Takṣaka was one of the serpent chiefs. (Śloka 5, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva). See also under Kadrū).

2) Takṣaka and Parīkṣit. In his boyhood Takṣaka went out from the family. The reason was a curse by his mother. Once Kadrū and Vinatā, another wife of Kaśyapa, entered into a controversy regarding the colour of the hair of the tail of the horse Uccaiśśravas. Kadrū said, it was black and Vinatā said it was white. It was decided that she who lost the wager should become the servant of the other. That night Kadrū called her children and asked them to go and hang on the tail of the horse so that it should appear black. Some of the righteous children opposed this deceitful attempt of their mother and refused to go. Kadrū cursed them saying that they would be burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. Kadrū sent those children out from home and Takṣaka became their leader.

At that time Parīkṣit (King of Bhārata) became the victim of a curse that he would die by the bite of Takṣaka within seven days. (To know more details regarding this curse of the sage see under Āstīka). The worried King in consultation with his ministers decided to take protective measures. At first he moved to a seven-storeyed palace and stayed on the seventh storey. Physicians of fame and those well-versed in mantras were posted at the palace. Brahmins were put on duty for prayers. The entire palace and precincts were guarded by huge elephants. Security arrangements were such that even wind found it impossible to enter the palace without permission. The King did all his daily routine activities in the palace itself.

At that time Kaśyapa [There is a version that it was Dhanvantari who was thus sent back by Takṣaka. 9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata] was the greatest of all physicians and māntrikas and, greedy that he was, he started to the palace of Parīkṣit thinking that it would be the best opportunity to obtain some money from the King. Takṣaka also was going to the palace in the guise of a brahmin. On the way Takṣaka met Kaśyapa and knowing well that the presence of the celebrated Kaśyapa at the palace would be an obstacle to the achievement of his mission, he approached Kaśyapa. They talked on the way and Kaśyapa said he was going to the palace to save the King from the bite of Takṣaka. Then Takṣaka, revealing his identity, said that it was impossible to save anybody from the result of his bite. Both then decided to test their skill then and there. A huge banyan tree with many branches spreading wide was standing nearby and Takṣaka gave it a bite. Within seconds the huge tree was charred to destruction; Kaśyapa then took some water and reciting a mantra poured the water over the ashes of the tree and then to the surprise of Takṣaka, the tree rose up and stood in its original form. On seeing that Takṣaka confessed that Kaśyapa was superior to him. Takṣaka then coaxed him to his side and giving him a huge amount as bribe bade him return home.

Six days went by and on the seventh day Takṣaka reached the palace of Parīkṣit. He found the palace well-guarded and watched. There was no way to go in. Takṣaka then called all his relatives and had them disguised as brahmins. He sent them in with fruits and roots, like people who had come to pay homage to the King. Takṣaka crept into one of the most attractive of the fruits as a tiny worm. The guards at the gate stopped them. The fake brahmins then said that they had come a long way from a far off tapovana and should be allowed to see the King. The information was carried to the King. The King said he would see the brahmins the next day but ordered their gifts to be brought to him. When the fruits and roots were brought to him, he gave a fruit each to the ministers, himself taking the most beautiful fruit of the lot. When he cut the fruit open he saw a worm with two black eyes and a red body sitting inside it and was a bit surprised. Then he addressed his ministers thus : "Oh, best of ministers, by your earnest and sincere endeavour nothing has happened to me till now. The Sun is going to set and the term of the curse is going to end. There is no need to be afraid of any poison now. But let not a curse of a sage go futile. Let this worm bite me and fulfill the curse." So saying the King took the worm and placed it on his neck. The worm changed itself into the fierce Takṣaka and bit the King and the King fell down dead. (12th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) How Takṣaka became Indra's friend. Once the son of a sage of great divine splendour named Uttaṅka was studying under a Guru named Veda. When his education was complete, the Guru asked him to bring as dakṣiṇā (fees) the ear-rings worn by the Kṣatriya wife of King Pauṣya. Indra made Takṣaka steal the ornament and created many obstacles on the way. (For details see under Uttaṅka). That incident made them mutual friends and gradually Takṣaka became an intimate friend of Indra.

From that day onwards Uttaṅka waited for an opportunity to take vengeance on Takṣaka. It was at that time that Janamejaya, son of Parīkṣit, became the king. Janamejaya was only eleven years old when he became king and he was not then aware of the details of the death of his father. Uttaṅka went to him and told him how Takṣaka killed his father. Janamejaya became furious and asked him how to wreak vengeance on him. Uttaṅka suggested the performance of a Sarpasatra to which all the serpents should be attracted by mantras and burnt to death there. The young king agreed and Uttaṅka with other ṛṣis commenced the Sarpasatra.

One by one all the serpents came and fell into the sacrificial fire but Takṣaka was not to be found. Where is Takṣaka? This question was heard from many lips. Takṣaka was specially invoked by Uttaṅka. Takṣaka could not bear the power of Uttaṅka and he ran and prostrated before Indra. Indra not only did give refuge but gave him half of his seat in the throne and Takṣaka sat on it fully confident of security. Uttaṅka was enraged, when after repeated calls by mantra, Takṣaka did not appear and so he sat in meditation for some time to know the cause. He then saw Takṣaka sitting on the throne of Indra and the sight threw him into fury and he invoked Takṣaka, Indra and the throne and all. Lo ! in an instant Indra, Takṣaka, the throne and all started moving towards the sacrificial fire ! Within seconds all would have been burnt to death but for the timely intervention of a brahmin boy named Āstīka, son of the sage Jaratkāru. (See under Āstīka, Takṣaka escaped death that time).

Takṣaka by instructions from Indra was living in the forest of Khāṇḍava and when that was burnt by Agni, it was Indra who saved Takṣaka from the fire. (See under Khāṇḍavadāha).

4) Other details.

(i) A king called Candrāṅgada lived in the house of Takṣaka for some time. (See under Candrāṅgada).

(ii) Takṣaka in the guise of a brahmin named Kṣapaṇaka went to the sage Uttaṅka and stole the ornaments from him. (See under Uttaṅka).

(iii) Once the Earth was made into a cow and everybody milked from her what each wanted. The serpents milked poison from her and they then used Takṣaka as the calf. (See under Pṛthu).

(iv) During the burning of the forest of Khāṇḍava, Arjuna slew the wife of Takṣaka. (See under Khāṇḍavadāha).

(v) When the soul of Balabhadrarāma, after his death, reached Pātāla, Takṣaka received it with respect. (Śloka 15, Chapter 4, Mausala Parva).

(vi) Takṣaka lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Śloka 8, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

TAKṢAKA II. The elder of the two sons of Lakṣmaṇa of his wife Ūrmilā. The other was Chatraketu. Following the instructions of Śri Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa went to the east sea coast, defeated the forest tribe there. He then constructed a city there named Agati and made Takṣaka the king there. He then went to the west sea-coast and destroying the barbarous tribe there constructed a city there called Candramatī and made Chatraketu (? candraketu) the king. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

TAKṢAŚILĀ. A place of Purāṇic celebrity situated in the north-west of Bhārata. Even from ancient times this was an educational and cultural centre. From the descriptions of the Chinese traveller Huen Tsang it is found that Nalandā and Takṣaśilā were two great universities before Christ. The famous Sarpasatra of Janamejaya was conducted at this place situated on the banks of the river Vitastā. The story of Mahābhārata was first told at this place and at the end of the narration Brahmins were given gifts. (Chapters 3 and 5, Ādi Parva).

TĀLA. A hell. There are many hells under water including Tāla. (Chapter 6, Aṁśa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

TĀLACARA. A place of human habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 26, Chapter 140, Udyoga Parva).

TĀLADHVAJA. The phantom husband of Nārada. Once Nārada became a woman and a king called Tāladhvaja married her (Devī Purāṇa). It was to show how the mind is covered with illusion that Mahāviṣṇu made Nārada into a woman.

Once Nārada went to Mahāviṣṇu and asked him about the secret of life. Mahāviṣṇu said that there was nothing called life and life exists because of Māyā the illusion of the mind. Nārada insisted that he should see 'Māyā' (illusion) and so Viṣṇu started from Vaikuṇṭha with Nārada on the back of Garuḍa.

Crossing forests, rivers, cities, lakes, villages and mountains they reached Kanyākubja. There they saw a beautiful lake. Garuḍa landed and Viṣṇu and Nārada got down. They walked along the shore of the lake for some time and then they sat beneath a tree for some time. After some time Mahāviṣṇu asked Nārada to take a bath in the lake. Pleased at this command Nārada placed his violin and deer-hide on the shore and after first washing his face and feet and doing 'ācamana' with Kuśa grass in his hand stepped into the water for his bath. Mahāviṣṇu stood near the violin and deer-hide of Nārada and Nārada dipped himself in the water. What a surprise! Nārada was changed into a woman of great beauty. She had no memory of her previous birth and getting herself on to the shore she stood there watching the surroundings there. Then a king called Tāladhvaja came on horse-back that way. He addressed the beautiful woman as Saubhāgyasundarī and started talking with her. Within hours they got married and Tāladhvaja took her to his palace and spent the honey-moon there happily. Twelve years went by and Saubhāgyasundarī became pregnant. In due course she got a son named Vīravarmā. After another two years she got another son named Sudharmā. Thus she delivered a son every two years for twentyfour years becoming the mother of twelve sons. After some time she bore eight more sons also. When all the twenty sons came of age they were married according to the custom and in due course those sons also got sons. Thus Tāladhvaja and Saubhāgyasundarī became the heads of a large family of children and grand-children and lived happily. One day a king from a far-off place with a great army suddenly came and surrounded Kanyākubja. In the fight that ensued most of the sons and grand-sons of Saubhāgyasundarī were killed. The king fled from the battlefield and came to the palace. Saubhāgyasundarī was in great distress and when the enemies left the battlefield she secretly went there to have a last look at her sons and grandsons lying dead. The sight terrified her. They lay there without heads, hands or legs, eyes protruded, stomach cut open, intestines lying out and blood oozing out from everywhere. She fell to the ground and wept bitterly. Then Mahāviṣṇu came there disguised as an old brahmin and talked to her. He gave her instructions on some truths about life. Saubhāgyasundarī then called Tāladhvaja and they both went to the old lake and as instructed by the old brahmin Saubhāgyasundarī took a dip in the water. Lo! she became the old Nārada.

When Nārada got up from the lake Mahāviṣṇu was still standing near his violin and deer-skin smiling at him. The sight of Viṣṇu gave him knowledge of all that had happened. He stood there recounting in his memory how he had requested Viṣṇu to show him Māyā and how he had taken a bath in that lake and how he had spent a long period of married life ending in misery and how Viṣṇu had come to her in the form of an old brahmin when she had cried to him in agony and how the old brahmin had taken her and Tāladhvaja to the lake again and how he had become his old self again. He stood there still pondering over these when Viṣṇu called him and said "Come on Nārada, how slow you are. Finish your bath and come soon. What are you thinking about?" Tāladhvaja, however, was unmoved by any of these. He was puzzled to find a bearded Sannyāsī rising up from the place where his beautiful wife had dipped herself for a bath. He went to Nārada and asked "Oh best of sages, where is my wife who has just dipped herself in this same place? From where do you come?" Even before waiting to hear a reply from him the King began to make a hue and cry about the loss of his wife. Then Mahāviṣṇu went to him and consoled him by saying with illustrations that 'human ties are only ephemeral' and asked him to take a bath in the lake. Tāladhvaja after his bath became disgusted with life and after doing penance in the forests attained mokṣa. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TĀLADHVAJA II. See under Siṁhadhvaja.

TĀLAJAṄGHA. Jayadhvaja, fifth son of Kārttavīrya, got a son named Tālajaṅgha. The sons of this valiant man are called Tālajaṅghas. There was once a great fight between Vītihotra, the eldest of these sons, and Paraśurāma. (Chapter 88, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

TAMAS I. A hell.

TAMAS II. One of the three qualities of the soul. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas are the three qualities. It is through the union of these three qualities that the inner soul enters the life of all animate and inanimate objects. The attributes of Tamas are greed, sleep, bravery, cruelty disbelief in god, bad habits, begging and indifference. It is because of the action of tamoguṇa that one becomes a prey to lust. It is the worst result of tāmasic activities that people are born as inanimate objects, worms, insects, fishes, serpents, tortoises, cows and deer. As a better result of Tāmasic activities people are born as elephants, horses, Śūdras, barbarous people, lions, tigers and hogs. It is the good result of tāmasic deeds that produce pilgrims, good castes, egoistic people, demons and devils. (Chapter 12, Manusmṛti).

TAMASĀ. A sacred river. People of Bhārata were using the water of this river for drinking. (Śloka 3, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva). The famous āśrama of Vālmīki was on the banks of this river. This place was the scene of the well-known episode of the Krauñca birds and the famous curse of Vālmīki beginning with 'Mā niṣāda'. (Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 2, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

TĀMASA. The fourth Manu. (See under Manvantara). Svāyambhuva Manu, son of Brahmā, was the first Manu. He had two sons of Purāṇic fame named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Of these Priyavrata married the beautiful and virtuous daughters of Viśvakarmā the Prajāpati. They were Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī. Of his first wife Surūpā, he got ten sons Agnīdhra and others. The youngest child was a daughter named Ūrjjasvatī. Of the sons, Kavi, Savana and Mahāvīra became detached from worldly life and became learned in spiritual knowledge. Priyavrata got of his second wife Barhiṣmatī three sons named Uttama, Tāmasa and Raivata. They were very valiant and they gradually became chiefs of Manvantaras. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TĀMISRA. A hell. (See under Kāla).

TAMO NTAKṚT. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 58, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

TĀMRA. A demon, son of Murāsura. The demon Mura had seven children named Tāmra, Antarīkṣa, Śravaṇa, Vasu, Vibhāvasu, Nabhasvān and Aruṇa. Of these Tāmra was Mahiṣāsura's minister for a long time. The Chief Minister of Mahiṣāsura was Asilomā; Defence Minister, Cikṣura; Foreign minister, Viḍāla and Finance minister, Tāmra. Udarka was the Commander-in-chief and Bāṣkala, Trinetra and Kālabandhaka were Cabinet Ministers. He was killed along with his father Mura, by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (10th Skandha Bhāgavata and 5th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TĀMRĀ. Daughter of Dakṣa. Tāmrā was married to Kaśyapa and he begot of her five daughters named Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī. Of these Krauñcī delivered owls, Bhāsī delivered Bhāsas, Śyenī, Kites and Vultures, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī, swans, geese and cuckoos, and Śukī delivered Natā and Natā in turn Vinatā. (Sarga 14, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

TĀMRACŪḌĀ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 18, Chapter 46, Anuśāsana Parva).

TĀMRADVĪPA. An ancient place of habitation of Dakṣiṇa Bhārata. This place was conquered by Sahadeva in his victory march. (Śloka 68, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

TĀMRALIPTA. A King in ancient Bhārata. Sahadeva during his victory march conquered this King. (Śloka 24, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva).

TĀMRALIPTAKA. An ancient place of habitation on the north-east side of Bhārata. (Śloka 57, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TĀMRAPARṆĪ. A holy river of Dakṣiṇa Kerala. Once the Devas did penance on the banks of this river to obtain salvation. (Śloka 14, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

TĀMRĀRUṆATĪRTHA. A sacred place. He who visits this place would get the benefit of doing an aśvamedhayajña and he would go to Brahmaloka. (Śloka 154, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TĀMRAVATĪ. An ancient river. It is believed that fire is generated from this river. (Śloka 23, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

TĀMROṢṬHA. A Yakṣa who sits in the court of Kubera. (Śloka 16, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

TAṀSU. A King of Pūruvaṁśa. He was the son of Matināra and father of Īlina a King. (Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

TANAYA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. Śloka 64, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TAṆḌĪ. A celebrated sage. It was the sage who repeated to Brahmā the thousand names of Śiva. (Chapter 14, Anuśāsana Parva).

TANDULIKĀŚRAMA. A sacred place of ancient Bhārata. He who visits this place would enter Brahmaloka. (Śloka 43, Chapter 82, Vana Parva).

TĀṆḌYA. A sage. He was a friend of Indra. He once took part in the Yajña of Uparicaravasu. He observed correctly the duties of Vānaprastha and attained svarga. (Śloka 17, Chapter 244, Śānti Parva).

TAÑGAṆA. An ancient place of habitation of Bhārata. (Śloka 64, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TANTRIPĀLA. The false name adopted by Sahadeva when he lived incognito in the city of Virāṭa. (Śloka 9, Chapter 3, Virāṭa Parva).

TANTU. A Brahmavādī son of Viśvāmitra. (Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

TANU. An ancient sage. This sage lived in the palace of King Vīradyumna for a long time. (Chapters 127 and 128, Śānti Parva).

TAPA. A Deva of fire-like splendour. Born of the power of penance of five sages named Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha, Prāṇaka, Cyavana and Trivarcas, this Deva has got a name Pāñcajanya (born of five) also. He did severe penance (tapas) and got the name Tapa. His head is like fire, his hands like Sun, his skin and eyes are of golden hue and his waist, blue. (Śloka 4, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

TAPANA. A soldier of the country of Pāñcāla. He was killed by Karṇa in the Mahābhārata battle. (Śloka 15, Chapter 48, Karṇa Parva).

TĀPASĀRAṆYA. A Sacred place crowded with sages. (Śloka 20, Chapter 87, Vana Parva).

TAPASVĪ. A son born to Cākṣuṣa Manu of Naḍvalā. (Chapter 13, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

TAPATĪ. A daughter of Sūrya.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu are Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa—Sūrya—Tapatī.

2) Birth. Sūrya married Saṁjñā daughter of Viśvakarmā. He begot of Saṁjñā two children named Kālindī and Yama. At that time Sūrya (Sun) was not of the form as seen now. Saṁjñā, unable to bear the splendour of Sūrya who was of the shape of an egg entrusted her maid Chāyā with the work of serving her husband and left for a temple in the guise of a mare to do penance. Chāyā disguised as Saṁjñā served Sūrya for a very long period. Sūrya begot of her two children, Śanaiścara and Tapatī. Besides these, Sūrya had another daughter named Sāvitrī also. (Chapter 47, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

3) Marriage. There was a mighty king in the Lunar race called Ṛkṣa in the beginning of Kṛtayuga. He had a son named Saṁvaraṇa. He was made king of his country by his father even while he was a boy. He was a pious and righteous man. Vasiṣṭha was his Guru and he taught Saṁvaraṇa the Vedas along with the Aṅgas.

Once Saṁvaraṇa entrusting the administration of the state to Vasiṣṭha went to do penance in the forests. On his way he followed a deer for a long distance on horse-back and reached a deep forest named Vaibhrāja alone. There he saw a lotus pond full of blossomed lotuses and Kalhāra flowers. Celestial maidens were playing there without interruption. Among them he saw a very beautiful maiden. She was Tapatī daughter of Sūrya. Even at first sight they became lovers. The king looking at her lost his balance and fell from the horse. At once great and charming Gandharvas approached the king and sprinkling water on his face brought him back from swoon. Tapatī was also upset and the other nymphs took her to her father's house and consoled her.

Saṁvaraṇa returned on horse-back to his residence the city of Pratiṣṭhā. But the king neither slept nor ate any food. The sage Vasiṣṭha knew that all the ailments of the king were due to his love for Tapatī, daughter of Sūrya. So he flew up by his yogic powers and met Sūrya sitting in his chariot in all splendour. The sage described to Sūrya the love affair between Saṁvaraṇa and Tapatī and pleaded on behalf of the king for giving Tapatī to Saṁvaraṇa. Sūrya was pleased to hear that and sent Tapatī along with Vasiṣṭha to Saṁvaraṇa. Before long the marriage of Tapatī with Saṁvaraṇa was celebrated solemnly at Pratiṣṭhānagara. The celebrated emperor Kuru was the son born to Tapatī of Saṁvaraṇa. (Chapter 21, Vāyu Purāṇa).

4). How she got that name. Because she was the daughter of Sūrya who makes the sky hot (tapa) by his brilliance, she was called Tapatī. (Śloka 6, Chapter 171, Ādi Parva).

5). Tapatī becomes river Narmadā. Sūrya, father of Tapatī, blessed her and said she would thereafter flow west from the Vindhya as a river named Narmadā. The present holy river Narmadā is but Tapatīdevī transformed. (Chapter 47, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

TĀPATYA. Kuru was the son born to king Saṁvaraṇa of his wife Tapatī. All the descendants of Kuru were known as Kauravas and because they were of the generation of Tapatī, they were known as Tāpatyas also. The young Gandharva, Citraratha, who fought against Arjuna on the banks of the river, Gaṅgā addressed Arjuna as Tāpatya. (Śloka 79, Chapter 169, Ādi Parva).

TAPOLOKA. The place of abode of Vairājas who could not be burnt by fire. This is above Dhruvapada by eleven crores of yojanas. (Chapter 7, Aṁśa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

TAPTAKUMBHA. A hell. There are twentyeight hells according to Viṣṇu Purāṇa including Taptakumbha.

TAPTAMŪRTI. A hell. (See the section Naraka under Kāla).

TĀRA. A monkey who was a devotee of Śrī Rāma. This big monkey was the son of Bṛhaspati. Bṛhaspati made this monkey greater in size and intellect than all other monkeys. This Tāra was the minister of Bāli. (Śloka 10, Sarga 17, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa and Uttara Rāmāyaṇa). In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle this monkey fought against the demon Nikharvaṭa. (Śloka 9, Chapter 285, Vana Parva).

TĀRĀ I. Wife of Bāli, best of Vānaras (monkeys). There are two stories different from each other regarding the birth of Tārā. One version is that Tārā was born during the churning of the Milk-Ocean. Airāvata, Uccaiśśravas, Kalpavṛkṣa, Cintāmaṇi, Kaustubha, Candra, Apsarases, Mahālakṣmī Tārā and Rumā rose from the sea of Milk. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa). The second version is that Tārā was the daughter of Suṣeṇa. Bāli at the time of his death is said to have spoken thus of his wife Tārā "Tārā, daughter of Suṣeṇa, is well learned and is capable of assessing a situation and suggesting the correct thing to be done at that time. If she says a thing is good, it is never otherwise." (Chapter 22, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa). From this it can be understood that Tārā was the daughter of Suṣeṇa and we get an idea of the character of Tārā also from this. (See under Bāli).

TĀRĀ II. Wife of Bṛhaspati. She was extremely beautiful. Once she fell in love with Candra (Moon) and leaving her husband started living with him. Candra was the disciple of Bṛhaspati. The devas were angry when they found the wife of their preceptor staying with a disciple of his. Bṛhaspati sent word to her to return home but she did not heed. At last the Devas decided to fight against Candra. Then they came to a compromise and Tārā was sent back to Bṛhaspati. In due course Tārā delivered a son. He was Budha, father of Purūravas. There arose then a dispute between Candra and Bṛhaspati regarding the fatherhood of the child. Then the Devas called Tārā and asked her to name the child's father. Tārā said that the child was of Candra and so Budha was looked after at the house of Candra. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TĀRĀDATTĀ. Wife of Kaliṅgadatta, King of Takṣaśilā situated on the shores of the river Vitastā. Once a celestial maiden named Surabhidattā came to be born as the daughter of Tārādattā due to a curse of Indra. She was then called Kaliṅgasenā. (See under Dharmadatta).

TĀRAKA (TĀRAKĀSURA) I. An asura chief (demon). This demon even while he was very young did penance to propitiate Śiva and got a boon to the effect that none other than a son born to Śiva should be able to kill him. He became arrogant with the power of this boon and soon became a terror to the world. Then to kill Tārakāsura Subrahmaṇya was born as the son of Śiva. In the great battle between the devas and the asuras Tāraka was killed by Subrahmaṇya.

Tārakāsura was the father of Tārākṣa, Kamalākṣa and Vidyunmālika. (See under Subrahmaṇya). (Śloka 5, Chapter 33, Karṇa Parva).

TĀRAKA II. Śiva Purāṇa mentions about a Tāraka, son of the minister of Bhadrasena, a King of Kashmir. This Tāraka was the rebirth of a he-fowl. Bhadrasena had a son named Sudharmā. He was the rebirth of a monkey. There is a story regarding how this fowl and the monkey came to be born in Kashmir as above.

Once in the village of Nanda there was a prostitute named Mahānandā. Though she was a great devotee of Śiva she was living the life of a prostitute for her livelihood. She was having a monkey and a he-fowl as pets. She would adorn the necks of her pets with the rudrākṣa necklace (rosary) made of berry beads favourite of Śiva and when she sang songs in praise of Śiva those pets danced to the tune.

One day a Vaiśya came there. He had a diamond Śiva liṅga with him. Mahānandā felt a great fancy for that and so promised the Vaiśya that if he gave her the diamond liṅga she would remain a faithful wife to him for three days. The Vaiśya agreed and the diamond liṅga was kept in a very secure place That night when both the Vaiśya and Mahānandā were sleeping tired after a hectic amorous sport, the house got fire and the diamond was burst into pieces. The Vaiśya greatly griefstricken by the loss of the diamond, jumped into the fire and committed suicide. Mahānandā faithful to the promise that she would remain his wife for three days started to jump into the fire and abandon her life. At once Śiva appeared before her in person and said thus: "Oh, Mahānandā, do not commit suicide. I came to you disguised as a Vaiśya to test your devotion. You can now ask of me any boon."

With tears of joy running down her cheeks she said she wanted to live with Śiva. So Śiva carried her soul to Kailāsa. Not only that, Śiva blessed the fowl and monkey and said they would be born as devotees of Śiva in their next birth and attain mokṣa at the end of their life on earth. Accordingly the monkey and the fowl were born in Kashmir as Sudharmā and Tāraka.

TĀRĀKṢA (TĀRAKĀKṢA). A son of the demon Tārakāsura. This demon was the lord of a golden city called Tripura. Śiva killed him during Tripuradahana (burning of the Tripuras). See under Tripuradahana. (Chapters 33, 34, Karṇa Parva).

TARALA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. This place was conquered by Karṇa. (Śloka 20, Chapter 8, Karṇa Parva).

TARANTUKA. A Yakṣa. This Yakṣa is installed on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. If one spends one night in this holy place one would get the benefit of giving away a thousand cows as gifts. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

TĀRKṢYA I. Garuḍa. See under Garuḍa.

TĀRKṢYA II. A sage. He was a member of the court of Indra. He was known as Ariṣṭanemi also. He had no fear of death. He once discussed with Sarasvatīdevī about the soul. (Chapter 184, Vana Parva).

TĀRKṢYA III. A Kṣatriya youth of the country of Tārkṣya. He came to the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira and gave much wealth for the purpose. (Śloka 15, Chapter 53, Sabhā Parva), TĀRKṢYA IV. A synonym of Śiva. (Śloka 98, Chapter 17, Anuśāsana Parva).

TARUṆAKA. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 19, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

TĀṬAKĀ. A fierce demoness. It was because of a curse of the sage Agastya that Tāṭakā became a demoness.

There was once a great Yakṣa named Suketu, a son of Surakṣa. He did penance to propitiate Brahmā to get a child and by the blessing of Brahmā Suketu got a daughter named Tāṭakā. Brahmā gave her the strength of a thousand elephants. Taṭakā was by nature interested in cruel and violent deeds and doing deeds of magic. She made Sunda, son of Jharjha, her husband. She got two sons named Mārīca and Subāhu. They also became mighty ones great in deeds by magic.

Once Sunda attacked the āśrama of Agastya in a mood of intoxicated arrogance. Sunda was burnt to death in the fire of his fury. Tāṭakā coming to know of the death of her husband got angry and attacked the āśrama of Agastya with her sons. Agastya cursed them and made them into demons. Tāṭakā and her sons who immediately turned themselves into fierce-looking demons went first to Pātāla with Sumālī, father of the demon race and then went with Rāvaṇa, King of the demons, to Laṅkā and stayed there. With the help of Rāvaṇa, Tāṭakā conquered the great deep forest near Kārūṣa and stayed there with her sons. None, devas, demons or men, dared to step into that forest. Even the Sun or Clouds avoided passing above that forest.

It was at that time that Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa came to that forest with Viśvāmitra. Tāṭakā attacked Śrī Rāma and Rāma killed her with one arrow. The heavy body of the demoness fell to the ground like a big mountain. Her soul then rose up as a beautiful Gandharva lady and Tāṭakā who was thus released from the curse praised Śrī Rāma and left the place. Chapters 24 to 26 of Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa and Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

TĀṬAKĀYANA. A Brahmavādī son of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 56, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

TĀṬAṄKA. The name of Siṁhadhvaja, King of Siṁhala, in his previous birth. (See under Siṁhadhvaja).

TEJAŚCAṆḌA. A deva who adorns the god Sūrya with a flower garland daily. The idol of Tejaścaṇḍa is also used to be installed in temples. The idol is figured as one with a huge face and holding a sword and a lotus in his hands. (Chapter 51, Agni Purāṇa).

TEJASVATĪ I. A heroine in a story in Kathāsaritsāgara intended to show that all happenings either good or bad are but the workings of fate.

Tejasvatī was the daughter of king Vikramasena of Ujjayinī and was very beautiful. She never liked any male and so never wished to marry. One day while she was sitting upstairs in her palace, she happened to see a young man passing that way and surprisingly was attracted by him. She sent her companion to him and informed him of her liking for him. He did not like the idea first, but the clever persuasions of the maid made him agree to a clandestine meeting with the princess at a temple at night that day. Tejasvatī anxiously waited for the night to come.

About that time a Rajput prince greatly grieved at the loss of his father and subsequent loss of his kingdom started on a tour to see an old friend of his father. That night, by sheer accident, he came and rested in the same temple where the rendezvous of the princess was fixed. When night fell the princess came to the temple and without the least suspicion went and embraced the solitary figure sitting in the temple. The prince did not show any surprise and responded fully. The princess then understood all details of her lover and took him to his father the next morning. Somadatta (that was the prince's name) then told Vikramasena all his mishaps and Vikramasena got back all the lost kingdom of Somadatta and also gave his daughter in marriage to him. (Taraṅga 4, Madana Mañcukālambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

TEJASVATĪ II. The queen of Ādityasena a king of Ujjayinī.

TEJASVĪ. One of the five Indras. (See under Pāñcālī).

TEJEYU. A prince born to Miśrakeśī of Raudrāśva, son of Pūru. (Śloka 11, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

TEJOVATĪ. The capital city of Agni. This is situated on the south-east corner of Mahāmeru. In the centre is Manovatī, capital city of Brahmā. To the east of it is Amarāvatī, capital city of Indra. In the south-east corner is Tejovatī. In the south is Saṁyamanī, city of Yama. In the south-west is Kṛṣṇāñjanī of Nirṛti. In the west is Śraddhāvatī of Varuṇa. In the north west is Gandhavatī of Vāyu. In the north is Mahodayā of Kubera. In the north east corner is Yaśovatī of Īśāna. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

THA (थ) This letter means taking food. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

ṬHA (ठ) This letter means Candramaṇḍala (moon-disc), emptiness and Śiva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

ṬHIṆṬHĀKARĀLA. A prodigal person who lived in Ujjayinī. He used to defeat all in the game of dice. With the money so received from defeated persons he would buy wheat and go to the burial ground and after making bread with it would eat it dipped in ghee sitting before an oil light placed before an idol of Mahākāla (lord of the burial ground). He would then lie there itself and sleep.

One night he saw the idols in the Mahākāla temple twinkling. He jumped up and challenged the idols for a game of dice. The idols stood mute and Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla taking their silence to be consent according to the rules of gambling fixed a wager and played. He won and then he said addressing the idols "I have defeated you. Give me the money due to me." The idols stood silent and he, therefore, wrestled with them. Still the idols stood dumb. Then Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla took his sword. Instantly the devas gave him the money due to him. Early morning he went away from there and spent the money lavishly. At night he came back again and challenged the idols for gambling as before. This became a daily routine and the devas felt themselves harassed. They, therefore, approached the goddess Cāmuṇḍī and she advised them to refrain from playing as there was no loss of honour if one refused to take a challenge to gamble.

That night also as usual Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla came and challenged the idols for a game of dice. Then the idols said "We are not prepared to play." Then he challenged Mahākāla himself to play. Mahākāla also refused to play. Then suddenly the mind of Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla changed and he did penance to please Mahākāla. Mahākāla was pleased with him, appeared before him and blessed him.

Once a few nymphs came to bathe in the Mahākālī pond and as per the instructions of Mahākāla, Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla took away their robes while they were bathing. He demanded a nymph named Kalāvatī in return for their robes and finding no other way they gave him Kalāvatī.

Kalāvatī thus became the wife of a Man due to a curse of Indra. Once she praised sexual enjoyment with men on earth and decried the same with Devas. Indra heard it and he cursed her "Then let her become the wife of a man on earth and enjoy the pleasures there." All this story Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla learned from Kalāvatī. She added she wanted to go to Devaloka the next day for a dance with Rambhā. Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla consented and he also went to Devaloka and saw the dance, sitting along with the Devas.

When Rambhā's dance was over, there was the dance of a goat. Seeing that Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla said to himself: "Why, this is a goat I used to see daily in Ujjayinī. How did it come here to dance?" When the dances were over and the people dispersed, Kalāvatī took Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla to the Mahākālī temple. Next day he met the same goat in Ujjayinī and then he enquired "Hi, do that dance which you did yesterday before Indra in devaloka. Let me see" The goat stood dumb thinking of how this man on earth came to know of the dances in Devaloka. Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla once again compelled the goat to show its dance but when the goat still refused to dance, he thrashed it with a stick on its head and the goat immediately went to Devaloka and informed Indra about the incident. Indra felt sad when he saw blood oozing from the wound on its head. Indra by his divine powers then understood that Kalāvatī was at the bottom of all this trouble and cursed her to remain as a doll on a pillar in the temple belonging to King Narasiṁha of Nāgapura. Alambuṣā, mother of Kalāvatī, who heard the curse begged for relief and Indra said she would get freed from the curse when the king himself demolished the temple and razed the place to the ground.

True to the curse, Kalāvatī after giving all her ornaments to Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla bid him good bye and went and remained as a doll on the temple-pillar at Nāgapura. Deeply distressed at this mishap of his wife, Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla dressed himself as an ascetic and went to Nāgapura. There he purchased five earthen pots and filled them with the ornaments of Kalāvatī. He buried four of the pots in the forests and the fifth in the bazaar near the temple. Then he built a hermitage on the shores of a near-by river and started living there. News soon spread that a great yogī had come to the city and the King went to see him. They talked for a while on religious and spiritual matters and the King was about to leave when they heard the howl of a jackal. The yogī smiled and the King asked him why he smiled. He refused to answer but the King insisted and then the yogī said "Oh King, the jackal says that in a forest to the east of the city under a silver plant is a treasure." The King immediately ordered his men to go and dig at the place and when they did they got the treasure. The King offered the treasure to the yogī but he refused to accept it. Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla then on three different occasions pointed out to the King the three other pots in the forests and the King got great confidence in the powers of the yogī. One day he went to the temple with the King and while they were walking around a crow crew and the yogī smiled. The King again asked him the reason and the yogī said that there was a treasure pot in the bazaar near-by. When they searched at the spot directed by the yogī the treasure was found.

On another day the King and the yogī went to the temple and as they walked about they saw the doll on one of the pillars crying. The King asked the yogī the reason for the doll crying thus. The yogī replied "Oh, King this temple is not located in a proper place. Further the deity here was not installed at an auspicious time. If this continues the King will come to ruin. That was why the doll cried." On hearing this the King ordered the temple to be completely demolished and the place made a plain ground. The order was carried out and Kalāvatī got release from the curse. She went to heaven and told Indra all that had happened. Indra immediately sent Kalāvatī to fetch Ṭhinṭhākarāla to heaven and then both of them lived happily in heaven. (Taraṅga 2, Viṣamaśīlalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

TILABHĀRA. A place situated in the north-east part of Bhārata. (Śloka 53, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TILOTTAMĀ. A prominent celestial maiden.

1) Birth. Tilottamā was born to Pradhā, wife of Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marīci. Alambuṣā, Miśrakeśī, Vidyutparṇā, Aruṇā, Rakṣitā, Rambhā, Manoramā, Subāhu, Keśinī, Suratā, Surajā and Supriyā were all sisters of Tilottamā. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

There is a story about the birth of Tilottamā. Two demons named Sunda and Upasunda obtained invincible powers by doing penance. To make these two brothers quarrel with each other, by directions from Brahmā, Viśvakarmā created Tilottamā. Viśvakarmā collected from all inanimate and animate objects parts of objects beautiful to look at and created the enchanting Tilottamā. Tilottamā was then made to come to the world through the womb of Kaśyapa's wife. Because she was made by the tilāṁśa (small particle) of all the best (uttama) articles of the world she got the name of Tilottamā. (Chapter 215, Ādi Parva).

The good girl named Tilottamā was formerly created by Brahmā from small particles of diamonds. (Śloka 1, Chapter 141, Anuśāsana Parva).

2) How Śiva got four heads and Indra a thousand eyes. When the two demon brothers Sundopasundas were creating great havoc in the world by their cruel and immoral deeds, it was Tilottamā who was deputed by Brahmā to create a split between the brothers. On the eve of her departure to the world she went to Devaloka to bid adieu. Brahmā stood facing south and Śiva stood facing north and Tilottamā stood in the centre surrounded by the Devas. Tilottamā circled round the devas worshipping them. Śiva was enamoured of her beauty and wanted to see her always and so a face on all the four sides of his head sprang up so that he could see her always as she circled round him. Indra was also enamoured of her and he found his two eyes insufficient to enjoy her beauty. So instantly a thousand eyes sprang up in the face of Indra. (Chapter 215, Ādi Parva).

3) How Tilottamā cursed Sahasrānīka. (See under Sahasrānīka).

4) Tilottamā and Sundopasundas. See under Sunda.

5) Other details.

Tilottamā partook in the Janmotsava (birthday festival) of Arjuna. (Śloka 62, Chapter 122, Mahābhārata).

TIMIDHVAJA. A demon who was ruling in the state of Vaijayantapura. He was called Śambara also. This demon once attacked Devaloka. Indra was not able to kill him. So he sought the help of Daśaratha. Daśaratha went and fought against the demons. Daśaratha was made to faint in the battlefield by the magic of Timidhvaja and Kaikeyī who was there then, took him away and gave him all first aid. Pleased at this Daśaratha promised two boons for her and it was these boons that Kaikeyī demanded of Daśaratha on the advice of Mantharā at the time of the coronation of Śrī Rāma. (Sarga 9, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

TIMIṄGILA. A King. Sahadeva defeated this King during his victory campaign in the south. (Śloka 69, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

TĪRAGRAHA. An ancient place situated on the north-east part of Bhārata. (Śloka 52, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TIRAYĀṬṬAM. A form of unrefined drama current in Kerala. This ancient art originally came into being to propitiate some gods. There are others of this kind like 'Mutiyeṭṭu' 'Tīyāṭṭu' and 'Ayyappan Pāṭṭu' which all belong to a class of Ritualistic plays.

This folk drama is a colourful pageant devoted to gods. Its artistic value is worth noticing. This is known by different names like 'Tira', 'Teyya' and 'Kaliyāṭṭam'. 'Tira' in ancient language means 'daivadarśana' (sight of gods) 'Teyya' is the corrupt form of 'daiva'. Tirayāṭṭam is a visible amusement where actors appear dressed as gods. Because the actors dance in the dresses of gods, this is called devāṭṭam also. Teyyāṭṭam is the distorted form of devāṭṭam. Because this is both a Kali (play) and an āṭṭam (dance) this is called Kaliyāṭṭam also.

This is held in different parts of Malabar during the period of January to April. It is a programme of three days. The first programme is to exhibit an Ālākolam. This is done on the night of the first day. The second programme is to exhibit the vellāṭṭukolam which will be done on the second day evening. An indication of this is given on the first night itself. The programme of the second day begins with a dance called Velakkali. On that day there will be worshipping of gods at intervals. The Vellāṭṭukolam begins by five in the evening. The chief actor will present himself before the public in the colourful robes of a god and will begin to dance to the accompaniment of drums and music. As the dance and music continues even those without dresses would start dancing. Gradually sounds of pop-guns and instrumental music will rend the air. The chief dancer after dancing for some-time would place a stool before the temple and spread a white cloth on it. Then the dancer would sit in meditation and do the ceremony called 'calling the gods'. He would then pray to the gods to bless the function and appear at the zodiacal sign of Virgin. The dance and music start again. Then the people assembled would throw rice and flower into the cloth on the stool. The dancer-god holds a weapon in his hand and changes it often making huge uproars. Then after finishing the ceremonies like Kāvūṭṭu and Arulappāṭu, the Vellāṭṭakkāran retires. Then another actor in the dress of another god appears as Vellāṭṭak-kāran and repeats the programme of his predecessor. Because the dance (āṭṭam) is done before a white (vella) cloth the dance is called Vellāṭṭam.

After the vellāṭṭam before midnight Tirayāṭṭam begins. The dresses of the teyyas differ slightly from each other. Some Tiras wear jackets and skirts while some wear flower garlands made of Tulasī leaves (basil plant) and ceṭṭi (jungle geranium). All the tiras rush to the temple in great spirit and they are followed by lamp-holders and torch-bearers to the accompaniment of loud sounds of musical instruments and uproars from the spectators. When the first round of dances is over, the 'Teyya' stands dancing, pouring blessings to the people and deciding ways of atonement for the sins done. Then food is offered to the gods and the function ends with a 'Vela' circling the temple.

TIRUJÑĀNASAMBANDHA (R). He was one of the four Dākṣiṇātya Śaivamatācāryas. He lived during the early part of the seventh century. The book on Dākṣiṇātya Śaivamata is called Tirumura. There are twelve songs in that book. They were compiled by Nambiyāṇḍār Nambi who lived during the period of Rājarāja Cola. The first seven of these are devotional songs called Tevāras. They were composed jointly by Tirujñānasambandhar, Tirunāvukkaraśar and Sundaramūrti. The first three tevāras are of Tirujñānasambandhar. The twelfth tirumura is called Periyapurāṇa. Its author was Śekkizhār. He was called Arulmozhitteva also. He was the chief minister of Anapāyacola who ruled during the period 1063 to 1112 A.D. The theme of Periyapurāṇa is the life history of sixtythree Śaivasiddhas who were renowned as Nāyanārs and Aṭiyārs. It is in the sixth chapter of the second part of this book that they discuss Tirujñānasambandhar.

He was born in the village of Śīrkāzhi (Brahmapura) near Kumbhakoṇam in the district of Tañjāvūr. His father was Śivapādarāya and mother Bhagavatiyār. Once when Śivapādarāya went to bathe in the temple tank called Brahmatīrtha he took along with him his son Sambandhar also. Keeping his son on the steps of the tank Śivapādarāya plunged himself into the waters. Śiva and Pārvatī who came that way saw the child sitting alone and Pārvatī went and fed him with her breast-milk. From that moment onwards the child started singing songs in praise of Śiva and Pārvatī. When he grew up, he did many wonderful deeds visiting many Śiva temples of Pāṇḍirājya. His father fixed up a marriage for him and the bride's party assembled even before time at the Cidambara temple. Tirujñānasambandhar came there in time and standing before the temple deity sang a song in praise of Śiva. The song was greatly appealing and at the end of the song before all those assembled there Sambandhar to the astonishment of all merged with the deity.

TIRUNĀVUKKARAŚA (R). He was a Śaivaite like Tirujñānasambandhar (Refer above) and a disciple also of the latter. He was born in the village of Tiruvāmur in South Arcot district. His father was Pugalanār and mother Madiniyār both of whom were Vellālas. They got a daughter named Tilakavatiyār and a son named Marulnīkkiyār. It was this Marulnīkkiyār who became famous as Tirunāvukkaraśar. This siddha who acquired divine knowledge has composed 4900 songs in praise of Śiva of which only 312 are in use now.

TĪRTHA. A holy place. Even from very ancient times the people of Bhārata believed in the sacredness of holy places and they considered a pilgrimage to holy places as a part and parcel of their life. Almost all the Purāṇas have praised the greatness of holy places.

It is not true that all those who visit holy places and bathe in the sacred ponds there would get salvation. In Chapter 11 of Padma Purāṇa it is stated thus:

He would get salvation whose limbs, mind, knowledge, austerity and fame are under his own control. He who lives clean in body, without egoism, contented and never accepting gifts for services done would get salvation by visiting holy places. He who would fast if he did not get food, whose organs of sense are all under control would get salvation if he visits holy places. He who is righteous, free from anger, treats all animate objects like himself would get salvation if he visits holy place.

Once the great sage Cyavana told Prahlāda thus: "Only those who are pure in heart would get the benefit of visiting sacred places. It is a sin for others to do pilgrimage. The banks of Gaṅgā are crowded with villages and cities. Many types of people like Parayas, Fishermen, Vaṅgas, Khasas, Huns and Mlecchas live there. They bathe in the holy river and drink the holy water, but they do not get salvation because their mind and heart are not clean." (4th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TĪRTHAKOṬI. A holy place. He who visits this place would attain Viṣṇuloka after obtaining the benefit of doing a Puṇḍarīka yajña. (Śloka 121, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TĪRTHANEMĪ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 7, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

TĪRTHAYĀTRĀPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Vana Parva. This comprises Chapters 80 to 156 of Vana Parva.

TITIKṢĀ. One of the sixteen daughters born to Dakṣa of his wife Prasūti. Of these thirteen were married to Dharmadeva. Titikṣā was one of them. The others were Śraddhā, Maitrī etc. (4th Skandha Bhāgavata).

TITIKṢU. A King born of the family of Turvasu. He was the son of Uśīnara and father of Ruṣadratha. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

ṬIṬṬIBHA. An asura. This demon shines in the court of Varuṇa. (Śloka 15, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

ṬIṬṬIBHASARAS. A sacred pond near the āśrama of Vālmīki. There is a story about this pond. Once a water-fowl lived there with his mate. One day the male fowl went out for food and as he was returning home he found a few other water-fowls going that way and the male fowl suspected the chastity of his wife. The male fowl decided to abandon his mate and the innocent shefowl prayed to the Aṣṭadikpālakas for help. The Aṣṭadikpālakas instantly appeared there and made a pond and said that if the she-fowl could reach from one shore to the other without getting herself drowned she must be treated as chaste. The she-fowl was accordingly put into the waters and asked to swim to the other shore which she did without any accident. From that day onwards the pond was called Ṭiṭṭibhasaras. (Ṭiṭṭibha = water fowl. Saras = pond).

When Sītā came to the āśrama of Vālmīki after being abandoned by Śrī Rāma, Vālmīki wanted to test her chastity. So the sages asked Sītā to enter the pond and reach the other shore. "Oh goddess of Earth, if even in my dreams no other person than my husband has entered my thoughts, let me reach the other shore safe." So saying Sītā entered the water and the goddess of Earth placed her in her lap and took her to the other shore. Sītā did not get even wet. All the sages called her 'Mahāsādhvī' meaning supremely chaste woman. (Taraṅga 1, Alaṅkāravatīlambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

TITTIRA. A place of habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 51, Chapter 50, Bhīṣma Parva).

TITTIRI I. A kind of bird. To know about the origin of this bird see under the head Triśiras.

TITTIRI II. A celebrated serpent born to the sage Kaśyapa of Kadrū, his wife. (Śloka 15, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

TITTIRI III. A sage who was a member of the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 12, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

TITTIRI IV. A special breed of horses. Arjuna got this breed from Gandharvanagara during his victory campaign. (Śloka 6, Chapter 28, Sabhā Parva).

TOLA. A great satirical poet of the Malayālam Literature. A great humorist, Sanskrit scholar and actor, he was minister to Bhāskara Ravi Varmā who was ruler of Kerala during the period from 978 to 1027 A.D. According to Koduṅgallur Kuñjikkuttan Tampurān, a great Sanskrit scholar and poet, Tola was born in Kondoliññāru in the village of Airāṇikkulam near Adūr in Cochin in a Nambūdiri family. His original name was Nīlakaṇṭha. When he was a young man, he was ostracised from his community for having had illicit connections with a low-caste servant-maid named Cakkī. He was wearing then a deerskin belt (Tol) on his body as the usual mark of Brahmacārins (bachelors) and he threw it away of his own accord earning for him the name Tola. There is another version that Tola is the decayed form of 'Atula' meaning matchless. He was mainly interested in writing funny ridicules. There are many such poems now available believed to be those of Tola.

TOMARA. A place of habitation situated on the north-east part of Bhārata. (Śloka 69, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TORAṆASPHĀṬIKA. Duryodhana decided to make the Pāṇḍavas beggars by defeating them in a false game of dice. Dhṛtarāṣṭra stood as an accomplice to that. To play the game Dhṛtarāṣṭra constructed a palace and that palace was called Toraṇasphāṭika.

That diamond-studded palace had a thousand pillars and a hundred entrances. It had crystal fortresses and golden thrones in all the chambers. This palace was called Dyūtabhavana also. (Chapter 56, Sabhā Parva).

TRAIŚĀNI. A King of the family of Turvasu. He was the father of Karandhama. (See under Vaṁśāvali).

TRAIVALI (TRAIBALI). A sage. He shone as a membe in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 13, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

TRAIVARṆIKA (S). Brahmins, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas are the three castes of people called Traivarṇikas.

TRASADASYU. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He accepted sannyāsa (ascetic life) and became a Rājarṣi.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu-Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān- Vaivasvata Manu - Ikṣvāku-Vikukṣi-Śaśāda-Purañjaya (Kakutstha)-Anenas- Pṛthulāśva-Prasenajit - Yuvanāśva - Māndhātā - Purukutsa-Trasadasyu.

2) Other details.

(i) Because he made dasyus (evil people) 'tras' (to tremble with fear) he got the name of Trasadasyu. (7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

(ii) The Aśvinīdevas once saved him from defeat in a fight. (Sūkta 112, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

(iii) Once Agastya, Śrutarvā and Bradhnāśva, three eminent sages, came to the country of Trasadasyu. On hearing that the sages were coming, Trasadasyu abandoned all his work and went to receive the sages at the state boundary. He asked them the purpose of their visit and they said they wanted some money. The King then showed them his accounts and convinced them that he was poor. (Śloka 16, Chapter 98, Vana Parva).

(iv) Trasadasyu was one among those whose name should be remembered early in the morning. (Śloka 55, Chapter 165, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRASAREṆU. An ancient measure of weight of metals.

Jālāntarāgate bhānau
Yat sūkṣmaṁ dṛśyate rajaḥ /
Prathamaṁ tat pramāṇānāṁ
Trasareṇuṁ pracakṣate. //
(Śloka 132, Chapter 8, Manusmṛti).

Eight trasareṇus make one Īru. Three īrus make one Maṇkaṭuku. Three maṇkaṭukus make one Veṇkaṭuku. Six veṇkaṭukus make one Madhyastrīyava Three madhyastrīyavas make one kunnikkuru. Five kunnikkurus make one Māṣa. Sixteen māṣas make one Suvarṇa. This is the weight of two and a half varāhas. Four suvarṇas make one Pala. Ten palas make one Dharaṇa.

TRAYĪ. Veda. Formerly only three Vedas, Ṛgveda, Yajurveda and Sāmaveda were recognised and so Trayī meaning group of three was used to denote the Vedas. (See under Veda).

TRAYYĀRUṆA. A King of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Tridhanvā and father of Triśaṅku. (Chapter 57, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

TRAYYĀRUṆI. A sage of the line of disciples of Vyāsa. (See under Guruparamparā).

TRETĀYUGA. Second of the four yugas. Kṛtayuga, Tretāyuga, Dvāparayuga, and Kaliyuga are the four yugas. There are three thousand deva-varṣas (divine years) in Tretāyuga.

Śrī Rāma was born at the end of Tretāyuga. Tretāyuga came to an end in B.C. 867100. Śrī Rāma ruled the country for eleven thousand years.

Daśa-varṣa-sahasrāṇi
Daśa-varṣa-śatāni ca /
Rāmo rājyamupāsitvā
Brahmalokam prayāsyati. // (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

(After serving his land for ten thousand years and another ten hundred years (ten thousand plus thousand years) Śrī Rāma will go to Brahmaloka). When Rāma took over the reins of administration he was only forty years old. See under Manvantara and yuga. (Classical Sanskrit Literature).

TRIBHĀNU. A King born of the family of Yayāti. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TRIDASYU. The son born to Agastya of Lopāmudrā. (See under Idhmavāha).

TRIDHĀMĀ. The tenth incarnation of Śiva. At this time Bhṛgu Maharṣi was Vyāsa. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudrasaṁhitā).

TRIDHANVĀ. A King of the Solar dynasty who was the grandfather of Triśaṅku. (7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRIDIVĀ. A river of Bhārata. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

TRIGAṄGA. A holy place. (Śloka 29, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TRIGARTA. A powerful kingdom of ancient Bhārata. There are several references in the Mahābhārata to the Kings of Trigarta. The following are a few of them worth noticing :—

(i) The Pāṇḍavas passed through the country of Trigarta while they were wandering in the forests after the fire accident at the waxpalace. (Śloka 2, Chapter 155, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Arjuna during his victory march to the north defeated the King of Trigarta. (Śloka 18, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) Nakula once conquered the country of Trigarta. (Śloka 7, Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva).

(iv) The Kings of Trigarta used to pay tribute to Dharmaputra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Śloka 14).

(v) A King of Trigarta once killed the horses tied to the chariot of Dharmaputra and then committed suicide. (Śloka 12, Chapter 271, Vana Parva).

(vi) A King of Trigarta named Suratha was slain by Nakula. (Śloka 18, Chapter 271, Vana Parva).

(vii) Suśarmā, King of Trigarta with his army joined the Kaurava side and carried away the cattle of the King of Virāṭa and also fought with him. Arjuna during his stay incognito at the palace of the King of Virāṭa killed many Trigartas. (Chapter 32, Virāṭa Parva).

(viii) Suśarmā, King of Trigarta, took the King of Virāṭa as a captive and enraged at this Bhīmasena was about to kill Suśarmā when Arjuna intervened and stopped him from that. (Chapter 23, Virāṭa Parva).

(ix) Satyaratha, King of Trigarta, had four brothers and the Pāṇḍavas fought against all the five. (Śloka 9, Chapter 166, Udyoga Parva).

(x) In the Garuḍa-vyūha constructed by Bhīṣma (battle array in the shape of a vulture) five Trigarta princes stood at the head of the formation. (Chapter 56, Bhīṣma Parva).

(xi) Arjuna used the Vāyavyāstra against the Trigartas in the great battle. (Chapter 102, Bhīṣma Parva).

(xii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once defeated the Trigartas. (Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

(xiii) Once Paraśurāma killed many Trigartas. (Chapter 70, Droṇa Parva).

(xiv) There was a fight between Sātyaki and the Trigartas once. (Chapter 181, Droṇa Parva).

(xv) Arjuna who led the sacrificial horse of the Aśvamedhayajña of Dharmaputra created great havoc to the Trigartas. (Chapter 74, Aśvamedha Parva).

(xvi) The Kings of Trigarta live in the court of Yama. (Śloka 20, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

TRIJAṬA (GĀRGYA). A sage. Though he was a sage he lived by farming. He had a wife and children and his earnings from farm work were insufficient to make both ends meet. They were living in poverty and it was at that time that Rāma started for his life in exile in the forests. Before he commenced his journey to the forests he gave immense wealth to all the Brahmins who had assembled around him. At that time Trijaṭa never knew about it and when it came to the ears of Trijaṭa's wife she ran to the fields and persuaded Trijaṭa to go and see Śrī Rāma. When Trijaṭa came to the scene, Rāma had almost finished his distribution, but Trijaṭa took courage and pushing forward through the crowd approached Rāma and said "Oh, famous King, I am a poor man with many children. Give something for this poor man who lives by farming."

Hearing this, Śrī Rāma giving him a small stick asked him to throw the stick into the midst of the cattle grazing nearby. The Brahmin tightening his clothes and getting ready threw the stick with all his might to the south. The stick fell beyond a lakh of cattle grazing there. Śrī Rāma gave him all the cattle which stood inside the area covered by the stick. (Chapter 32, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

Trijaṭa was the son of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 55, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRIJAṬĀ. A servant demoness of the palace of Rāvaṇa. Trijaṭā was one among the demonesses who were deputed to entice Sītā, sitting dejected under the Aśoka tree, to the side of Rāvaṇa. All the demonesses slept around Sītā. Trijaṭā had a dream one night which is described in Chapter 27 of Sundara Kāṇḍa thus: "Śrī Rāma dressed in pure white robes and accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa dropped to the place from air in a chariot built with ivory and drawn by a thousand swans. After that they came to Sītā on the back of Airāvata. Śrī Rāmā took Sītā in his lap and rose up into the air. They went high to reach the Sun and Sītā was seen patting on the Sun and the moon. Then Airāvata which was carrying Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa came to the top of Laṅkā. Then they came to this place in chariot. Then they travelled to the north in a Puṣpaka vimāna. Rāvaṇa with oil smeared on his body and looking all red was lying on the ground. His head was clean shaven. He was drinking oil from a pot and was shouting loudly. Then Rāvaṇa went to the south on the back of a donkey. When he had travelled a short distance he fell from the donkey head downwards. Rising from there he was muttering many vulgar words. Then Rāvaṇa sank into a foul-smelling dung-mire. A black woman wearing a red saree and mud smeared all over her body came near him and dragged him to the south. Kumbhakarṇa also was subjected to her torture. All the members of Rāvaṇa's family were seen smeared with oil. After that they all travelled south again. At that time Rāvaṇa was seen on the back of a hog, Kumbhakarṇa on the back of a camel and Indrajit on the back of a crocodile. Vibhīṣaṇa alone was seen standing near the Puṣpaka Vimāna on the back of a four-tusked elephant wearing white robes and white garlands and sweet-smelling pastes smeared all over his body and holding a white umbrella with the four ministers by his side and the royal band playing. At that stage the beautiful city of Laṅkā with its whole army fell into the ocean. Then a monkey messenger of Śrī Rāma burnt the city of Laṅkā. All the women demonesses and Kumbhakarṇa were seen lying in a cow-dung pit wearing red dress."

When Trijaṭā repeated her dream to her companions all were frightened to death. After the Rāma-Rāvaṇa, battle, it is stated in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, that Śrī Rāma gave presents to Trijaṭā.(Śloka 41, Chapter 291, Vana Parva).

TRIKAKUBDHĀMĀ. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (Śloka 20, Chapter 140, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRIKŪṬA. A mountain. There are twenty mountains on the four sides of Mahāmeru including Trikūṭa. Purāṇas say that the city of Laṅkā, the abode of Rāvaṇa, was at the top of Trikūṭa. Mahāmeru is at the north of Bhārata. Laṅkā is to the south of Bhārata. Then how is it possible for Laṅkā to be on the top of Trikūṭa ?

There is a story to substantiate this belief. Once there arose a quarrel between Vāsuki and Vāyubhagavān and they decided to find out who between the two was more powerful. Vāsuki went and lay wound round Mahāmeru so tightly that even Vāyu (air) could not enter it. Vāyu got enraged and broke into a cyclone shaking the whole world. Even Mahāmeru began to shake but Vāsuki lay unaffected. The Cyclone began to increase in vigour and the devas were frightened and they went to Mahāviṣṇu accompanied by Śiva and Brahmā. After hearing their story Viṣṇu called Vāsuki and Vāyu to his side and commanded them to stop the quarrel. Vāsuki then unwound a part of his winding and that was from Trikūṭa. At once Vāyu entered there and separating Trikūṭa from other parts carried it away and dropped it in the southern sea. It fell to the south of the southern end of Bhārata. Laṅkā is the city built on it by the celebrated architect, Viśvakarman.

TRILOKĪTILAKA. A Yogeśvarī mantra. If one mutters this mantra (a sacred prayer addressed to a deity) one hundred and one times daily, one will become omniscient. Not only that, he would be able to move about to any place he wants. The mantra is this: "Hrīṁ Gaurī, Rudramayī te yogeśvari hum phaṭ Svāhā" (6th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRINETRA. A minister of Mahiṣāsura. The cabinet of Mahiṣāsura was extremely strong and brilliant. Cikṣura, virile and an expert in military science, was the Defence minister. The great economist, Tāmra, was the minister for finance. Udarka was the Commander-in-Chief and the three advisory members were Bāṣkala, Trinetra and Kālabandhaka. Śukrācārya was the minister for education. (5th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRIPĀDA. A demon. In the battle between the demons and the devas Subrahmaṇya slew this demon. (Śloka 75, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

TRIPURA. A phantom city built by Maya.

1) Origin. Kaśyapa Maharṣi son of Marīci and grandson of Brahmā had many wives. Of them Aditi got the first place and Diti the second place. Both of them were daughters of Dakṣa. Devas were born of Aditi and the asuras were born of Diti. Armies of asuras under the leadership of Śūrapadma, Siṁhavaktra, Tārakāsura, Gomukha, Hiraṇyākṣa, and Hiraṇyakaśipu gave immense trouble to the devas. The devas joined together under the leadership of Indra and fought the asuras. The nectar received from the ocean of Milk always made the devas the conquerors. When Subrahmaṇya slew Tārakāsura the asuras became very weak. At this stage Kamalākṣa, Tārakākṣa and Vidyunmālī, sons of Tārakāsura, did severe penance and made Brahmā appear before them. They demanded a boon that they would never be killed by anybody in any of the three worlds. Brahmā told them to ask any boon other than that. Then they said: "Great Lord, we must live in three cities and then roam about freely in the three worlds by your grace. Every thousand years all the three of us should join together at a place with our cities. After that meeting, we should separate and roam about freely for another thousand years. If at all there is death for us, it should occur only when we three are together and that also by one arrow." Brahmā granted the boon and disappeared.

The asuras then approached Maya and asked him to construct three separate cities for them. Maya built three wonderful cities. One was with gold, another with silver and the third with iron. Tārakākṣa took the golden one, Kamalākṣa took the silver one and Vidyunmālī took the iron one. The asuras started living in these cities. The three puras were respectively in Svarga, Ākāśa and the Earth. But each city had the power to travel to any other place at will. The power of controlling these cities was given to Bāṇa. Hiraṇyakaśipu's son was Prahlāda. Prahlāda's son was Virocana. Mahābali was Virocana's son and Bāṇa was Mahābali's son (Chapter 14, Padma Purāṇa). All these three cities together were named Tripura.

2) Mṛtasañjīvanī Vāpī. (The life giving tank). Even with the existence of Tripura the asuras began to die in numbers and the Tripuras thought of a way to escape from this calamity. Hari, son of Tārakāsura, did penance and made Brahmā appear before him in person. According to a request from Hari Brahmā made Maya build a tank wonderful in nature. Brahmā filled the tank with nectar. If any asura died, it was enough if he was dipped in the tank and the dead asura would soon come to life with added strength and vigour. Asuras became immortal since this and the Tripuras started teasing the devas and men with increased ferocity.

3) Consultation with Śiva. The aggrieved devas approached Brahmā and finding him incapable of helping took him to Śiva. Śiva heard everything and assured them that he would kill them when they next met together at the end of a thousand years.

4) Śiva makes preparations. As a first step to the slaughter of the Tripuras, Śiva sent Nārada to Tripura. Nārada by his unusual spiritual powers made the asura women feel more and more attached to the devas. Śiva at that time thinking about the convenience for a fight with the Tripuras came and settled down on the shores of the river Narmadā. That was how Narmadā became a holy river. (Chapter 13, Padma Purāṇa).

Śiva had to make grand preparations for a fight with the Tripuras. He invoked half the strength of the devas to himself to make Śivaśakti (Javelin of Śiva) greater than Asuraśakti. The devas made Viśvakarmā construct a special chariot for Śiva. On the banks of the river Narmadā at a place which became renowned as Maheśvara Śiva stayed for a thousand years thinking about the fight with the Tripuras. He made the mountain of Mandara his bow, Vāsuki, the string and Viṣṇu his arrow. He installed Agni at the tip and Vāyu at the bottom of the arrow. Four devas stood as horses to his chariot. The earth itself was the chariot and all the animate and inanimate objects of the devaloka arrayed at different parts of the chariot. On the wheels stood the Aśvinīdevas and Cakrapāṇi stayed on the axle. Gandharvas took places on the spokes. Indra stayed on the bow and Vaiśravaṇa on the arrow. Yama took his place on the right hand and the dreadful Kāla on the left hand. Brahmā acted as the charioteer.

Equipped thus, Śiva stayed in the godly chariot for a thousand years. When the three cities joined together in the sky Śiva split the cities by his three-forked spike. Then he sent an arrow to the cities. Bad omens began to appear in Tripura. People became lifeless in the cities. Soon an arrow from Śiva burnt the cities and the Tripuras were burnt to death. (7th Skandha, Bhāgavata; Chapters 31 to 34, Padma Purāṇa; Chapters 33 and 34, Karṇa Parva).

TRIPURĪ. An ancient country of South India. Sahadeva during his victory march conquered this country. (Śloka 60, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

TRIRATHIKA (S). (Three charioteers). Aśvatthāmā, Kṛpa and Sātyaki, the three eminent bow-men who took part in the Bhārata battle were called Trirathikas meaning three great charioteers. (See under Aśvatthāmā).

TRIŚAṄKU I. (SATYAVRATA, MATAṄGA). A celebrated King of the Solar dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Brahmā — Marīci — Kaśyapa — Vivasvān — Vaivasvata Manu— Ikṣvāku—Vikukṣi—Śaśāda—Purañjaya (Kakutstha)— Anenas—Pṛthulāśva — Prasenajit, Yuvanāśva – Māndhātā—Purukutsa—Trasadasyu—Anaraṇya— Haryaśva Vasumanas — Sudhanvā — Trayyāruṇa — Satyavrata (Triśaṅku).

2) Father discards him. When Satyavrata grew up he became a lewd, lustful imprudent man. One day while he was leading such a contemptuous life, a marriage was being conducted in a brahmin house. Guests had assembled, the bridegroom had come and the ceremony was about to start when Satyavrata entered the marriage hall and carried away by force the bride to the shock of all those present there. Some of the Brahmin guests immediately went to Trayyāruṇa and told him what a shameful crime his son had committed. The enraged father at once sent Satyavrata out from the palace. Satyavrata left the country altogether and went and stayed in a colony of harijans. Though he lived with those low-caste people he did not adopt their mode of living. He went out daily to the forests with his bow and arrow and made his food. He never felt any animosity towards his father who had thus sent him out from his country. He thought thus "Of course, my father got terribly angry when he heard the complaints of the Brahmins and in that mood punished me thus, though the punishment was a bit too much. But our family preceptor Vasiṣṭha, who knows everything, who is a moralist and a righteous man, who has the knowledge and authority to prescribe atonement for all sins, did severe punishment. That was very hard." As he thought more about it in this vein, he felt a great hatred towards Vasiṣṭha.

3) Satyavrata and Viśvāmitra's family. When his only son Satyavrata was turned out from the family, King Trayyāruṇa was greatly distressed. He went to the forests to do penance to get another son. At that time the country did not have rains for twelve successive years as a punishment for the King for sending out his son. The people suffered much. Among the people who were suffering were the wife and children of Viśvāmitra. Viśvāmitra at that time had gone to the shores of river Kauśikī for doing penance. Viśvāmitra's family consisting of his wife and three sons during that famine lived in hunger. At last the mother decided to sell the middle son and buy food with the money received by the sale. She put a rope made of darbha grass round the neck of the boy and took him to the market. On the way Satyavrata saw them and on hearing their sad story told them not to sell the child. He assured them that he would take care of them till the return of Viśvāmitra. He removed the darbha rope from the child's neck and the child got the name of Gālava from that time onwards. (Gala = neck). He promised them he would daily place enough meat at the foot of a tree near the āśrama. True to his promise, he hunted in the forests and brought to the foot of the tree fresh flesh of deer or hare or boar and also fresh fruits. The family lived happily because of him.

4) Curse of Vasiṣṭha and the name of Triśaṅku. When Trayyāruṇa went to the forests to do penance, it was Vasiṣṭha who was managing the affairs of the palace. The heir-apparent Satyavrata lived in the hut of a caṇḍāla. Every minute Satyavrata's hatred towards Vasiṣṭha increased in strength. One day Satyavrata did not get any game even after a day's hunting and at dusk he happened to reach the āśrama of Vasiṣṭha where he saw Nandinī, the beloved cow of the sage, grazing by the side of the āśrama. Anger, desire and hunger made him imprudent and without thinking of the consequences Satyavrata killed Nandinī and after eating enough to appease his hunger took the rest to feed the family of Viśvāmitra. The wife of Viśvāmitra little knowing that it was cow's flesh cooked it and ate it.

That night when Vasiṣṭha came to the āśrama he found Nandinī missing and he went in search of it. After some time the sage knew that Satyavrata had killed and eaten it. The enraged sage called Satyavrata to his side and cursed him thus "You will from today become a caṇḍāla. Three śaṅkus (sins) namely wrath of a father, abduction of another man's wife and consumption of cow's flesh will give you life-long trouble and thus you will earn a name, Triśaṅku (Three śaṅkus). Instantly Satyavrata became a caṇḍāla and started roaming about in the streets.

5) Triśaṅku becomes King. Triśaṅku, distressed at heart by a father's wrath and a Guru's curse walked about aimlessly in the forests. He expressed his desire to the ṛṣis and Brahmins to do a yāga and get himself absolved of all his sins. But nobody was willing to help a wretched man cursed and abandoned by both his father and his Guru. Feeling desperate, he decided to commit suicide. He made a great fire-pit and prepared himself to jump into it. Before doing that he prayed to the goddess and when the goddess knew that his devotee would jump into the fire and become ashes, she appeared before him in person and said thus: "Son, why do you try to jump into the fire ? Your father has become old and day after tomorrow he will crown you as King and then go to the forests to do penance. Look, there comes your father's minister to take you to the palace." When the goddess disappeared Satyavrata returned to his āśrama in a pensive mood. Nārada went and informed the king of everything that happened in the forest and the king immediately sent his ministers to fetch Satyavrata to the palace. When Satyavrata came the king crowned him as king and then went to the forests for penance.

Hariścandra, son of Triśaṅku, heard about the curse on his father and sent the ministers to fetch his father to the palace. But Triśaṅku did not come back and so the ministers made Hariścandra the king of Ayodhyā.

7) Viśvāmitra meets Triśaṅku. When Hariścandra became king, Triśaṅku was living in Ambāvana (forest of Ambā) as a great devotee of the goddess. It was at that time that Viśvāmitra returned home after his penance. Viśvāmitra enquired of his wife how they managed to live during the great famine. Then Satyavatī, wife of Viśvāmitra, told him the whole story of how Satyavrata helped them, why he killed Nandinī, Vasiṣṭha's cow, and how they ate cow's flesh, how Satyavrata was cursed to be a caṇḍāla, how he was called back as king and how he was at that time living in Ambāvana. The eyes of Viśvāmitrā became wet when he heard the sorrowful story and he decided to end the caṇḍālatva (state of being a caṇḍāla) of Satyavrata. He went straight to Ambāvana and met Triśaṅku there.

8) Triśaṅku Svarga (Heaven of Triśaṅku). Viśvāmitra promised Triśaṅku that he would send him to heaven bodily and made preparations for a yāga. No other sage partook in the yāga because of instructions from Vasiṣṭha. But undaunted, Viśvāmitra conducted the yāga alone and, as the power of his performances increased, Triśaṅku started rising bodily from earth slowly and soon rose up to heaven. When the devas found a Caṇḍāla standing with his physical body before the gates of heaven, they ran to Indra and told him. Indra got angry and pushed him out from heaven and Triśaṅku came falling down with his head turned downwards to the earth. Triśaṅku cried loudly calling Viśvāmitra by name. When Viśvāmitra, hearing the noise, looked up he saw poor Triśaṅku descending fast from heaven with his head turned upside down. Viśvāmitra's anger knew no bounds and he roared aloud "Let Triśaṅku stay where he is now." Triśaṅku stopped in mid-air. Indra did not allow Triśaṅku to come up and Viśvāmitra did not allow him to come down. Indra then made a separate heaven for Triśaṅku below the original heaven. Then Viśvāmitra started to create another Indra and devas for the new heaven. The devas were frightened and Indra then approached Viśvāmitra and requested him to desist from his attempt to make duplicate devas promising him that he would give Triśaṅku a seat in his heaven itself. Viśvāmitra agreed to it. At once Indra brought a golden Vimāna and took him bodily to heaven. (Sargas 57 to 59, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa 7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata; 9th Skandha, Bhāgavata; Chapter 13, Harivaṁśa; Sundara Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa; Chapter 71, Ādi Parva; Chapter 12, Sabhā Parva).

TRIŚAṄKU II. A philosopher. He is mentioned in several places in Taittirīyopaniṣad.

TRIṢAVAṆA. A sage. When he went to Hastināpura as a messenger of peace, he met Śrī Kṛṣṇa on the way. (Chapter 83, Udyoga Parva).

TRIŚIRAS I. A demon who was a friend of Rāvaṇa. The Khara-Dūṣaṇa-Triśiras combination led the attack on Śrī Rāma in the forest of Daṇḍaka when Lakṣmaṇa cut off the nose and breasts of the demoness Śūrpaṇakhā. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa killed all the three. Triśiras was a powerful fighter and Śrī Rāma's forehead was wounded by an arrow from Triśiras. The latter came and fought in a chariot drawn by four horses. He was killed by an arrow from Rāma. (Sarga 26, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

TRIŚIRAS II (VIŚVARŪPA). Once there was a celebrated Prajāpati of name Tvaṣṭā. Though he was of a pious nature interested in the welfare of Brahmins, he hated Indra. He thought of destroying Indra somehow. With that purpose in view he produced by his wife Recanā, a powerful son and named him Viśvarūpa. The boy had three heads and so he was called Triśiras (Tri=Three Śiras—head) also. He could use his three heads for three different purposes at a time. He would drink wine with one head and mutter the Veda-mantras by another head and see the world by the third.

Even from boyhood he disliked worldly pleasures and, abandoning even food, started to do penance. During the hot season he would sit amidst fire and during the cold season he would sit in water to do penance. He would stand with his head down and do penance. The penance of Triśiras was so severe that Indra began to get frightened. He sent celestial maidens to stop the penance but all the attempts proved futile before that great ascetic. Then Indra himself riding on Airāvata went and killed the sage by his Vajrāyudha. Indra feared whether Triśiras would come to life again and wreak vengeance on him. So he ordered a carpenter standing nearby to bring to him the three heads separated from the body. The carpenter cut off the heads from the body and as each head fell to the ground several kinds of birds were found escaping from it. From the head which used to mutter Vedic mantras rose the Kapiñjala birds; from the head used for drinking wine rose Kalapiṅga birds and from the third rose the Tittiri birds. When the birds thus rose to the air Indra was convinced that Triśiras was dead and he went away. See under Viśvarūpa. (6th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRIŚOKA. A sage who was the son of Kaṇva. The Aśvinīdevas once redeemed the cows belonging to this sage. (Sūkta 112, Anuvāka 16, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

TRIŚṚṄGA. A mountain. This stands to the north of Mahāmeru. Mahāmeru spreads over an area of eighteen thousand square miles and is two thousand miles high. It is surrounded by eight other small mountains two on each side. To the east is Jaṭhara and Devakūṭa. Pavamāna and Pāriyātra stand to the west while to the south are Kailāsa and Karavīra. On the north are Triśṛṅga and Makaragiri. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRISROTASĪ. A sacred river. This river lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Śloka 23, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

TRISTHĀNA. A holy place. If one lives and fasts here for one month, one would be able to see God. (Śloka 15, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRIṢṬUP. One of the seven horses tied to the chariot of Sūrya. The seven horses are; Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagatī, Triṣṭup, Anuṣṭup and Paṅkti. (Chapter 8, Aṁśa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

TRIŚŪLA. A weapon of Śiva with the Vaiṣṇava tejas (brilliance of Viṣṇu) obtained by churning Sūrya. Viśvakarmā made the following: Cakrāyudha (Discus weapon) of Viṣṇu, Triśūla (three-forked spike) of Śiva, Puṣpaka Vimāna (Aerial chariot) of Kubera and the weapon Śakti of Subrahmaṇya. (Chapter 2, Aṁśa 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). (See under Viśvakarmā for more details).

TRIŚŪLAKHĀTA. A sacred place. If a man bathes at this place and worships the devas and the manes, he would attain a place equal to that of Gaṇapati. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TRITA.

1) General information. A son of the sage Gautama. He had two brothers called Ekata and Dvita. (See under Ekata).

2) Other details.

(i) Ekata, Dvita and Trita were born to clean the hands of the devas when they become smeared with the sacrificial butter during the yāgas. Of these Trita once fell into a well while drawing water and the asuras closed the well. But Trita escaped opening the top. (Sūkta 52, Anuvāka 10, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

(ii) Once Ekata, Dvita and Trita were stranded in a desert and desperately needed water to quench an increasing thirst. At last they found a well and Trita after getting down and quenching his thirst brought water to his brothers. The cruel brothers, after drinking the water pushed Trita into the well and covered the well with the wheel of a bullock-cart. Trita prayed to the Aśvinīdevas for help and they appeared before him and rescued him from the well. (Sūkta 105, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

TRIVARGAS (TRIVARCAKA). A sage who was the son of Aṅgiras. He joined with four other sages and did penance and produced a son named Pāñcajanya equal to the god Agni in splendour. The other four sages were Kaśyapa, Prāṇa, Cyavana and Agni. (Ślokas 1 to 5, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

TRIVAKRĀ. A hunchback of a woman who was engaged in the work of making scented cosmetics for Kaṁsa. This woman saw Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to the palace of his uncle Kaṁsa in Mathurāpurī. Even at the first sight she felt a great respect and devotion towards Kṛṣṇa and she gave him the scented cosmetics she was carrying to Kaṁsa. Kṛṣṇa placed a foot of his on hers and holding her chin by both the hands raised it up and lo! she stood straight without her hunch. She requested Kṛṣṇa to stay with her that night but Kṛṣṇa left her saying he would stay with her on another day which he did the next day itself. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TRIVIKRAMA. Another name for Vāmana.

TRIVIKRAMASENA. A mighty king.

TRIVIṢṬAPA. A sacred place inside Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in the holy tank there and worships Śiva one would go to heaven. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

TṚṆABINDU I. A lake in the forest of Kāmyaka. The Pāṇḍavas once during their exile went to Tṛṇabindusaras from Dvaitavana. (Śloka 13, Chapter 258, Vana Parva).

TṚṆABINDU II. A sage. This sage sat and did penance at a place called Ṛṣitīrtha. (Chapter 20, Padma Purāṇa).

1) Grandfather of Viśravas. Viśravas, father of Rāvaṇa was the son of Māninī, daughter of Tṛṇabindu. There is a story about him in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa.

Once the sage Pulastya was doing penance in a secluded place in the Himālayas when a few Deva Gandharva women came to that place and disturbed his penance by their dances and noise. The angered sage gave a curse to that place saying that any woman coming to that place would become pregnant. Māninī, daughter of Tṛṇabindu went to this place unaware of the curse and got pregnant. She came weeping to her father and Tṛṇabindu immediately took his daughter to Pulastya and asked him to marry Māninī. Pulastya married Māninī and Viśravas was born to her.

2) How he cursed Hanūmān. Once Hanūmān caught hold of a lion and elephant in fight and tied them each to a post on the two sides of the āśrama of Tṛṇabindu. When the sage stepped out from the hermitage, he was for a moment frightened by the sight of two mighty animals on the sides of his āśrama and knew by his divine powers that the perpetrator of that deed was Hanūmān and so he cursed him saying that he would lose all his divine powers forthwith. Hanūmān begged for relief and the sage said that he would regain his powers at the time of his going in search of Sītā when another member of his species would remind him of his lost divine powers. Hanūmān remained oblivious of his powers till the time when the monkeys were trying to leap to Laṅkā from the Mahendra mountain on the shores of Bhārata. Jāmbavān, a mighty monkey chief called Hanūmān to his side and made him understand the great powers latent in him. From that moment onwards Hanūmān regained his lost powers and became his old self. (See under Hanūmān).

TṚṆAKA. A saintly King. He sat in the court of Yama and worshipped him. (Śloka 17, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

TṚṆAPA. A Deva Gandharva. He partook in the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Śloka 56, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

TṚṆASOMĀṄGIRAS. A sage who lived in the south of Bhārata. (Śloka 34, Chapter 150, Anuśāsana Parva).

TṚṆĀVARTA. A demon who was the son of Tārakāsura. This demon was living serving Kaṁsa. Kaṁsa once sent Tṛṇāvarta to kill Kṛṣṇa growing up in Ambāḍi. Tṛṇāvarta, in magic disguise went to the house of Nandagopa. Even when he entered the place bad omens were visible. Yaśodā was breast-feeding baby Kṛṣṇa keeping the babe in her lap. Soon Yaśodā felt the babe gaining weight and very soon she felt the weight unbearable and rose up to place the child on a mat on the ground. But even before that Yaśodā was fixed to the ground by the weight of the babe. But somehow she placed the babe on a mat on the ground and went out to wash her hands and face. When she came back she could not find the babe on the mat. Tṛṇāvarta had come in the form of whirl-wind and had already carried away the child. But after some time the weight of the babe increased so much that Tṛṇāvarta, unable to carry the weight, wanted to drop the child to the ground. But the child stuck on to his neck and breast tightly and Tṛṇāvarta finding no escape from the tight hold which suffocated him, fell to the ground dead on a hard rock. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TṚTĪYĀ. A river. This river sat in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Śloka 21, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

TRUṬI I. Thirty alpakālas make one Truṭi. (See under Kālamāna).

TRUṬI II. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 17, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

TRYAKṢA. An ancient place of habitation. When the King of this place went to see Dharmaputra with gifts the gate-keepers did not allow him to enter the palace premises. (Śloka 17, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

TRYAMBAKA. One of the Ekādaśa Rudras (eleven Rudras). See under Ekādaśarudra).

TUGRA. A King extolled in the Ṛgveda. This King sent his son Bhujyu with a large army by sea to conquer his enemies in dvīpāntara. When they were a long distance away from the shore the boats carrying them capsized in a storm and the prince and army were drowned in the sea. The prince then prayed to the Aśvinīdevas and they saved him and his army from the sea and sent them back to the palace. Those boats could travel both in the sea and the air. (Sūkta 116, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda, Anuvāka 17).

TUHĀRA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

TUHUṆḌA. A demon. This demon was born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danu. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

Accompanied by Tārakāsura this demon once attacked Subrahmaṇya. Tuhuṇḍa threw an iron mace against Gaṇapati who blocked his chariot. By a single stone of Gaṇapati, the diamond-studded mace of the demon broke into six pieces. When he found his mace gone the demon caught hold of Gaṇapati and beat him with a spiked club on his forehead. Gaṇapati cut him with his weapon (Axe) 'Veṇmazhu'. The demon fell to the ground in two pieces but still his hold on Gaṇapati was not released. Gaṇapati tried his best but could not loosen the hold. Then Kuṇḍodara, a leader of the attendants of Gaṇapati smashed the hands of Tuhuṇḍa with an iron mace. Tuhuṇḍa was killed thus. (Chapter 65, Vāyu Purāṇa).

This Tuhuṇḍa was born in his next life in the world as a King called Senābindu. (Śloka 19, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

TULĀDHĀRA. A charitable and righteous Vaiśya who lived in Kāśī. He gave the sage Jājali dharmopadeśa and both of them entered heaven. (See under Jājali).

TULĀPURUṢADĀNA. See under Merudāna.

TULASĪ. (Holy Basil plant.

1) General information. Tulasī is a plant held most sacred by the Hindus. There is a Purāṇic background for Tulasī attaining this spiritualistic importance. In fact it is Mahālakṣmī, wife of Viṣṇu, who had herself taken the form of Tulasī. There is a story about it in Devi Bhāgavata.

2) The curse of Sarasvatī. Sarasvatī, Gaṅgā and Lakṣmī were all, in the beginning, wives of Mahāviṣṇu. The Lord loved all the three equally. One day all the four were sitting together when Gaṅgā sent lustful glances at Viṣṇu which was immediately noticed by both Sarasvatī and Lakṣmī. Sarasvatī got angry and rising up caught hold of the hair of Gaṅgā and dragged her to the ground. Lakṣmī then caught hold of Sarasvatī to prevent further assault but Sarasvatī then poured all her rage on Lakṣmī and cursed her to be born as a plant on earth. Gaṅgādevī could not bear this and she cursed Sarasvatī to be born as a river on earth. Sarasvatī retorted with a curse that Gaṅgā also would be born as a river. When the whole tumult was over Viṣṇu called Lakṣmī to his side and said—"Oh Devī, do not worry. Things have happened as predestined. You go and be born as the daughter of Dharmadhvaja and grow up there. From there by divine grace you will be transformed into a plant sacred enough to make all the three worlds pure. That plant will be named Tulasī. When you will be thus living as Tulasī, a demon named Śaṅkhacūḍa with part of my virile strength will be born and he will marry you. Then you can come back to me. The holy river Padmāvatī will also be another form of your spirit."

3) The story of Dharmadhvaja. Who was this Dharmadhvaja to whom was born Mahālakṣmī as a daughter? In times of old there was a Manu called Dakṣasāvarṇi who was extremely virtuous and a part of Viṣṇu. Descending from Dakṣasāvarṇi were Brahmasāvarṇi-Dharmasāvarṇi-Rudrasāvarṇi-Devasāvarṇi-Indrasāvarṇi Vṛṣadhvaja. This last named was a great devotee of Śiva and because of his great affection for this devotee Śiva lived a whole period of a devayuga in the āśrama of Vṛṣadhvaja. King Vṛṣadhvaja by an edict prohibited the worship of any other deity than Śiva in his country. Even the worship of Mahālakṣmī ordained by the Vedas during the month of Bhādra (September) became extinct. All Yāgas and worship of Viṣṇu came to a stop. Sūrya (Sun-god) got angry at this belittling of other gods than Śiva and cursed the King Vṛṣadhvaja that he would cease to be prosperous. Śiva did not like it and he went to punish Sūrya holding his trident in his hand. Sūrya was frightened and he approached his father Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa and Sūrya went to Brahmā and acquainted him with all details. Brahmā also was helpless in the matter and so all the three of them went to Mahāviṣṇu. They prostrated before Viṣṇu and told him all. At that time Śiva also came there. Addressing all of them Viṣṇu said "Oh, Devas, within this half an hour twentyone yugas have passed by on the earth. He about whom you have come to speak to me is dead and gone. Even his son Rathadhvaja is dead. The latter has two sons named Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja. They are dull and splendourless now because of the curse of Sūrya and are now worshipping Lakṣmī." Saying thus Viṣṇu disappeared.

4) Birth of Tulasī. Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja did penance to propitiate Mahālakṣmī. Kuśadhvaja had a wife named Mālāvatī. She bore a daughter named Vedavatī. Sītā, wife of Śrī Rāma, was a rebirth of this Vedavatī.

King Dharmadhvaja had a wife named Mādhavī. Mahālakṣmī entered her womb as an embryo and after a hundred years Mādhavī gave birth to a daughter. Even at the time of birth the child looked like a matured girl and was extremely pretty. She was therefore, called Tulasī, meaning matchless. (Tula = match). This Tulasī abandoning all worldly pleasures went to Badarikāśrama and started doing penance there with the prayer that Mahāviṣṇu should become her husband. She did penance for twentyfour thousand years sitting amidst fire in the hot season and sitting in water in the cold season and taking only fruits and water as food. Then she did penance for another thirtythousand years eating leaves only, another forty thousand years taking air only as food and another ten thousand years without any food. At this stage Brahmā appeared and asked her the object of her Penance. She replied she wanted Mahāviṣṇu to be her husband. Hearing this Brahmā said thus—"Devi, you know the cowboy Sudāmā born of a part of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. That brilliant cowboy has now been born on earth, due to a curse of Rādhā, as a demon named Śaṅkhacūḍa. He is matchlessly eminent and has once fallen in love with you seeing you at Goloka. You will become his wife and later you can become the wife of Nārāyaṇa. At that time a part of your divine body will remain on earth as a plant named Tulasī. Tulasī will become the most sacred of all plants, dear to Viṣṇu, and all worship without using Tulasī leaves would be ineffective."

5) Marriage of Tulasī. Due to a curse of Rādhā, Sudāmā, the cowboy, was born on earth as a demon named Śaṅkhacūḍa. He did penance sitting at Badarikāśrama and obtained Viṣṇukavaca. Another object of his was to marry Tulasī. He obtained a boon from Brahmā that his death would occur only when the Viṣṇu Kavaca was removed from his body and the chastity of his wife was lost. At that time Śaṅkhacūḍa and Tulasī met each other in the forests and were married. Śaṅkhacūḍa, brilliant and majestic, went about with Tulasī in amorous sports creating jealousy even among the devas. His arrogance gave innumerable troubles to the devas and they along with Brahmā and Śiva approached Mahāviṣṇu for a remedy. Viṣṇu then sent Śiva with his spike to kill Śaṅkhacūḍa and he himself started to molest the chastity of his wife Tulasī. Śaṅkhacūḍa took leave of Tulasī to go and fight with Śiva. When Tulasī was thus left alone, Mahāviṣṇu in the form of Śaṅkhacūḍa approached Tulasī and after some preliminary talks entered into sexual acts. Tulasī found some difference in the usual sexual methods and suspecting foul play jumped up to curse the impostor. At once Mahāviṣṇu appeared in his true form and said "You have been doing penance for a long time to get me as your husband. Your husband Śaṅkhacūḍa was the chief of my Pārṣadas, Sudāmā. It is time for him to go back to Goloka getting himself released from the curse. By this time Śiva would have killed him and he would have gone to Goloka as Sudāmā. You can now abandon your body and come with me to Vaikuṇṭha to enjoy life as my wife.

Your body will decay and become a holy river named Gaṇḍakī; your hair will become Tulasī plant the leaves of which will be held sacred in all the three worlds."

Tulasī then changed herself into the form of Lakṣmī and went to Vaikuṇṭha with Mahāviṣṇu. (9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

6) The greatness of Tulasī. Everything of the Tulasī plant, leaves, flowers, fruits, roots, twigs, skin and even the soil around is holy. The soul of a dead one whose dead body is cremated using Tulasī twigs for firewood would attain a permanent place in Viṣṇuloka. Even great sinners would be absolved of their sins if their dead bodies are cremated with Tulasī twigs. If at the time of death one thinks of God and mutters His name and if his dead body is later cremated with Tulasī twigs, he would have no rebirths. Even he who has done a crore of sins would attain mokṣa if at the time of cremating his dead body a piece of Tulasī twig is placed at the bottom of the funeral pyre. Just as all waters become pure by the union with Gaṅgā water, all firewood is made pure by the addition of a small piece of Tulasī twig. If the dead body of one is cremated using Tulasī twigs alone, one's sins for a crore of Kalpa years would be washed away. Yamadūtas would keep away from one whose dead body is cremated with Tulasī twigs and servants of Viṣṇu would come near. If a light is burnt for Viṣṇu with a Tulasī stick it would be equal to burning several lakhs of lights for Viṣṇu. If one makes the Tulasī leaves into a paste and smears it on one's body and then worships Viṣṇu for one day, one would be getting the benefit of a hundred ordinary worships and also the benefit of doing a hundred godānas. (gifts of cows). (Chapter 24, Padma Purāṇa).

TUMBURU I. A Deva Gandharva. He was the best musician among the Gandharvas.

1) Birth. Tumburu was the son of Kaśyapa, son of Marīci and grandson of Brahmā, born of his wife Pradhā. Of the sons of Kaśyapa the four Gandharva sons, Tumburu, Bāhu, Hāhā and Hūhū were noted for their sweet and pleasant conversation.

2) Tumburu and the Pāṇḍavas. Mahābhārata states about several occasions when Tumburu has shown a special and deep interest in the Pāṇḍavas. The following few are of special mention—

(i) Tumburu attended the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Śloka 54, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Once this Gandharva gave Yudhiṣṭhira a hundred horses. (Śloka 24, Chapter 52, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) Tumburu welcomed Arjuna when the latter went to Devaloka at the invitation of Indra. (Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 14).

(iv) Once when the Pāṇḍavas were living incognito in the country of Virāṭa the Kauravas carried away the cattle of the King. Arjuna in disguise then fought against the Kauravas and Tumburu watched the fight with interest. (Śloka 12, Chapter 56, Virāṭa Parva).

(v) Tumburu was present at the Aśvamedhayāga of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 39, Chapter 88, Aśvamedha Parva).

3) How Tumburu was born as Virādha. When Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were in the forests in exile a demon named Virādha attacked them. That demon was none other than Tumburu. Once when Tumburu was living in the city of Kubera he committed a sin and Kubera cursed him and made him into a demon. Kubera had then told him that he would get relief from the curse when he was slain by Rāma, son of Daśaratha. Śrī Rāma killed Virādha and the latter regaining the form of Tumburu left for Gandharvaloka. (See under Virādha).

4) How he cursed Purūravas. It is found in Kathāsaritsāgara that the temporary separation which Purūravas had from Urvaśī was due to a curse by the Gandharva Tumburu.

After marrying Urvaśī Purūravas once went to Devaloka at the invitation of Indra. He was invited to help Indra in his fight against the asuras. Indra celebrated the day on which one of the best of the demons, Māyādhara was killed. Rambhā was dancing before ācārya Tumburu on the occasion and Purūravas finding fault with her dance mocked at her. Rambhā felt insulted and asked the King thus : "Fool of a King, what do you know of the divine dances of Devaloka ?" Purūravas retorted that he had learnt more of dancing from Urvaśī than what her preceptor Tumburu knew. Tumburu got angry and cursed Purūravas that he would live separated from Urvaśī till he did penance to please Mahāviṣṇu. The Gandharvas then carried away Urvaśī from Purūravas. (See under Purūravas).

5) Other details.

(i) Tumburu was a member of the court of Indra. (Śloka 14, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Tumburu was a member of the court of Kubera. (Śloka 26, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) The songs of Tumburu who was a worshipper of Kubera used to be heard from the mountain of Gandhamādana on the full-moon day. (Śloka 29, Chapter 159, Vana Parva).

TUMBURU II. A sage.

Some details.

(i) This sage was one among the many sages who came from the north to visit Śrī Rāma on his return to Ayodhyā after the exile. Those who came from the north were—Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha, Atri, Viśvāmitra, Gautama, Jamadagni, Bharadvāja, Sanakādis, Śarabhaṅga, Durvāsas, Mataṅga, Vibhāṇḍaka and Tumburu. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(ii) Tumburu was one among the ṛṣis who visited Bhīṣma lying on his bed of arrows. (Chapter 47, Śānti Parva).

TUṆḌA I. A King. The Pāṇḍavas invited this King to take part in the great Mahābhārata battle. (Śloka 21, Chapter 4, Udyoga Parva).

TUṆḌA II. A demon. This demon who was one among the army of Rāvaṇa fought against the monkey leader, Nala, in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle. (Śloka 9, Chapter 285, Vana Parva).

TUṆḌIKERA. An ancient place of Bhārata. The people of this place took part in the great Mahābhārata battle. (Śloka 20, Chapter 17, Droṇa Parva).

TUṄGAKĀRAṆYA. A holy place. The sage Sārasvata did Devatādhyayana on behalf of other sages at this place. (Śloka 46, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

TUṄGAVEṆĀ. An ancient holy river of Bhārata. People of Bhāratae came pure by drinking the water of this river. (Śloka 27, Chapter 6, Bhīṣma Parva).

TURĪYA. A state of existence of Man. (See under Jāgrat).

TURVAŚA. A King extolled in the Ṛgveda. Narya, Turvaśa and Turvīti were contemporaries. (Sūkta 54, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

TURVASU. A son born to Yayāti of his wife Devayānī. Yayāti had two wives Śarmiṣṭhā and Devayānī. Of Śarmiṣṭhā, Yayātī had three sons named Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru and of Devayānī, two sons named Yadu and Turvasu.

Once Yayāti called all his five sons to his side and asked them if any one of them would be willing to exchange his youth with his father's old age. All the four refused but Pūru agreed to accede to his father's request. Yayāti then cursed Turvasu and all the other three. (See under Yayāti).

TURVAYAṆA, A King extolled in the Ṛgveda. (Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

TURVĪTI I. A King extolled in the Ṛgveda.

TURVĪTI II. A King. But since in some places he is mentioned as a sage, it must be presumed that he must have been a King who had become a sannyāsin during the latter part of his life. Once this sage was drowned and Indra came in time and rescued him. (Sūkta 61, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

TUṢĀRA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. Scholars are of opinion that the present Tukhāristan was the ancient Tuṣāra. The people of this place used to be called Tuṣāras and their King Tuṣāra. The King of Tuṣāra was the store-keeper during the Rājasūyayajña of Yudhiṣṭhira, (Chapter 51, Vana Parva). The Pāṇḍavas during their exile crossed this country of Tuṣāra on their way to Dvaitavana from the mountain of Gandhamādana. During the great battle, the Tuṣāras arrayed themselves on the right side of the Krauñca Vyūha (an army formation in the shape of a stork) constructed by Bhīṣma. (Śloka 21, Chapter 75, Bhīṣma Parva). There is a statement in Chapter 65 of Śānti Parva that a barbarous tribe called Tuṣāras lived in the country of Māndhātā.

TUṢITAS. There were twelve good devas called Tuṣitas in the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara. When the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara ended and the Vaivasvata Manvantara commenced all the twelve were born as sons of Kaśyapa of his wife Aditi. Because they were born of Aditi they were called Dvādaśādityas. They were Viṣṇu etc. Thus the Tuṣitas of the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara were the Dvādaśādityas of Vaivasvata Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15).

TUṢṬI. A daughter of Dakṣa. She became the wife of Dharmadeva. Dharmadeva accepted as wives the thirteen daughters of Dakṣa including Tuṣṭi. Their younger sister Khyāti etc were married to Marīci etc. (Chapter 7, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

TUṢṬIMĀN. A King of the Yayāti dynasty. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TVAṢṬĀ I. A Prajāpati. This Prajāpati was an asura also. (Sūkta 94, Anuvāka 14, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

1) Birth. There are contradictory statements in the Purāṇas regarding the birth of Tvaṣṭā.

(a) Viśvakarmā got four sons named Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭā Ajaikapāt and Rudra. The great ascetic Viśvarūpa was the son of Tvaṣṭā. (Chapter 15, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

(b) Kaśyapa got as his sons the Ekādaśarudras of his wife Surabhi. Surabhi who became pure by penance got by the grace of Mahādeva five other sons named Aja, Ekapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭā and Rudra. The noble and famous Viśvarūpa was the son of Tvaṣṭā. (Chapter 18, Agni Purāṇa).

(c) Kaśyapa Maharṣi got a son named Tvaṣṭā of his wife Aditi. (Śloka 34, Chapter 226, Ādi Parva).

Bacause of such varied statements it is not possible to say whose son Tvaṣṭā was.

2) Indra's enemy. Even from the beginning, Tvaṣṭā hated Indra. Tvaṣṭā begot of his wife Recanā a son named Viśvarūpa to kill Indra. Viśvarūpa was the younger brother of Sanniveśa. Viśvarūpa was called Triśiras also. (See under Triśiras). While Viśvarūpa was doing penance Indra killed him by his Vajrāyudha. Enraged at this Tvaṣṭā produced another asura named Vṛtra to kill Indra. (See under Vṛtra). Indra killed Vṛtrāsura also. At last greatly disappointed Tvaṣṭā cursed Indra that he would suffer from Putraduḥkha (loss of son) and then went to the mount Meru to do penance.

3) Other details.

(i) Tvaṣṭā also treated as a Rudra. (Chapter 15, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

(ii) When the forest of Khāṇḍava was burnt, he stood on the side of Indra and fought against Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. He separated huge portions from the mountain and threw them against Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. (Śloka 34, Chapter 226, Ādi Parva).

(iii) Tvaṣṭā shines in the court of Indra. (Śloka 14, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).

(iv) Kuśeru, daughter of Tvaṣṭā was once abducted by Narakāsura. (Chapter 38, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva).

(v) Viśvakarmā also used to be called Tvaṣṭā. (Śloka 24, Chapter 100, Vana Parva).

(vi) The monkey called Nala was the son of Tvaṣṭā. (Śloka 41, Chapter 283, Vana Parva).

(vii) Tvaṣṭā presented Subrahmaṇya with two Pārṣadas named Cakra and Anucakra. (Śloka 40, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

TVAṢṬĀ II. A King of the family of Bharata. This Tvaṣṭā was the son of Bhauvana and father of Viraja. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TVAŚṬĀDHARA. One of the two sons of Śukrācārya who were deputed to do heinous acts of worship by Śukra. The other was Atri. (Śloka 37, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

U

U (उ). The letter 'u' means Śiva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

Ū.(ऊ) This letter means 'protection'. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

UCAKA. A King of the Solar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

UCATHYA. A muni in the line of the disciples of Vyāsa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

UCCAIŚŚRAVAS I.

1) Birth. A horse which emerged from water during the churning of the sea of Milk. (See under Kṣīrābdhimathana). Devendra grabbed it the moment he saw it, and thenceforth it became his vehicle. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 23, Verses 33-37).

2) Colour of the horse. Once, during a controversy, Vinatā, wife of Kaśyapa, contended that the colour of Uccaiśśravas was white, while another wife of Kaśyapa, Kadrū said that its tail was black in colour. It was decided to bet that she who got defeated in this controversy should become the slave of the winner. Because the serpents, the sons of Kadrū, cheated Vinatā, she had to become Kadrū's slave. (See under Vinatā). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 20).

3) Lakṣmīdevī became mare. Devī Bhāgavata relates a story of Mahālakṣmī becoming a mare on account of Uccaiśśravas. King Revanta, son of Sūrya and friend of Indra, once went to Vaikuṇṭha to pay his respects to Bhagavān Viṣṇu, riding on Uccaiśśravas. Mahālakṣmī, who was then with Viṣṇu was surprised at the arrival of Revanta. Seeing the scintillating form of Uccaiśśravas, her brother, Mahālakṣmi sat looking at the horse unmindful of all other things. (Mahālakṣmī and the horse were both born from the Sea of Milk and hence were sister and brother). Thus occupied Mahālakṣmī did not hear Mahāviṣṇu asking, "Who is this one who comes like a second Cupid ?" Angry at this Viṣṇu said—

"So much attracted by the horse, you have not answered me. Because you enjoy (Ramasi) so much your name in future will be Ramā. You will also become frivolous like an uncultured woman. You have never been constant. Because you felt so much attracted to this horse in my very presence, you will be born as a mare in the world of men."

According to this curse Mahālakṣmī had to be born as a mare in the world; the Hehaya dynasty had its origin from her. (See under Ekavīra). (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

UCCAIŚŚRAVAS II. A Mahārāja of the Pūru dynasty. He was one of the six sons of King Avikṣit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 53).

UCCHIKHA. A serpent born in the family of Takṣaka. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).

UCCHṚṄGA. One of the two attendants given to Skanda by Vindhya. The other was named Atiśṛṅga. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 49).

UDĀNAVĀYU. One of the five life-breaths. The five life-breaths are Prāṇa, Apāna, Samāna, Udāna and Vyāna.

UDAPĀNA TĪRTHA. A holy bath on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. It is said that Balabhadra Rāma, while going on a pilgrimage, had visited this holy bath. There is a story showing how this place became a holy bath. Long ago there was a hermit named Gautama, who had three sons called Ekata, Dvita and Trita. The father was much pleased at the dutiful and devotional character of his sons. One day he performed a sacrifice and went to heaven. Then the kings and the priests who were present for the sacrifice began to honour and respect Trita. Ekata and Dvita did not like this. The three brothers performed sacrifices and acquired a large number of cows. With these cows they started for the east. Trita walked before. Ekata and Dvita who were behind, made a consultation and drove the cows another way. Trita walked on in front, alone. On the bank of the Sarasvatī he saw a wolf and getting terrified, he fell into a well in which there was no water. Standing in the well, he imagined a creeper that was hanging to the well as 'Soma' (a herb used as oblation in sacrifice) and performed sacrifice, chanting the Vedas. His chanting was heard in heaven and Bṛhaspati and other gods came to him and asked him what boon he desired. Trita told them that he only wanted to be saved from the well. Immediately the river Sarasvatī flowed into the well and the waves began to swell. Standing on the waves he praised and glorified the gods. Then he returned home and cursed Ekata and Dvita and transmuted them into wolves. Trita said that their children would become monkeys and cattle. It happened so. The place where the Gods appeared before Trita, became famous and got the name Udapānatīrtha. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 36).

UDĀPEKṢĪ. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Vedāntin. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 59).

UDARĀKṢA. A warrior of Skanda Deva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 63).

UDARAŚĀṆḌILYA. A hermit of the Durbar of Indra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 31).

UDARKA. A minister of Mahiṣāsura. The ministry of Mahiṣāsura was very powerful and efficient. The brave and haughty Cikṣura was the war minister. Udarka was the general of the army. (See under Mahiṣāsura).

UDAYAGIRI I. The mountain of the rising. It is supposed by poets that the Sun and the Moon rise from this mountain.

UDAYAGIRI II. An ancient place of pilgrimage. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 93, that by conducting evening prayer and devotion at this place once, one could obtain the fruits of conducting evening prayer and meditation for twelve years continuously.

UDAYANA. A renowned king of the Candravaṁśa (Lunar dynasty).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha - Purūravas - Āyus-Nahuṣa - Yayāti - Pūru-Janamejaya-Prācinvān-Pravīra-Namasyu-Vītabhaya Śuṇḍu-Bahuvidha-Saṁyāti - Rahovādī - Raudrāśva - Matināra - Santurodha - Duṣyanta-Bharata-Hasti-Ajamīḍha-Ṛkṣa-Saṁvaraṇa-Kuru-Jahnu-Suratha - Vidūratha- Sārvabhauma-Jayatsena-Ravyaya-Bhāvuka-Cakroddhata-Devātithi-Ṛkṣa- Bhīma - Pratīpa-Śantanu-Vyāsa- Pāṇḍu - Arjuna - Abhimanyu - Parīkṣit Janamejaya-Śatānīka-Sahasrānīka-Udayana.

2) Birth. There was a city called Kauśāmbī situated in the middle of the famous kingdom known as Vatsa in North India. The palace of king Śatānīka, born of the family of Arjuna, was in Kauśāmbī. Viṣṇumatī was the queen of Śatānīka. She had been childless. One day while Śatānīka was hunting in the forest, he met with the hermit Śāṇḍilya, by whose blessings Viṣṇumatī conceived and gave birth to a son. That son was Sahasrānīka. When he came of age, Śatānīka left the country with his son and went to the heaven to help the gods in their battle with the Asuras, and he died there. Sahasrānīka became a mighty emperor. Once he got an invitation from Indra to go to heaven and help the gods to fight the Asuras. After having defeated the Asuras, one day, he was walking with Indra in the Nandana Park, when he saw the gods playing with their wives in the park. Immediately the unmarried king became thoughtful and Indra read correctly, the reason for the sudden change in the king and said to the king. "Oh King ! Don't be worried. A girl becoming you in every aspect, is born in the world. Her name is Mṛgāvatī."

Sahasrānīka was greatly pleased at this and he returned to the earth. In the chariot there were Tilottamā and the charioteer, with the king. The king who was deeply immersed in thinking about Mṛgāvatī, did not attend to the conversation of Tilottamā, who getting angry cursed him thus:-"May you be separated for fourteen years from the person whose thought has prevented you from attending to what I have been telling you."

The king married Mṛgāvatī. She became pregnant. One day she told the king about her desire to dip in a pond of blood. The king got a pond ready, filled with the juice of Lākṣā (a kind of wax, the boiled water of which will look like blood) and such other things. Mṛgāvatī began to dip and splash in the pond of blood. When she was dipping under the juice, taking her to be a large piece of flesh, an eagle took her from the pond and flew away. The king was overwhelmed with grief and fell down. Then the charioteer came down from heaven and informed the king of the curse of Tilottamā, and then he returned.

The eagle left Mṛgāvatī in the mount of the Rising Sun and flew away. She cried aloud. A huge snake neared her to swallow her. Then a divine person appeared there and saved her from the snake and vanished. Then a hermit-boy came there and asked the lonely woman, clad in only one garment, about her story and took her to the hermitage of the hermit Jamadagni who blessed her. After some days she gave birth to a son. At that time an unknown voice was heard saying "This boy would become the most renowned king Udayana and his son would become the supreme Lord of the Vidyādharas." Because he was born in the Udayādri (the mount of the Rising Sun) he got the name Udayana. The boy Udayana grew up in the hermitage.

3) Udayana to his father. The hermit Jamadagani who knew the past, present and the future performed all the rituals, necessary for a boy of Kṣatriya caste (kingly race) such as Caula, Upanayana etc. and gave him education in every branch of knowledge. Because of her love and regard for her son, Mṛgāvatī put on his arm a bangle with the name Sahasrānīka inscribed in it, which she had been wearing so long. One day, while Udayana was walking through the forest, he saw a snake-charmer catching a snake. He felt sorry for the snake. So he gave the bangle to the snake-charmer and set the snake free. When the snake charmer was gone, the snake told Udayana its story. That serpent was Vasunemi, the elder brother of Vāsuki. Out of gratitude the serpent gave Udayana the famous Lute Ghoṣavatī and betels and taught him the art of making garlands and marks on the forehead which would never fade.

The snake-charmer took the bangle to the capital for sale. Seeing the name of the king inscribed on it, the king's men took him before the king. He told the king everything. The king who had been suffering for the last fourteen years form the pangs of separation, started for the mount of the Rising Sun, without any loss of time. The hermit Jamadagni gave him his wife Mṛgāvatī and son Udayana. They all returned to Kauśāmbī.

4) The anointment of Udayana. Sahasrānīka anointed his son Udayana as the heir to his throne, and appointed Yaugandharāyaṇa, Rumaṇvān and Vasantaka, the sons of three ministers, as ministers of Udayana. At the time of the anointment there was a shower of flowers from the sky and an unknown voice said "With the help of these ministers Udayana would bring the whole of the earth under his control." After a time Sahasrānīka went to the Himālayas with his wife for penance.

5). Vāsavadattā became Udayana's wife. A daughter was born to the king of Ujjayinī. Her name was Vāsavadattā. Her father Caṇḍamahāsena decided to give her in marriage to Udayana the king of Vatsa. How to bring this to pass ? Caṇḍamahāsena and Udayana had been enemies. Finally he found out a way. It was to entrust Vāsavadattā to Udayana (who was a great teacher of music) for teaching her music. Ultimately he would fall in love with her and thus Udayana would become his son-in-law. This was the plan.

King Caṇḍamahāsena sent a messenger to Kauśāmbī. The messenger was sent back with a reply that, if his daughter was sent to Kauśāmbī, he would teach her music. Caṇḍamahāsena did not like this. So he decided to take Udayana a prisoner somehow or other. The king had an elephant called Naḍāgiri. He ordered for an artificial elephant to be made equal in size to Naḍāgiri, and placed some soldiers inside the elephant. The artificial elephant with soldiers inside it was taken to the great forest in the Vindhya mountain and placed there. The men of Udayana saw this elephant and reported it to the king. Udayana decided to see the huge elephant which had appeared in the Vindhya. Udayana went to the forest and saw the huge elephant standing at a distance. The king found out a plan to catch it. Playing mild notes on his lute, the king alone neared the elephant. As the night was drawing and as he was immersed in music, he did not understand that it was an artificial elephant. As the king was nearing the elephant it went on retreating, and thus got the king away from his men. Then the soldiers got out of the elephant, surrounded the king and took him a prisoner. Thus Udayana began to live in the palace of Caṇḍamahāsena. His work was to teach Vāsavadattā music.

The news reached Kauśāmbī. Yaugandharāyaṇa entrusted the affairs of the government to Rumaṇvān and started for Ujjayinī with Vasantaka. At Ujjayinī they got Yogeśvara, a Brahmarākṣasa as friend. According to his advice Yaugandharāyaṇa took the guise of a mad old man. Vasantaka adopted the guise of a sick man, suffering from pain in the stomach an uncouth figure to look at. They entered the city. The madness of Yaugandharāyaṇa was an entertainment to the people. The ladies of the court liked him much. Vāsavadattā invited the madman to the harem. Udayana instantly recognized the mad man. Vasantaka also got admittance to the palace. He told Vāsavadattā the story of Lohajaṅgha in an interesting way. (See under Lohajaṅgha) Vāsavadattā began to be drawn more and more towards Udayana. She seemed to have forgotten even about the fact that her father was an enemy of Udayana, who had been thinking seriously of means of escape from the palace. Vāsavadattā agreed to accompany him. Āṣāḍhaka got Bhadrāvatī, the elephant of Vāsavadattā, ready for the flight. In the night Udayana and his retinue got on the elephant Bhadrāvatī and fled from the palace. Kāñcanamālā the maid of Vāsavadattā also accompanied her mistress. When they had passed the Vindhya mountain the elephant Bhadrāvatī fell dead. When they all were standing around the dead elephant sadly, they heard an ethereal voice saying, "Oh King ! I am a Vidyādhara woman called Māyāvatī. I had been an elephant for so long. The son you are going to get, will also be helped by me. Your wife Vāsavadattā also, is a goddess, born as a woman purposely." Next day, all reached the palace of Udayana and the marriage of Udayana and Vāsavadattā took place shortly. Caṇḍamahāsena recognized that marriage.

6) Udayana's marriage with Padmāvatī. Udayana spent his days with Vāsavadattā in the harem. The ministers Yaugandharāyaṇa, Rumaṇvān, Vasantaka and others thought that the behaviour of the King was detrimental to the well-being of the country. They wanted to remove the King from the palace for a little while and to form an alliance with the powerful King of Magadha. By a marriage alliance all these could be achieved. The King of Magadha had a beautiful daughter called Padmāvatī. The ministers began to work with this end in view.

Once Yaugandharāyaṇa took Udayana to the forest of Lāvāṇaka and stayed there. It was reported to the King of Magadha that the King of Vatsa was drawing near to his kingdom. Fearing an attack from Udayana, the King of Magadha began to think of concluding a treaty with Vatsa. The King of Vatsa used to go for hunting everyday. One day he went to a distant place for hunting, and the minister went to the house of Vāsavadattā and informed her of their plans. Though it was not at all palatable to her, she gave her consent and agreed to help them as it was meant for the well-being of the King and the country. Accordingly, Yaugandharāyaṇa took the guise of an old Brahmin, Vāsavadattā that of a young Brahmin lady and Vasantaka that of a Brahmin celibate with only one eye. They went to the kingdom of Magadha. Rumaṇvān set fire to the house of Vāsavadattā and spread the rumour that Vāsavadattā and Vasantaka had been burnt to death. Yaugandharāyaṇa, Vāsavadattā and Vasantaka reached Magadha. They got into the capital and saw Padmāvatī sitting in the garden. The old Brahmin conversed with the princess for a while. She enquired about the young woman who was with him. The old Brahmin replied thus :—"She is my daughter Avantikā. Her husband has left the country. I request you to keep her with you till I find him out and bring him here. She may not like to be separated from her people. So let her brother, the celibate, also be here with her."

Padmāvatī took them with gladness and Yaugandharāyaṇa, bidding farewell, returned to the forest Lāvāṇaka. Avantikā and the Celibate lived in the palace with Padmāvatī. Vāsavadattā who had learned from Udayana the art of making garlands ans marks on the forehead which would not fade, had prepared them for Padmāvatī.

The King of Vatsa returned to the forest Lāvāṇaka and found the house of his wife burnt down to ashes. He fell unconscious when he heard that Vāsavadattā and Vasantaka had been burnt to death.

The spies of the King of Magadha who were in the forest of Lāvāṇaka, reported the rumour about the death of Vāsavadattā and Vasantaka to their King in Magadha, who wished to give his daughter Padmāvatī in marriage to Udayana. The marriage proposal was accepted by Udayana and wearing garlands and marks that would not fade Padmāvatī entered the wedding dais. Udayana married Padmāvatī. Yaugandharāyaṇa made the King of Magadha take an oath that he would go for no more aggression. Udayana and his people reached Kauśāmbī. On the way the King happened to see the mark on the forehead and the garland on the neck of Padmāvatī and asked her who had made them. Padmāvatī told the King the story of Avantikā. Udayana was definite that Avantikā was Vāsavadattā herself. Avantikā was brought before the King. Padmāvatī congratulated Vāsavadattā. Both of them loved each other and lived together as the loving wives of Udayana. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka).

7) Udayana gets a new throne. Once Udayana was sitting in the court-hall, when a Brahmin came there and made a complaint to the King that some cowherds had broken the legs of his son. The Brahmin said that a boy named Devasena sat on a stone in the forest and instantly he got kingly power. The leg of the Brahmin boy was broken by the friends of Devasena because he did not bow before Devasena.

When he heard the story, the minister Yaugandharāyaṇa said that that place must have some peculiarities. Accordingly the men of the King dug the place. He got a throne of gems. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka).

8) The son of Udayana. Vāsavadattā became pregnant and gave birth to a child. He was named Naravāhanadatta. Nārada granted him a boon that Naravāhanadatta would become the emperor of the Vidyādharas. (See under Naravāhanadatta).

The princess of Takṣaśilā named Kaliṅgasenā fell in love with Udayana and she came to Kauśāmbī. But no marriage took place. (See under Kaliṅgasenā). Naravāhanadatta, the son of Udayana, married Madanamañcukā who was the incarnation of Rati Devī (the wife of Madana). Udayana entrusted the country to his son and led a life of retirement with his wives. (Kathāsaritsāgara).

UDDĀLAKA I. A disciple called Āruṇi of the teacher Āyodhadhaumya. To know how Āruṇi got the name Uddālaka, see under Āyodhadhaumya.

It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 12 that this hermit Uddālaka was a prominent figure in the Durbar of Indra. Uddālaka had a son called Śvetaketu and a daughter called Sujātā. He gave his daughter Sujātā in marriage to his favourite disciple Kahoḍaka. The hermit Aṣṭāvakra was their son. See under Aṣṭāvakra. (M B. Vana Parva, Chapter 132). Once Uddālaka caused the river Sarasvatī to appear at the place of sacrifice. From that day onwards Sarasvatī got the name 'Manoramā' because when the thought came to his mind (manas) the river made its appearance. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 33). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 10, that Uddālaka expelled his son Śvetaketu from the house because the son was a hater of Brahmins.

UDDĀLAKA II. The story of another hermit of the name Uddālaka is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva. Chapter 71. This hermit is known as Uddālaki also. Once this hermit happened to forget that he had left flowers, food and his waterpot on the bank of the river and reaching his hermitage, he asked his son Nāciketa to fetch them from the bank of the river. When Nāciketa reached the bank of the river, those things had been washed down by the current. The son returned and reported the matter to his father. The father got angry and cursed his son to death. Seeing the son lying dead on darbha (mattress made of darbha grass) the hermit cried aloud. In that flow of tears life returned to the body and the son woke up as if from sleep. The father asked the son about the news of the realm of Yama (the god of death) and the son told the hermit the news about the world of the dead.

UDDAṆḌAŚĀSTRĪ. One of the eighteen and a half famous poets of Kerala. He was a Sanskrit poet. His native place was Lāṭapura on the bank of river Pālār in Toṇḍamaṇḍala in the Tamilnad. The name of his father was Śrī Kṛṣṇa and that of his mothter was Raṅgādevī. Poet Ulloor says that Śāstrī had another name Irugupanātha. He had a very good education. After having completed his education, he travelled through Āndhra, Karṇāṭaka, Kaliṅga, Cola, Kerala and many other countries and finally came to Kozhikode and visited the King Mānavikramamahārāja. At the instance of the king he composed the drama called Mallikāmārutam. Besides this we have obtained only the 'Kokilasandeśa' and some other single poems of Śāstrī. It is said that there is a thesis on dramas also. Śāstrī was not in the habit of respecting those who did not pay respect to him, however superior they might be. So some say that he was arrogant. A Malayāla Brahmin called Bhaṭṭatiri of Kākkaśśeri, rose against Śāstrī in Kerala.

UDDHAVA.

(1 General information. A Yādava. He was a friend and minister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 18, mention is made that Uddhava was present on the occasion of the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Draupadī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 11, that at a famous celebration held in the mountain of Raivata, Uddhava was present. (See under Subhadrā).

Uddhava was a disciple of Bṛhaspati, and a man of great intelligence. It was this Uddhava who brought the dowry of Subhadrā to Indraprastha, when Arjuna married her. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 30).

Once a king named Śālva besieged the city of Dvārakā. At that time Uddhava saved Dvārakā. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 15, Stanza 9).

2). The message carried by Uddhava. Kaṁsa sent Akrūra to Ambāḍi, and brought Śrī Kṛṣṇa to Mathurā. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁsa and made Ugrasena king, and stayed in the city of Mathurā for a time. At that time Śrī Kṛṣṇa sent Uddhava to Ambāḍi to know about the well-being of the people there. The moment Uddhava entered Ambāḍi, the Gopas and gopa women, (cowherds) Yaśodā and Nandagopa, all surrounded him to hear about Śrī Kṛṣṇa. They felt much pleased at knowing that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was getting on well. They sent through him many presents to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. He got all those presents into his chariot and took them to Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Mathurā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

3). The end. Śrī Kṛṣṇa informed Uddhava beforehand the fact that the Yādava dynasty was going to end. Uddhava felt grief and requested Śrī Kṛṣṇa to take him also to Vaikuṇṭha (the abode of Mahāviṣṇu). Śrī Kṛṣṇa taught Uddhava the doctrine that the body of man and such other things seen in the whole universe were nothing but mere delusion. At that time Uddhava asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa twentyone questions about Bandha and Mokṣa (Bondage and deliverance).

To all these questions Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave him satisfactory answers. (Bhāgavata Skandha 11).

Before the destruction of Dvārakā, the Yadus left the city. They went to Prabhāsatīrtha, a place on the sea coast and lived there. Uddhava who knew that the destruction was imminent, bade farewell to them and walked away alone. He was filled with a brightness. Śrī Kṛṣṇa did not stop him. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 3).

It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, Chapter 29, that Uddhava went to the hermitage of Badarikā and engaged himself in penance.

UDDĪPAKA. See under Pañcatantra.

UDĪCYA. One of the disciples of Vyāsa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

UDRAPĀRAKA. A serpent born in the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent fell in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 17).

UDVAHA I. A Kṣatriya king born from the family of Krodhavaśa, an asura. (M.,B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 64).

UDVAHA II. A part of air. It is believed that air or wind is the breath of Mahāviṣṇu. In the Purāṇas mention is made about 49 types of Maruts or winds. Seven breaths are important among them. They are: (1) Pravaha (2) Āvaha (3) Udvaha (4) Saṁvaha (5) Vivaha (6) Parīvaha and (7) Parāvaha. About Udvaha mention is made in Bhāṣā Bhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 329 thus:

"Which is the wind that takes water from the four oceans and gives it to the clouds? That ever-blowing great wind is Udvaha."

UDYOGAPARVA. A sub-section of Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

UGRA I. A military captain of Śūrapadmāsura, Chief of asuras. In the Vīramahendra Kāṇḍa of Skanda Purāṇa, two warriors, Ugra and Mayūra are reported to have attacked Indrapurī.

UGRA II. One of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 103). Bhīmasena killed him (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verses 34, 35).

UGRA III. A Yādava prince. The Pāṇḍavas sent to him also an invitation letter to help them in the war. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).

UGRA IV. A synonym of Lord Śiva. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 100).

UGRA V. Son of Kavi, the Prajāpati. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 133).

UGRA VI. See under Varṇa.

UGRADAṀṢṬRĪ. A daughter of Mahāmeru. Merudevī had nine daughters, Meru, Pratirūpā, Ugradaṁṣṭrī Latā, Ramyā, Śyāmā, Nārī, Bhadrā and Devavīthī. They were wedded by the sons of a king named Agnīdhra. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

UGRAKA. A serpent. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

UGRAKARMĀ I. King of Śālva. Bhīmasena killed him. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 41).

UGRAKARMĀ II. Military Chief of the Kekaya prince, Viśoka. Karṇa killed him. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 8, Verses 4, 5).

UGRARAVAS. A muni. He killed one Duṣpaṇya (Setumāhātmya). Duṣpaṇya was the last son of a merchant in Pāṭalīputra. He killed many children for sport and his father sent him away. He went to the forest and there drowned to death a muni called Ugraravas, who was engaged in tapas. Ugraravas cursed him to death by drowning and his soul to wander about as a devil. The curse came true. (Setumāhātmya).

UGRASENA I. King Ugrasena, father of Kaṁsa.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Āyus - Nahuṣa - Yayāti-Yadu-Sahasrajit-Śatajit-Hehaya-Dharma-Kunti-(Kuṇi)-Bhadrasena - Dhanaka - Kṛtavīrya - Kārttavīryārjuna-Madhu-Vṛṣṇi-Yudhājit-Śini - Satyaka - Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna)-Yaya-Kuṇi-Anamitra- Pṛśni-Citraratha-Kukūra Vahni - Vilomā - Kapotalomā - Tumburu - Dundubhi-Daridra-Vasu-Nāhuka-Āhuka-Ugrasena-Kaṁsa.

2) Ugrasena became king. Ugrasena became king of Mathurāpurī. His Kingship was not a hereditary acquisition. There is a story behind it. In olden days, in the plateau of Kālindī there was a famous place called Madhuvana. The place was called so because it was the abode of an Asura named Madhu. Madhu had a son, Lavaṇa. Śatrughna killed him as he was a very troublesome fellow and a thorn on the side of the Devas. Śatrughna then established a beautiful kingdom there and ruled it. He named it Mathurā. After the death of Śatrughna his two sons ruled Mathurā. Then, when the Solar dynasty came to its end, Mathurā came under the Yādavas. A Yādava king called Śūrasena ruled over the kingdom. Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the son of Śūrasena. After the death of his father Vasudeva took up the profession of herding cows, and therefore Ugrasena, another king of the Yādava dynasty had to become king of Mathurā. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

3) Ugrasena and Kaṁsa. There is a common belief that Kaṁsa was the son of Ugrasena. But, the Bhāgavata relates the following to the effect that Kaṁsa was born to a Gandharva called Dramila of Ugrasena's wife.

When once Ugrasena's wife was in her monthly periods, she walked in the forest with her companions. A Gandharva called Dramila saw her then, felt attracted by her and made her pregnant. Angered at this, she cursed Dramila thus: "Since you have procreated a son in me, while I am in my periods this son will be killed by a boy born in my husband's family." Kaṁsa was the son born to her in the above manner. Kaṁsa ascended the throne after putting Ugrasena in prison. According to the curse of Ugrasena's wife, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born in Ugrasena's family and he killed Kaṁsa. Nārada had informed Kaṁsa of the Dramila interlude. Kaṁsa told this story secretly to Akrūra when the latter was deputed by him to invite Kṛṣṇa to the dhanur yajña. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

The name Āhuka. Genealogy states that Ugrasena was the son of Āhuka. But, in certain contexts Ugrasena is called Āhuka also. "Afterwards we made Āhuka-Ugrasena King......" (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 39).

5) Ugrasena imprisoned. Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was Ugrasena's minister. Kaṁsa, when he attained majority imprisoned Ugrasena and became himself king. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 22).

6) Ugrasena regained kingdom. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁsa with the permission of Ugrasena and made him king again. During the reign of Ugrasena, Jarāsandha and Śālva attacked Mathurāpurī. (See under Kṛṣṇa).

7) Ugrasena and the iron rod. While Ugrasena was ruling the Kingdom, the sages Viśvāmitra, Nārada and Kañja once came to Dvārakā. To insult the sages, the Yādavas brought before them, Sāmba dressed as a pregnant woman. The Yādavas told the sages that she was Babhru's wife, and wanted to be told whether the child she delivered would be male or female. The sages understood their evil mentality, and prophesied that Sāmba would deliver an iron rod fierce enough to annihilate the whole Yādava race. According to the prophecy the next day Sāmba delivered an iron rod. The Yādavas imparted the news to Ugrasena, who got the iron rod reduced to powder and deposited the powder in the sea. He also enforced prohibition of liquor in the country. (To know how the powder of the rod ruined the Yādava dynasty see under Kṛṣṇa). (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 1).

8) After death. After his death, Ugrasena joined the Viśvadevatās. Bhūriśravas, Śala, Bhūri, Kaṁsa-Ugrasena, Vasudeva, Uttara with his brother Śaṅkha—these kings (after death) joined the company of Viśvadevatās. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verses 16, 17).

UGRASENA II. A brother of King Janamejaya. He, along with his two brothers thrashed the son of Saramā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 1 and 2).

UGRASENA III. Son of Kaśyapa by his wife Muni. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 42). He was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 52). He was also present to witness the fight between Arjuna and Kṛpācārya at the Virāṭa city. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verses 11 and 12).

UGRASENA IV. A king who was Svarbhānu, the asura, reborn. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 12 and 13).

UGRASENA V. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He is also called Citrasena. (M.B. Ādi Parva. Chapter 67, Verse 100). This Ugrasena was killed by Bhīma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 137).

UGRASENA VI. Son of Parīkṣit, king of the Lunar dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 52-54).

UGRAŚRAVAS I. Son of Muni Lomaharṣa. He is the Sūta who told Purāṇic stories to the munis at Naimiṣāraṇya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 1).

UGRAŚRAVAS II. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 100, and Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 19).

UGRAŚRAVAS III. Husband of Śīlavatī. (See under Atri, Para 7).

UGRATAPAS. Son of Sutapas, a muni of the Bhṛgu dynasty. Once he concentrated his mind and thoughts on Śrī Kṛṣṇa immersed in love of the Gopīs with the result that he was born as daughter of Sunandā, the Gopī in Ambāḍi, and served Kṛṣṇa. (Padma Purāṇa).

UGRATEJAS I. A synonym of Lord Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 5).

UGRATEJAS II. A serpent. It welcomed Balabhadrarāma once. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

UGRATĪRTHA. A Kṣatriya king, who was Krodhavaśa, the asura, reborn. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 65).

UGRĀYUDHA I. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99). He was present at the wedding of Pāñcālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185).

UGRĀYUDHA II. A Pāñcāla king and partisan of the Pāṇḍavas. Karṇa wounded him in war. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 44).

UGRĀYUDHA III. A powerful person, who fought on the Kaurava side. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 37).

UGRĀYUDHA IV. An emperor killed by Bhīṣma. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10).

UGRODHA. A king of the lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

UJJAYA. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. They were Brahmavādins. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

UJJĀNAKA. The Āśrama of Ārṣṭiṣeṇamaharṣi was situated near Mount Gandhamādana in front of Mānasa lake. Ujjānaka was a lake near the āśrama. A dip in the waters of the lake, it was believed, would wash off all sins. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 35).

UJJAPĀLAKA. A desert near the āśrama of Uttaṅka muni. Dhundhu, offspring of the asuras, Madhu and Kaiṭabha, lived in this desert. (See under Dhundhu).

UJJAYANTAPARVATA. A mountain near the Piṇḍāraka temple in Saurāṣṭra. It is believed to possess wonderful siddhis. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 21).

UJJAYINĪ. One of the seven very sacred places in ancient India. Its ancient name was Avantī. The seven sacred cities are: Ayodhyā, Mathurā, Māyā, Kāśī. Kāñcī, Avantikā, and Dvāravatī. The famous Mahākāla temple described by Kālidāsa was on the banks of the river Śiprā flowing through Ujjayinī. Jyotirliṅga of Śiva is the presiding deity in the temple. There is also a holy bathing ghat called Koṭitīrtha here. A bath in it is as beneficial as an Aśvamedha yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

UKTHA. Agni, the father of Parāvāṇī. This agni is saluted with three kinds of Uktha hymns. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 25).

UKTHA (M). A particular portion of Sāmaveda.

ULŪKA I. The son of Śakuni. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 25). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 182, Stanza 22, that Ulūka was present at the Svayaṁvara (the Bride choosing a husband) of Draupadī. In the Bhārata Battle Ulūka was sent as a messenger to the camp of the Pāṇḍavas by Duryodhana. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 161). After that he returned to Duryodhana with the message of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 163). He combated with the King of Cedi on the first day of the battle. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45). After that Sahadeva attacked Ulūka. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 5). Arjuna defeated Ulūka. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 171, Stanza 40). After the death of the teacher Droṇa, Ulūka fled from the battle-field. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Stanza 14). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanzas 9 to 11, that Ulūka defeated Yuyutsu. Next fight was between Sahadeva and Ulūka in which Sahadeva killed Ulūka. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 28, Stanzas 32 and 33). The following are the synonyms of Ulūka, given in the Mahābhārata :—Śākuni, Kaitaka, Saubalyasuta and Kaitavya.

ULŪKA II. A Yakṣa (a demi-god). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 32, that Garuḍa and this Yakṣa fought with each other.

ULŪKA III. A son of Viśvāmitra. He became a hermit. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 51). It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 11, that this Ulūka visited Bhīṣma on his Bed of arrows.

ULŪKADŪTĀGAMANAPARVA. A sub-section of a Parva in the Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).

ULŪKĀŚRAMA. A holy place. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 26).

ULŪPĪ. Wife of Arjuna.

1) How she became the wife of Arjuna. Once Arjuna happened to enter the palace in which Dharmaputra was living with Pāñcālī. As a result, Arjuna had to go on a pilgrimage for a year. (See under Irāvān). Arjuna reached Gaṅgādvāra. When he got down into the river Gaṅgā, he saw Ulūpī the daughter of Nāgarāja (King of the serpents). He asked her a few questions. She told him thus :—"I am the daughter of the serpent Kauravya of the family of Airāvata. I came to bathe in the river and when I saw you I grew amorous." Arjuna told her that Dharmaputra had imposed on him celibacy for twelve months and that it was not right to marry in the meantime. Ulūpī argued with Arjuna and convinced him that it was not wrong to marry her. Arjuna married her. A son named Irāvān was born to her.

2) How Ulūpī caused Arjuna to be killed and how he was brought to life again. (See paras 28 and 29 under Arjuna).

3) The end of Ulūpī. After having brought Arjuna back to life, Ulūpī reached Hastināpura with Babhruvāhana and Citrāṅgadā. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 87). As soon as she reached there she greeted Kuntī, Draupadī and Subhadrā. She gave them various kinds of presents. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter I, Stanza 23 that Ulūpī served Gāndhārī at one time. In Mahābhārata, Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 46 it is mentioned that Ulūpī was greatly loved by the subjects. When the Pāṇḍavas began the 'great departure' (Mahāprasthāna) Ulūpī entered the River Ganges. Citrāṅgadā went to Maṇalūrapura.

"Ulūpi, the daughter of the serpent Kauravya, jumped into the Ganges and to Maṇalūrapura, went Citrāṅgadā." (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Mahāprasthānika Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 27).

4) The other names of Ulūpī. Bhujagātmajā, Bhujagendrakanyakā, Bhujagottamā. Kauravī, Kauravyaduhitā, Kauravyakulanandinī, Pannaganandinī, Pannagasutā, Pannagātmajā, Pannageśvarakanyā, Pannagī, Uragātmajā. These are the synonyms used in the Mahābhārata for Ulūpī.

ULŪTA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 54).

UMĀ. Pārvatī. (For details see under Pārvatī).

UMLOCĀ. A celestial woman. Umlocā with other celestial women participated in the birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 65).

UÑCHAVṚTTI. A brahmin. His story is told as follows in Jaimini Aśvamedha Parva.

This poor brahmin who lived by begging got one day some food grain powder. After offering a portion of it to Agni and Brahmins, he divided the balance equally between the children. Then he sat down to take his own food when Dharmadeva, disguised as a brahmin, appeared and demanded food. Uñchavṛtti gave all his food to the guest. Since that did not satisfy the guest, the sons also gave their shares of the food to him. Greatly pleased at the noble act of Uñchavṛtti, Dharmadeva took the brahmin family with him to Svargaloka. One day a few particles of the foodgrain powder which remained with the brahmin fell on the earth. A mongoose came and played on that ground. That part of his body which got smeared with the food-grain powder became golden in colour. Though the mongoose went to the yajña ground of Dharmadeva and repeated the above process there, the remaining portion of its body did not become golden.

UṆḌRA (M) (UṬRAM). A place in South India. Sahadeva subjugated this place. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 71). People of Uṇḍram were present at the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira with presents. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 22).

UNMADĀ. A celestial woman.

1) Became a woman by the curse of Uravaśī. Haṁsa, the King of Gandharvas (semi-gods) had a general of the army called Durmada. He was a dangler. He had an eye on Urvaśī. She was the wife of Purūravas a famous King. On several occasions Durmada followed Urvaśī, with lustful desire. He had expressed his amour for her on several occasions. But Urvaśī did not pay any heed to his words.

One day Purūravas and Urvaśī were present in the durbar of Indra. Purūravas and Urvaśī had signalled a rendezvous for that night at the corner of the Nandana Park. Durmada understood this. He called a celestial woman named Unmadā to his side. They made a plan and accordingly Unmadā disguised herself as Urvaśī and Durmada took the guise of Purūravas and both of them entered Nandana park. Purūravas went to Unmadā and conjugated with her. In the same way Urvaśī received Durmada, mistaking him for Purūravas. After the conjugation Durmada laughed loud as if he had played a trick on Urvaśī. Urvaśī understood everything. Purūravas also arrived there. Urvaśī cursed Durmada to take birth in the earth as a Rākṣasa and cursed Unmadā to be born in the earth as the daughter of a King and she said that at that time she would love one man and become the wife of another man. The aggrieved Durmada and Unmadā prayed for liberation from the curse. Urvaśī gave them liberation thus :—"This Durmada will be born as the son of Unmadā. Seeing the death of her husband and son, she would jump into fire. After that she will enter heaven. Durmada will be killed by the sword of an enemy and will obtain heaven." According to this curse Durmada was born as the son of Dīrghajaṅgha, the emperor of Hiraṇyapura, under the name Piṅgākṣa and Unmadā was born as the daughter of the King of Videha. Her name was Hariṇī (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

2) The marriage and death of Hariṇī. Hariṇī grew up to be a young woman. Once Piṅgākṣa growing lustful took Hariṇī and went through the sky. She cried aloud for a long time. Piṅgākṣa, the asura, left her in a wild forest. At that time a King named Vasumanas came by that way hunting. He killed Piṅgākṣa and then having heard the story of Hariṇī got her on the horse called Jīmūta and sent her to Videha (Mithilā). Her father was much pleased at getting her back. He wanted to give her in marriage to Vasumanas. The date of the marriage was fixed. Invitations were sent to many Kings. Among them there was a king named Bhadraśreṇya, who took her by force and went away. There was a fierce battle between the two Kings, Bhadraśreṇya and Vasumanas and Vasumanas was defeated. Seeing this Divodāsa, the King of Kāśī, attacked Bhadraśreṇya. Though Divodāsa defeated Bhadraśreṇya, he did not like to harm the beaten King. So he returned to his kingdom. Bhadraśreṇya took Hariṇī to his palace and married her. A son was born to her and he was named Durmada. This was the same Durmada who had taken birth and died as Piṅgākṣa and who had been born again as the son of Hariṇī. This Durmada took by force the daughter of his uncle called Citrāṅgī and a child was born to them. Bhadraśreṇya again engaged in a battle with Divodāsa, the King of Kāśī, and was defeated. Then his son Durmada got into the battlefield and he also was defeated.

When all this news reached Vasumanas, the King of Ayodhyā, he became jealous of Bhadraśreṇya. A battle was fought between them in which Vasumanas was defeated. But a fierce battle was fought again in which Bhadraśreṇya and his son Durmada were killed. Durmada obtained heaven. Stricken with grief at the death of her husband and son, Hariṇī got into fire and went to heaven. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

UNMĀDINĪ. A beautiful woman. She was the daughter of a Vaiśya in the city of Śrāvastī. He went to the King Devasena and requested him to marry his daughter. Because of the interference of his favourites, the King did not marry her. The King's general married her. Once the King happened to see her by chance. When he saw how beautiful she was, he felt sorry that he did not marry her. From that day onwards the King grew morbidly torpid and finally died.

This story was told by Yaugandharāyaṇa, minister of Udayana, the King of Vatsa. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka; Taraṅga 1).

UNMĀTHA I. Yama (Kāla) presented Skandadeva with two attendants. One was Unmātha and the other Pramātha. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 30).

UNMĀTHA II. An attendant presented to Skandadeva by Pārvatī. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 51).

UNMATTA. A warrior of a class of Rākṣasas (giants). In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 10, it is mentioned that this warrior died in the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa. Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:—Brahmā—Heti—Vidyutkeśa—Sukeśa—Mālyavān—Unmatta.

Vidyutkeśa was born to Heti, the son of Brahmā by his wife Bhayā; Sukeśa was born to Vidyutkeśa by his wife Sālakaṭaṅkā and Mālī, Sumālī and Mālyavān were born to Sukeśa of his wife Devavatī, and to Mālyavān by his wife Śundarī, seven sons named Vajramuṣṭi, Virūpākṣa, Durmukha, Suptaghna, Yajñakośa, Matta and Unmatta and a daughter named Nalā were born. Prahasta, Akampana, Vikaṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa and some more Rākṣasas were the sons of Sumālī, brother of Mālyavān. Kaikasī, the mother of Rāvaṇa, was the sister of Prahasta.

UNMUCA. A hermit of south Bhārata. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 28.

UPABARHAṆA. See the 2nd para under Nārada.

UPACĀRA (Hospitality). They are sixteen in number. (Things to be offered to the guest). They are called Ṣoḍaśopacāras. They are given below :—(1) Āsana (seat) (2) Pādya (water to wash feet (3) Arghya (water to drink) (4) Snānīya (bath) (5) Anulepana (ashes or other fragrant things for besmearing) (6) Dhūpa (smoke) (7) Dīpa (light) (8) Naivedya (food) (9) Tāmbūla (Betel) (10) Śītalajala (cool drinks) (11) Vasana (clothing) (12) Bhūṣaṇa (ornaments) (13) Mālya (garland) (14) Gandha (sweet-smelling things) (15) Ācamanīyaka (water to rinse mouth) (16) Sutalpa (Good bed).

These are the sixteen offerings that we have to give to our guests.

UPACITRA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 95). In the Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136 Stanza 22 it is mentioned that he was killed by Bhīmasena.

UPADEVA. A King of the Pūru dynasty.

UPAGĀHA. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Brahmavādin. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 56).

UPAGIRI. A hilly place in North Bhārata. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 3).

UPAGUPTA. A King of the Candravaṁśa (Lunar dynasty). (See under Genealogy).

UPAJALĀ. A river. In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 31, it is mentioned that by bathing in this river the King Uśīnara got power and position higher than that of Indra.

UPAKĪCAKAS. Kīcaka, the brother-in-law of King Virāṭa, had one hundred and five brothers. They are called Upakīcakas. Kīcaka and the Upakīcakas were born of a portion of Kālakeya an asura. At the palace of Virāṭa, Kīcaka harassed Pāñcālī and was killed in the night by Bhīma. (See under Kīcaka). Hearing about the death of Kīcaka, the hundred and five Upakīcakas came there and decided to burn Pāñcālī also, because they thought she was the cause of the death of their elder brother. They bound and carried her to the cremation ground. Hearing her loud cry, Bhīma jumped over the wall and ran to the cremation ground. He uprooted a tree, killed all the hundred and five Upakīcakas and brought Pāñcālī to the palace. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 23).

UPAKOŚĀ. The daughter of the teacher Upavarṣa. (See under Vararuci).

UPAKOSALA. See under Satyakāma.

UPAKṚṢṆAKA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 57).

UPAMANYU I. A dutiful disciple of the teacher Ayodhadhaumya. This teacher had three disciples of prominence. They were Āruṇi, Upamanyu and Veda,

To know how Upamanyu was put to test by the teacher see under Ayodhadhaumya.

UPAMANYU II. In the Kṛtayuga, there lived a hermit named Vyāghrapāda who had two sons. They were called Upamanyu and Dhaumya. Some learned men are of opinion that Upamanyu the son of Vyāghrapāda and Upamanyu the disciple of Ayodhadhaumya, were one and the same. Once Upamanyu visited another hermitage along with his father. He happened to drink the milk of the cow there. After that they returned to their own hermitage, Upamanyu went to his mother and asked her to make milk pudding for him. But the mother felt very sorry because there was no milk. At last she mixed flour in water and made pudding and gave it to him. Upamanyu did not accept it. His mother told him that there was no way to get milk and that men could get wealth, crops etc. only by the grace of Śiva. Upamanyu who was of a wilful nature did penance with meditation and contemplation on Śiva. Finally Śiva appeared before him in the shape of Indra and told him to ask for his boon. Upamanyu boldly replied that he wanted no boon from anybody else except Śiva. Śiva made his appearance in his own form and made Upamanyu a deva (God).

Upamanyu said all these things when he talked with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14).

In the Book "Our hermits", written by Rāmasvāmi Śāstrī in Tamil, it is mentioned that Upamanyu had written a book "Śiva bhaktavilāsa" in which biographies of devotees of Śiva of great attainments are given.

UPAMANYU III. In the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa we come across another Upamanyu as the son of a hermit named Sutapas. Upamanyu reached the hermitage of Kaśyapa, with the idea of marrying Sumati, the daughter of Kaśyapa and the elder sister of Garuḍa. Nobody liked the idea of giving Sumati in marriage to that old man. The hermit got angry at this and cursed Kaśyapa that if he gave his daughter in marriage to any Brāhmaṇa his head would break into a hundred pieces. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

UPANANDA I. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 19).

UPANANDA II. A serpent. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 12).

UPANANDA III. A warrior of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

UPANIṢAD. The four Vedas are Ṛk, Yajus, Sāma and Atharva. Each of these four has a Brāhmaṇa (a treatise relating to prayer and sacrificial ceremony). Next come the Āraṇyakas (forest texts—writings meant for the forest-dwelling hermit) as appendices to the Brāhmaṇas. Then come the Upaniṣads as appendices to the Āraṇyakas. These four classes of literary works (the Vedas, the Brāhmaṇas, the Āraṇyakas and the Upaniṣads) constitute the Vedic literature proper. The Āraṇyakas and the Upaniṣads are inseparably connected with each other. The Upaniṣads are called Vedāntas (the end of the Vedas). The bulk of these Vedāntas belong to different periods anterior to the Later Vedic Period. The students begin the study of Upaniṣads only after having completed the study of the Mantras (Vedic hymns) and the Brāhmaṇas (the ritual).

The meaning of the word 'Upaniṣad' is that which is most near. Upa = near. ni = most. sad = exist. (or sit). The Upaniṣads can be called the Jñānakāṇḍa of the Vedas. They describe the nature of Brahman. The figure of the supreme Spirit (Brahman) exists in the Upaniṣads. Apparently the Upaniṣads are explanations of the mantras, but they are concerned more with the allegorical significations and the mystic meanings of the tattvas or essence, of the origin of life, the world, the soul, God etc. The Upaniṣads are the basis of the Ṣaḍ-darśanas, the six systems of philosophy. There are a large number of Upaniṣads. The most important among them are 108 in number.

UPAPĀTAKA (UPAPĀPA) (Minor sins). In accordance with the Rāṣtramīmāṁsā (political philosophy) of Ancient India, crimes were divided into two types. They were called Upapātakas (minor crimes) and Pātakas (major crimes). To know about major crimes (Pātakas) see under Pāpa (sin). Upapātakas are given below:—Cow-slaughter; sacrificing by one who is unworthy to perform it; seducing another man's wife; forsaking one's father, mother and teacher; forsaking self-study, agni (fire) and son; becoming Parivettā (one who gets married before one's elder brother is married.) Younger brother finishing education before the elder; giving an unmarried girl to Parivitti or Parivettā; performing sacrifice by a parivitti or a parivettā; slandering an unmarried girl; Living on the interest of money that is lent; violating one's vow; selling pond, garden, wife or son; becoming an outcaste; forsaking relatives; Teaching the Vedas after receiving remuneration; selling things which should not be sold; working in mines; working with big machinery; destroying medicinal herbs; living by women; to impede rites; cut down fresh trees (not dried) for fire-wood; kidnapping women; mingling with slanderers of women; selfish activities; eating forbidden rice; not keeping Sacrificial fire; theft; not repaying loan; learning forbidden sciences; doing things which are bad and will cause grief to others; stealing of base metals, grains and cows; contact with drunken women; killing women, Śūdra, Vaiśya and Kṣatriya and becoming an infidel are all Upapātakas.

Causing grief to a Brahmin; inhaling the smell of liquor and other prohibited things; resorting to tricks or deceit and engaging in pederasty are sins which would make one an outcaste.

Slaughter of dog, donkey, camel, lion, sheep, jungle-goat, fish, serpent and mungoose are sins of a mixed character.

Receiving money from the despicable; buying and selling; serving a śūdra; telling a lie; acting so as to render oneself unworthy; killing worms and birds; eating food along with liquor; stealing fruits, flowers and butea; and becoming a coward are also sins.

UPAPLAVYA. A minor city in the country of Virāṭa. This minor city stood near the capital city of Virāṭa Kingdom. After their incognito-life, the Pāṇḍavas are said to have lived in the city of Upaplavya. (M.B Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 14).

UPAPURĀṆAS. See under Purāṇa.

UPARICARAVASU.

Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Atri— Candra— Budha — Purūravas— Āyus— Nahuṣa —Yayāti—Pūru—Janamejaya — Prācinvān — Pravīra Namasyu—Vītabhaya—Śuṇḍu—Bahuvidha — Saṁyāti —Rahovādī — Raudrāśva — Matināra — Santurodha —Duṣyanta — Bharata — Suhotra — Suhotā — Gala —Garda—Suketu-Bṛhatkṣetra-Hasti- Ajamīḍha - Ṛkṣa-Saṁvaraṇa -Kuru-Sudhanvā - Sugotra - Cyavana-Kṛti-Uparicaravasu.

2) How he got the name Uparicaravasu. Once Vasu built a hermitage and began to perform penance in accordance with the advice of Indra. When the penance became too severe Indra appeared and gave him an aerial chariot. Since then Vasu used to travel through air in the chariot. So he got the name 'Uparicaravasu' (Vasu, who travels above). (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 63).

3). Vasu and Indra festival. Indra gave Vasu a garland (Vaijayantīmālā) which would never fade, and gave a boon that, so long as he wore that garland, he would not receive any wound. He was given a bamboo stick (Veṇudaṇḍa) and was instructed to fix that rod on the earth and celebrate the festival of Indra. Vasu celebrated the festival of Indra and from that day onwards the festival of Indra came to be celebrated in the world. (See under Indrotsava).

4). The sons of Vasu. Five sons named Bṛhadratha, Kuśāmba (Maṇivāhana), Mavella, Yadu and Rājanya were born to him.

5). Kicking and splitting Kolāhala. The river Śuktimatī flowed through the capital city of Vasu. Once the great hill Kolāhala grew amorous of Śuktimatī and caught hold of her. Uparicaravasu got angry at this and kicked the mountain which was split into two and Śuktimatī flowed out of the gap. Still two children were born to the great hill by Śuktimatī. The river was pleased at the freedom accorded by the king and placed the two children at the feet of the king. They grew up. The son became general of the army and the daughter Girikā became the wife of the king. (M. B. Ādi Parva Chapter 63).

6). Vasu goes ahunting. One day the king decided to go to hunt. On the same day his wife had her monthly course. Still without changing his programme he started for the forest. Even after entering the forest the thought of his wife lingered in his mind. The forest was in full bloom as it was Spring. Seeing this the king grew amorous and sat under a tree. A mild breeze was blowing. Instantly the king had seminal flow. He collected the semen in the leaf of a tree and sent it to the queen through an eagle. Thinking that to be some food, another eagle got near and a quarrel arose. The semen fell in the river Yamunā. A fish named Adrikā swallowed it. (See under Adrikā). A fisherman caught that fish. He got a male child and a female child from the stomach of the fish. That girl is the famous Satyavatī Matsyagandhā who became the queen of Śantanu. (See under Satyavatī). The fisherman gave the boy he got from the fish to king Uparicaravasu. (M. B. Ādi Parva Chapter 62).

7). Other information.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 20, that Uparicaravasu was famous as a member of the council of Yama.

He was a friend of Indra, a devotee of Viṣṇu and a righteous and diligent man who loved and esteemed his father. Because of the grace of Śrī Nārāyaṇa, he secured an empire. He consecrated everything before god. Once Indra gave him half of his seat. (M. B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 355). Because of the grace of Bhagavān (Lord), Garuḍa made him a traveller of the sky. (M. B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 37).

(iii). In Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 38, it is mentioned that finally Uparicaravasu entered the world of Brahmā.

(iv). Once a controversy arose between Indra and the hermits, whether cow-slaughter during sacrifices, was desirable. At this time Uparicaravasu happened to come there. As he was a man of truth, he was asked to make a decision. Uparicaravasu stood on the side of Indra and gave his opinion in favour of slaughter. The hermits who were against cow-slaughter got angry and cursed Uparicaravasu to go down to the world of Pātāla (netherworld). (Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 152).

This story is seen with slight difference in Mahābhārata Śānti Parva, Chapters 322-324.

UPAŚLOKA. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Sairandhrī. He learned all sciences and Philosophies and finally became a follower of the Sāṁkhya-Yoga cult. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

UPAŚRUTI. The patron-goddess of Uttarāyaṇa (The sun's progress towards North in the former half of the year). In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 166 mention is made of how this goddess made it possible for Indrāṇī to see Indra through the holes of a stalk of lotus. It was by the help of Upaśruti that Śacīdevī and Indra met together. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 14, Stanzas 12 and 13).

UPATYAKĀ. A country in Bhārata. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 55).

UPAVARṢA. The younger brother of the Teacher Varṣa. He also was a teacher. For further information see under Vararuci.

UPAVĀSA. Upavāsa means going back from sin and leading a good life. (Upā (varta) =go back and Vāsa= A life). All actions which are not good, must be relinquished. Those who observe Upavāsa should abstain from using flesh, Maśūra (pulse), caṇaka (a kind of gram), Varaku (a kind of grain), green leaves prepared), honey, rice etc. and from contact with women. He should not wear flowers, ornaments, or fashionable dress; should not inhale fragrant smoke, and fragrance of any sort. Cleaning the teeth and using collyrium also are prohibited. Instead of cleaning the teeth in the morning Pañcagavya (Milk, curd, ghee, urine and dung of cow) should be taken in. Drinking water several times, using betel leaves, sleeping in the day time and sexual act also should be avoided. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 175).

UPAVEṆĀ. A river. This river is considered to be the mother of Agni (fire). Some are of opinion that this river is Kṛṣṇaveṇā a tributary of the great river Kṛṣṇā (R.Kistna) of South India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Stanza 14).

UPAVĪTA. The sacred string or Uttarīya. The twice-born (the three upper castes) wear this. When it is worn over the left shoulder and under the right arm it is called Upavīta, when it is worn over the right shoulder and under the left arm it is called Prācīnāvīta and if it is worn around the neck as a garland it is called Nivīta. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 2, Stanza 63).

UPĀVṚTTA (M) A country in Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 84).

UPĀYA (S). See under Caturupāya.

UPAYĀJA. Brother of the hermit Yāja. Both of them lived on the banks of the Gaṅgā. Dhṛṣṭadyumna and Pāñcālī were born to the King Drupada of Pāñcāla as the fruit of the sacrifices performed by these hermits. The story is given below:

The famous teacher Droṇa was the son of the hermit Bharadvāja, who was a friend of the King Pṛṣata of Pāñcāla. So King Pṛṣata sent his son Drupada to the hermitage of Bharadvāja for education. Thus Droṇa and Drupada were fellow students.

After completing his education Drupada became King of Pāñcāla. At that time the teacher Droṇa once visited the palace of the King. But Drupada did not duly receive his former classmate. Droṇa got angry at this and went to Hastināpura and became the teacher of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. As a remuneration for teaching them Droṇa demanded that Arjuna should bind Drupada and bring him before him. Arjuna did so. Drupada gave Droṇa a portion of his kingdom and got his liberty. From that day onwards Drupada wished for a son who would take revenge on Droṇa, and requested the hermit Upayāja to perform a sacrifice for getting a son. At first the hermit refused. The King served the hermit for a year. The hermit was pleased and asked the King to invite Yāja for the sacrifice. The King did as he was told and Yāja and Upayāja came to Pāñcāla and performed the sacrifice for getting a son. From the sacrificial dais Dhṛṣṭadyumna and Pāñcālī were born. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 166 and Sabhā Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 45).

UPENDRA. A synonym of Viṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu once took birth by Aditi the wife of Kaśyapaprajāpati. In that birth Mahāviṣṇu had the name Upendra. He was known as Vāmana too. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

UPENDRĀ. A river. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 27).

UPENDRABALA. Son of a minister of the King named Śrī Datta. (See under Śrī Datta).

URAGA. A class of serpents. Ten daughters were born to Krodhavaśā wife of Kaśyapa. The Uragas were born from the daughter Kadrū and the nāgas were born from the daughter Surasā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

ŪRDHVABĀHU. A son of Vasiṣṭha. His mother was Ūrjjā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, that this Ūrdhvabāhu did penance in South India.

ŪRDHVABHĀK. A fire. This Agni (fire) was the fifth son of Bṛhaspati. (M.B) Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 20).

ŪRDHVAPUṆḌRA. A mark worn on the forehead with yellow ochre. This mark should be made by earth or ochre, which should be taken from the top of a mountain peak, banks of rivers, seashore, Śaivite temple serpent-hill or from under a holy basil. The fruits of wearing the mark will vary according to the colour of the ochre. Black ochre will afford peace, red soil will procure docility, yellow soil will get prosperity, and white ochre will give duty or righteousness. As the fruits vary according to the colour, so also it will vary according to the finger used to put the sign. If the mark is made with the thumb the man will become stout. If it is done with the middle finger he will have long life. If it is done with the fourth finger (anāmikā), he will get food and if it is made with the index finger (tarjanī) he will get salvation. The form of the mark also could be changed. The mark may be made in the form of a flame, the leaf of bamboo reed, a lotus-bud, a fish, a turtle or a conch. If the mark is as large as ten finger-breadths it is superfine. If of nine finger-breadths, it is medium super-fine; and if it is eight and a half finger-breadths, it is lower superfine. In the same way if the finger-breadth of the mark is seven, six or five they will be super medium, medium medium and lower medium. If it is four, three and two they will be of the low, medium low and lowest.

It is also ordered that when one wears the Ūrdhvapuṇḍra in a particular spot of the body one will have to think of a particular name of Viṣṇu.

ŪRDHVAVEṆĪDHARĀ. An attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 18).

ŪRJJĀ I. A wife of Vasiṣṭha. Seven sons named Rajas, Gotra, Ūrdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Śukra, were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Ūrjjā. These seven holy men were the seven hermits (Saptarṣis) in the third Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10).

ŪRJJA II. One of the seven hermits of the Svārociṣa Manvantara. The seven hermits of the Svārociṣa Manvantara were Ūrjja, Stambha, Prāṇa, Vāta, Pṛṣabha Niraya and Parīvān. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 1).

ŪRJJA. III. A King of the Hehaya dynasty. He was the grandfather of the famous Jarāsandha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ŪRJJAKETU. A King of the dynasty of King Janaka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

ŪRJJANĪ. A daughter of the Sun. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 119).

ŪRJJASVATĪ. A daughter born to Priyavrata, the son of Manu Svāyambhuva, by Surūpā the daughter of Viśvakarmā. Ūrjjasvatī had ten brothers. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8). Priyavrata gave Ūrjjasvatī to the teacher-priest Śukra. Devayānī, the wife of Yayāti, was the daughter born to Śukra by Ūrjjasvatī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

ŪRJJAYONI. One of Viśvāmitra's sons who were expounders of Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 59).

ŪRMILĀ. Lakṣmaṇa married Ūrmilā, the daughter of King Janaka and the sister of Sītā. When Lakṣmaṇa went to the forest with Śrī Rāma and Sītā, Ūrmilā remained in Ayodhyā. After the forest life, Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa returned with Sītā. When Śrī Rāma was ruling over the country, two sons were born to Lakṣmaṇa by Ūrmilā. The elder son was named Takṣaka and the second was given the name Chatraketu. At the instruction of Śrī Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa went to the Eastern sea and killed the foresters there and built there a city called Agatī. Takṣaka was made the King of Agatī. Lakṣmaṇa then went to the western sea and killed the Barbarians there and built a city called Candramatī and made Chatraketu the King of that city. Being punished by Śrī Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa drowned himself in the river Sarayū. (See under Lakṣmaṇa). After that Ūrmilā jumped into a pile of fire and reached the world of Viṣṇu. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ŪRṆĀ. A wife of Marīci. In the Svāyambhuva Manvantara Marīci had a wife called Ūrṇā and six mighty sons by her. When they saw Brahmā once, they teased him by calling him 'a father who had married his daughter.' Brahmā got angry with them, and cursed them to take birth as Daityas (demons) on the earth. Accordingly they took birth as the sons of Kālanemi on earth. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

ŪRṆANĀBHA (SUDARŚANA). A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 96). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 67, that Bhīmasena killed him.

ŪRṆĀYU. A Devagandharva. He had participated in the Birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 52). Once this Devagandharva fell in love with Menakā. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 16).

ŪRU. A son born to Manu Cākṣuṣa by his wife Naḍvalā. Ūru had nine brothers named Pūru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavāk, Kavi, Agniṣṭhu, Atirātra, Sudyumna and Atimanyu. Six great sons were born to Ūru by his wife Ātreyī. They were Aṅga, Sumanas, Svāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Gaya. Vena was born to King Aṅga by his wife Sunīthā and the famous emperor Pṛthu was born as the son of Vena. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

URUKRAMA. Another name of Vāmana.

ŪRVA (AURVA). A luminous hermit of the family of Bhṛgu. He was the son of Cyavana and the father of Ṛcīka. He created a tremendous fire for the destruction of the three worlds and extinguished it by putting it in the ocean. (For details see under Aurva).

URVARĀ. A celestial woman in the palace of Kubera. In the company of some other celestial women, she danced before the hermit called Aṣṭāvakra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 44).

URVARĪYĀN. Son of the Prajāpati Pulaha. Three sons named Kardama, Urvarīyān and Sahiṣṇu, were born to Pulaha by his wife Kṣamā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 1).

URVAŚĪ I. A famous celestial damsel.

1) Birth of Urvaśī. In days of old two hermits named Nara and Nārāyaṇa did penance to Brahmā in the holy hermitage of Badarikā for a thousand years. (Nara and Nārāyaṇa were the children born to Dharma, the son of Brahmā). Because of the severity of their penance Indra was struck with fear. Thinking that they were doing this severe penance with a view to become Indra, he approached the hermits and told them that they might ask for any boon. Even though Indra told them several times, they did not speak a word nor did they make any stir. Indra's fear increased. So Indra decided to create some delusions which would arouse in them fear, desire etc., so that their penance might be broken. He began to bring around them wild animals such as lion, elephant wild snake etc. and natural phenomena such as storm, heavy rain, forest-fire etc. to terrify them. The efforts of Indra were futile. The disappointed Indra sent for Kāmadeva (Cupid) and consulted him, as a result of which Kāmadeva and his wife Ratidevī with many celestial maids came to the hermitage in the mountain of Gandhamādana with the intention of hindering the penance of Naranārāyaṇas. The season of spring was created in the forest. The celestial women such as Rambhā and others came before the hermits and began to sing and dance. The hearts of the hermits began to swell with passion. When they opened their eyes what they saw was a beautiful sight. The famous celestial women, Menakā, Rambhā, Tilottamā, Sukeśinī, Manoramā, Maheśvarī, Puṣpagandhā, Pramadvarā, Ghṛtācī, Candraprabhā, Somā, Vidyunmālā, Ambujākṣī, Kāñcanamālā, and others with their ten thousand and eighty hand-maids stood before them. Hermit Nārāyaṇa who got terribly angry struck on his thigh with his hand and instantly there arose a woman of extreme beauty. Because she had originated from the Ūru (thigh) of Nārāyaṇa, that woman, who was the most beautiful in the three worlds, got the name Urvaśī. All the others were struck with wonder at the sight of this new creation. After that so many other beautiful women also were created. The hermit Nārāyaṇa gave all of them to Indra. With shame Indra accepted them and returned to heaven along with them. Thus Urvaśī arrived at the realm of the devas (gods). (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

2) Position of Urvaśī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata that Urvaśī had the eleventh place among the singers. The expert dancers were Anūcānā, Adrikā, Somakeśī, Miśrā, Alambuṣā, Marīci, Śucikā, Vidyutparṇā, Tilottamā, Ambikā, Kṣemā, Rambhā, Subāhu, Asitā, Supriyā, Puṇḍarīkā, Sugandhā, Surasā, Pramāthinī, Kāmyā and Śāradvatī. Urvaśī got the first place among the celestial maids in beauty. (M B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123).

3) Urvaśī and Purūravas. Purūravas was the son of Budha born of Ilā. He grew up and became a king of great renown. His fame reached even the realm of the gods. One day during that period Brahmā cursed Urvaśī. "Go and be born on the earth." (It is stated in the Devī Bhāgavata that it was Brahmā who cursed Urvaśī and in the Bhāgavata that it was the Mitrāvaruṇas who cursed Urvaśī). Urvaśī had heard about the fame of Purūravas and had felt tender love for him. The celestial maid reached the earth. She went to the palace of Purūravas and saw him. Because of the perfection of their figures, both loved mutually. The king asked her to become his wife. She agreed. But she laid down three conditions.

(i) I have with me two lambs which I bring up as my sons. You must take care of them. No harm should befall them.

(ii) I take in only ghee. On no account should you compel me to eat any other food.

(iii) Don't come near me in nudity except at the time of coition.

The king agreed to all these conditions. From that day onwards Urvaśī lived in the palace of the king as his wife. They lived happily for a long while without separating from each other.

Urvaśī became conspicuous by her absence in the realm of the gods. She was the most expert actress in heaven.

Indra missed her. So a search was made and they found out that she was in the palace of Purūravas. Indra asked the Gandharvas to bring that celestial woman to heaven somehow. Viśvāvasu and some others of the Gandharvas reached the palace of king Purūravas and waited for an opportunity. One midnight they stole the lambs and took them away through the sky. At that time the king was with Urvaśī in the harem. Urvaśī heard the cry of the lambs and she was flurried. She reviled the king who was not capable of taking care of two lambs. Hearing her harsh words the king took his bow and arrow and following the cry of the lambs he was about to chase the thieves. Taking this opportunity the Gandharvas caused a lightning to flash in the king's harem. In the light of the lightning Urvaśī saw the king standing nude. The Gandharvas having achieved their task had left the lambs and departed before the king had got out of the room. The king caught hold of the lambs and returned to the harem, within a short while. But Urvaśī had gone out of the palace and was on her way.

The king was full of grief. He wandered all over the country in search of Urvaśī. At last he reached Kurukṣetra and saw Urvaśī there. He bowed low before her and implored her to return to the palace. But Urvaśī replied thus:—

"Women are like wolves. Don't have alliance with them Oh King! Kings should not put faith in women and thieves."

Saying thus, Urvaśī vanished. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

4) The reason why Purūravas had to remain separate from Urvaśī. Purūravas had once gone to heaven, in accordance with the invitation of Indra to help the Gods in the battle with the asuras. Indra had killed Māyādhara, a noble Asura, in that battle and had celebrated a festival. In that festival Rambhā was dancing before Tumburu, the sage-priest, and detecting some flaw in her dance Purūravas teased her. Rambhā retorted by asking the King what he knew about dance, and the king replied that he had learned from Urvaśī more dance than Tumburu the teacher of Rambhā. Tumburu got angry at this, and cursed the king Purūravas to suffer from the pangs of separation from Urvaśī. Stricken with grief, Purūravas returned to his palace. It was after this that the Gandharvas took away Urvaśī. Purūravas went to Badarikāśrama and performed penance, meditating on God Viṣṇu for the nullification of the curse. Urvaśī, aggrieved by separation from her husband, sat motionless as a picture, in the custody of the Gandharvas. Lord Viṣṇu was pleased with the penance of Purūravas. The Gandharvas brought her back to the King. Thus it became possible for the king to meet Urvaśī at least once a year. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka, Taraṅga 1).

5) The sons born to Purūravas by Urvaśī. The king became very sad when Urvaśī was about to depart from him at Kurukṣetra. Seeing his grief Urvaśī told him. "Oh King, if you want so much to live with me, you have to worship the Gandharvas. They will be pleased and will give me to you. Don't be sorry. Now I am pregnant. Come to this place at the end of a year. We can spend that night together. Then we will get another son also that night." Pleased at what Urvaśī had said, the king returned to his palace. On completion of a year Purūravas went to Kurukṣetra and spent a night with Urvaśī. Urvaśī gave Purūravas a very beautiful child and then she vanished. The king sat there and praised the Gandharvas, who gave the king an Agnisthālī (a fire pot). Because of his derangement, thinking it to be Urvaśī the king took the sthālī (pot) and wandered about in the forest. At last placing the pot in the forest, the king returned to his palace. On that day Tretāyuga (one of the four ages of the word) commenced, and the Vedas dawned in his mind as three in number. He returned to the place where he had left the Sthālī in the forest and took it. After that he made two 'araṇis' (wood from which fire is kindled by attrition)out of a banyan tree and placed his body between them and made fire. That fire is called 'Jātavedas'. Thus Jātavedas became the son of Purūravas.

Purūravas generated three fires from Jātavedas. The first of them is Praṇava. The second is called Nārāyaṇa and the third Agnivarṇa. (Śrīmad Bhāgavata, 9th Śkandha).

To Purūravas six sons were born from the womb of Urvaśī. They were Āyus, Śrutāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. (A little difference is observed in these names in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanzas 24 and 25).

6) To know how a Gandharva named Durmada and a Vidyādharī named Unmadā played a trick on Purūravas and Urvaśī, see under Unmadā.

7) How Agastya and Vasiṣṭha were born to Mitrāvaruṇas because of Urvaśī. In days of old there was a renowned king named Nimi in the family of Ikṣvāku. He decided to perform a sacrifice of a long duration. He began preparation and invited famous hermits such as Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras, Vāmadeva, Pulastya, Pulaha. Ṛcīka and others. Finally he invited Vasiṣṭha. At that time Indra had begun another sacrifice in heaven. So Vasiṣṭha went to heaven for that sacrifice, telling Nimi that he would conduct the sacrifice on his return. The emperor Nimi did not like it. Recognizing the hermit Gautama as the main priest, he began performing the sacrifice. The sacrifice of Indra lasted for 500 years. When Vasiṣṭha returned after that, the sacrifice of Nimi was over. Vasiṣṭha cursed Nimi. "You will become devoid of body." Nimi cursed back. "Let Vasiṣṭha also become thus."

The aggrieved Vasiṣṭha went to his father Brahmā and complained about the curse. Brahmā told Vasiṣṭha. "You penetrate the brightness of Mitrāvaruṇas and stay there. In due course you will get a birth which is not of a womb." Hearing these words, Vasiṣṭha reached the hermitage of Mitrāvaruṇas. He left his body there and fused himself into their effulgence. During this period Urvaśī came to that hermitage. Seeing her, Mitrāvaruṇas had seminal flow. The semen fell in a pot. From the pot two bright and handsome sons were born. The first of them was Agastya and the second Vasiṣṭha. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

8) Indra cursing Urvaśī. Once Agastya went to the durbar of Indra. On the occasion Indra asked Urvaśī to dance. In the midst of the dance she saw Jayanta, the son of Indra, and became amorous and her steps went wrong. Nārada who was playing his famous lute called Mahatī could not play well. Agastya got angry and cursed Jayanta to become a bud. He cursed Nārada also. So his lute became the lute of the world. Urvaśī was born on the earth under the name Mādhavī due to the curse.

9) Urvaśī changing Arjuna into eunuch. (See under Arjuna).

10) Other information.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11, that Urvaśī had been in love with Kubera once.

(ii) Urvaśī was dismayed when Śukadeva attained Supreme Bliss. (See under Śuka).

URVAŚĪ II. Another name of Gaṅgā. As she sat on the Ūru (thigh) of Bhagīratha, Gaṅgā got the name Urvaśī. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 6).

URVAŚĪTĪRTHA. A holy place and Bath. Those who bathe in this holy bath will be honoured by the world. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 157).

UṢĀ I. The daughter of Bāṇāsura and the wife of Aniruddha.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:- Brahmā - Kaśyapa - Hiraṇyakaśipu - Prahlāda-Virocana-Mahābali-Bāṇa-Uṣā.

2) Marriage of Uṣā. See under Aniruddha.

UṢĀ II. The daughter of a hermit. The king of Śālva once attacked Satyaratha, the king of Vidarbha, and killed him. The queens of the king of Vidarbha went to the forest. One of them who was pregnant gave birth to a child on the bank of a river. When she got down into the river to drink water, a crocodile swallowed her. Then a hermit's daughter named Uṣā brought up the child. (Śiva Purāṇa).

UṢĀ III. The night is called Uṣā and the day, Ghuṣṭi. The time between Uṣā and Ghuṣṭi is called Sandhyā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁ'a 2, Chapter 8).

UṢAṄGU I. A hermit who lived in the western country. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 30).

UṢAṄGU II. A synonym of Śiva.(M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 105).

UṢAṄGU III. A king of the Yadu family. His father was Vṛjinīvān and his son was called Citraratha. (M.B. Anu'āsana Parva, Chapter 147, Stanza 29).

UŚAṄGAVA. A member of the durbar of the king Yama (god of death). (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 26).

UŚAṄKU (RUŚAṄKU). A hermit. Seeing that old age was coming on him this hermit forsook his body in the Pṛthūdaka tīrtha and went to the realm of Viṣṇu. Ārṣṭiṣeṇa, Viśvāmitra, Sindhudvīpa, Devāpi and such others got Brāhmaṇya (the state of being Brahmin) by doing penance in the hermitage of this hermit. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 38, Stanzas 33-39).

UŚANAS. The teacher Śukra, the son of the hermit Bhṛgu. (See under Śukra).

UŚIK I. A hermit about whom mention is made in the Ṛgveda.

UŚIK II. One Uśik as the wife of the hermit Dīrghatamas is mentioned in the Ṛgveda Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112. This Uśik was the maid of the queen of the old King of Kaliṅga. The king requested Dīrghatamas to beget children by his queen. The queen did not like this. She sent her maid Uśik to Dīrghatamas. The hermit Kakṣīvān was the son born to Dīrghatamas by Uśik. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 18, Sūkta 125).

UŚĪNARA I. A famous king of the Candravaṁśa (Lunar dynasty).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:- Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha- Purūravas - Āyus-Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Anudruhyu-Sabhānara-Kālanara - Sṛñjaya-Uśīnara. Uśīnara was the father of Śibi and Vena.

2) The reason for the curse of the eight Vasus. Once the Aṣṭavasus (Vasus eight in number) came to the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, with their wives. The wife of Dyau, one of the Aṣṭavasus, saw the cow 'Nandinī' in the hermitage. She and the daughter of Uśīnara were intimate friends. She wanted to get Nandinī, so that she might give it as a present to the daughter of Uṣīnara. According to her wish the Aṣṭavasus caught hold of the cow and took her home. At that time Vasiṣṭha had been away. When he returned, he knew about the theft of the cow and cursed the Aṣṭavasus to take birth in the wombs of women on earth. It was according to this curse that the Aṣṭavasus took birth in Gaṅgādevī the wife of Śantanu. See under Bhīṣma. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 2).

3) Indra testing Uśīnara. Uśīnara was a just and liberal-minded King. Indra decided to test the King regarding his liberality. He got Agnideva (fire-god) for his help. Indra took the form of a Kite and Agni that of a dove. Both flew down to Uśīnara as if the Kite was chasing the dove. Uśīnara agreed to protect the dove. The Kite argued with the King that it was not meet and right on his part to rob him of his lawful food. The King agreed to give any other kind of flesh to the Kite. But the Kite would have none of them. Finally the Kite agreed to accept the flesh of the King instead, equal to the weight of the dove. The King cut more and more flesh from his body, but it could not weigh equal to the dove. At last the King himself got into the balance. Then the gods had pity on the King and the Kite and the dove appeared in their real form and blessed the King and then they returned to heaven. (M.B. Araṇya Parva, Chapter 131). In Mahābhārata a story like this occurs about King Śibi also.

4) Other information.

(i) Uśīnara gave Gālava two hundred horses as dowry and married Yayāti's damsel Mādhavī. (See under Gālava).

(ii) The King Śunaka gave Uśīnara a sword. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Stanza 79).

(iii) Uśīnara performed a sacrifice on the bank of the river Vitastā and became equal to Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 20-21).

(iv) Uśīnara attained heaven by giving cows as gifts. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 25).

UŚĪNARA II. A King of the Yādavas. In the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 20, it is mentioned that this King was present on the occasion of the Svayaṁvara (the bride choosing a husband) of Draupadī.

UŚĪNARA III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 32, that Vṛṣādarbhi was another name of Uśīnara and that he had once ruled over the kingdom of Kāśī.

UŚĪNARA IV. A country. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 47, that Arjuna had killed the warriors of this country. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 33, Stanzas 22 and 23, mention is made that due to the curse of Brahmins the Kṣatriyas (the ruling class) had become Śūdras (servile class.)

UŚĪRABĪJA I. A mountain in North India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 1).

UŚĪRABĪJA II. A place on the northern side of the Himālayas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 23, that the King Marutta once fought a battle here.

ŪṢMĀ. The son of the Agni (Fire) named Pāñcajanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 4).

ŪṢMAPĀ. A group of Pitṛs (the Manes). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 30, that these Pitṛs (the manes) live in the palace of Yama.

UṢṆADEŚA. An ancient place in Krauñcadvīpa (the island of Krauñca). Krauñcaparvata (the mountain Krauñca) stands near this place. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 21).

UṢṆIGAṄGA. An ancient holy place in Bhārata. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 135, Stanza 7).

UṢṆIK. One of the seven horses of the Sun. The seven horses of the Sun are, Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagatī, Triṣṭup, Anuṣṭup, and Paṅkti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 8).

UṢṆINĀBHA. A Viśvadeva (a class of gods). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 44).

UṢṬRAKARṆIKA. An ancient place in South India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 71, that this place was brought under control by Sahadeva.

UTATHYA I.

1) General. Son of sage Aṅgiras. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 5). He gave advice on subjects of statecraft to King Māndhātā. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 90). He married Soma's daughter Bhadrā. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 154, Verse 12).

2) Utathya drank up the sea dry. Varuṇa deva had an eye on Soma's daughter Bhadrā when Utathya married her. Incensed at the marriage, Varuṇa carried Bhadrā off to the sea one day when Utathya was not present. Nārada informed Utathya that it was Varuṇa who stole his wife. Though Nārada, at the request of Utathya, asked Varuṇa to return Bhadrā to the former he did not oblige. Enraged at this Utathya drank up the sea dry. Yet, Varuṇa did not come round. Then Utathya rendered all the lakes of Varuṇa dry. Trembling at this Varuṇa returned Bhadrā to Utathya and prostrated at his feet. He pardoned Varuṇa and gave back the sea to him. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 154).

UTATHYA II. The muni Satyatapas. (See under Satyatapas.)

UTKALA I. A place in India where people lived in safety. Karṇa conquered this place. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 8).Utkala is believed to be modern Orissa.

UTKALA II. Son of Vaivasvata Manu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 31).

UTKOCA (M). A holy place. Dhaumya, the younger brother of Devala lived in Utkocatīrtha. The Pāṇḍavas went there and made Dhaumya a priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 182).

UTKOCAKA (M). An ancient holy place. Dhaumya did tapas here, and it was here that the Pāṇḍavas took Dhaumya as their priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 152, Verses 2-6).

UTKRĀTHINĪ. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 16).

UTKROŚA. One of the two attendants Indra gave to Skanda; the other was called Pañcaka. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 35).

UTPALĀVANA. A holy bath in the Panjab. At this place Viśvāmitra performed a sacrifice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 15).

UTPALINĪ. A river flowing near the forest known as Naimiṣāraṇya. Arjuna had seen this river. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 6).

UTPĀTAKA. A holy bath. Those who bathe in this tīrtha (bath) will get the merits of a fast. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 41).

UTSAVA. Celebrations conducted in temples from olden days. There are Śāstraic (scriptural) injunctions as regards conducting utsavas. Utsava is an indispensable celebration when once the deity (idol) is installed in the temple. Utsava should be celebrated for one day, three days or seven days in the very same month in which the deity was installed, because non-celebration of Utsava will render the installation ineffective. Utsava should be conducted either during Uttarāyaṇa (movement of the sun from south to North) or Viṣu (when the Sun is in the centre) or at a time suitable to the temple authorities who conduct the utsava in Śayana, Upavana or Gṛha. It should commence with auspicious ceremonies like the sowing of seeds of nine varieties of foodgrains, and with dance, song, instrumental music etc.

UTSAVASAṄKETA. A place in the South Bhārata. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 61).

UTTAMA. A King born in the dynasty of Svāyambhuva Manu who had two famous sons, of whom Priyavrata married Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī, two daughters of Viśvakarmā. Priyavrata begot three children, Uttama Tāmasa and Raivata by his wife Barhiṣmatī. These three sons attained exceptional prowess and became lords of the ages of Manu (Manvantarādhipatis). Priyavrata, with his children ruled the country in all happiness and prosperity for ten crores of years. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha). Uttānapāda, the second son of Svāyambhuvamanu begot one son, Uttama by his wife Suruci and another son Dhruva by his wife Sunīti. (See under Dhruva). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 11).

UTTAMĀŚVA. A particular place in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 41).

UTTAMAUJAS. A warrior who fought in the great war on the Pāṇḍava side. He belonged to the Pāñcāla country.

It was Uttamaujas who guarded the right wheel of Arjuna's chariot. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 19). He fought fiercely with Aṅgada. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 28, Verses 38-39). He fought Kṛtavarmā also. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 27-32). He was defeated in a fight with Duryodhana. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 30-43). Kṛtavarmā also defeated him. He killed Suṣeṇa, son of Karṇa. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 13). This valiant warrior was killed by Aśvatthāmā. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verses 35-36). His cremation is described in Verse 34, Chapter 26 of Strī Parva.

UTTĀNABARHIS. The son of Śaryāti, a King of the family of Vaivasvata Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

UTTĀNAPĀDA. A King. He was the son of Svāyambhuva Manu, the son of Brahmā. Svāyambhuva Manu had two sons Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8). A son named Uttama was born to Uttānapāda by his wife Suruci. Uttānapāda had another wife called Sunīti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 11). See under Dhruva.

UTTAṄKA (UTAṄKA). An ideal disciple of Veda who was the disciple of Āpodadhaumya.

1) Uttaṅka and the Guru's wife. After entrusting management of the āśrama to Uttaṅka, Veda once went out on a tour of the country, and Uttaṅka stayed in the Āśrama carrying out the instructions of the Guru. Then came the menstrual period of Veda's wife, and his other wives requested Uttaṅka to do the needful, so that the fertile period of their co-wife was not wasted. Uttaṅka's reply to them was as follows:- "Asked by women, I shall not do this improper act; and the preceptor has not asked me to do such a thing though it might be improper."

His Guru, Āpodadhaumya returned to the Āśrama some time after this, and was very pleased to hear about the above incident. He blessed Uttaṅka. (M.B. Ādī Parva, Chapter 3).

2) His tuition fee. His education being over, it was now time for Uttaṅka to give due offerings—tuition fee to his guru, and Uttaṅka enquired of the guru as to what he would have by way of dakṣiṇā. The guru asked Uttaṅka to get his wife's instruction in the matter and act accordingly. Because of the aforesaid incident (Uttaṅka not acting on the guru's wife during her menstrual period) she had a grouse against him, and therefore, asked him to bring as his tuition fee the ear-rings worn by the Kṣatriya wife of King Pauṣa.

Uttaṅka set out to procure the ear-rings. On the way he saw an ox, and on its back a big man, who called out to Uttaṅka to eat the excretion of the ox. When Uttaṅka hesitated to do so, the man on the ox asked him again to eat it, pointing out that his guru, Veda, had done it. Then did Uttaṅka consume both the excretion and urine of the ox, and did his oblations, in his perplexed mood, standing. Uttaṅka arrived at the palace of King Pauṣa and told him about the object of his visit. The King agreed to it. But, when Uttaṅka entered the Zenana Pauṣa's Kṣatriya wife could not be seen. When Uttaṅka told the King about this, he remained thoughtful for some time and told the former that he might surely have become impure due to performance of oblations in the wrong manner, and that his wife would not be visible due to her chastity, to the eyes of such impure folk. Uttaṅka admitted to having, on his way, performed oblations not in the proper manner, and then he sat down facing the east after washing his hands, feet etc. and performed oblation in the correct manner. Then did the wife of King Pauṣa become visible to him, and she, pleased at his humility, handed over her ear-rings to him. She also advised him to be very careful about the ear-rings as they had once been coveted by Takṣaka, King of the serpents. Bidding adieu to the queen, Uttaṅka saw the King and they sat together to take food. Not only was the rice cold; but a hair was also found in it. Uttaṅka cursed the King and rendered him blind, and the King, in turn, cursed Uttaṅka not to have children. But, both of them became calm quite soon and withdrew their curses.

On his way back to the Āśrama with the ear-rings, he had only just stepped into a pool for a wash, when a naked Buddha sannyāsin, who was following him, snatched and ran off with the ear-rings. It was really Takṣaka disguised as the sannyāsin who thus snatched the ear-rings. Uttaṅka chased him and caught him when he assumed his original form of the serpent King and disappeared into a cave. Uttaṅka waited at the mouth of the cave stupefied, when Indra deputed his Vajrāyudha to help Uttaṅka. The Vajrāyudha cut a tunnel-like route to Pātāla from the earth and through the cave Uttaṅka reached Pātāla by this route and found out the palace of Takṣaka.

Though Uttaṅka praised and cajoled the Nāgas (serpents) their King Takṣaka did not make his appearance. Uttaṅka saw there two women, who had been weaving clothes, and on one machine there were black and white threads. The machine had one wheel with twelve spokes and was turned by six boys. Also was there a horse, and a man. When Uttaṅka praised them, the horse and the man approached him. The man advised Uttaṅka to blow through the anus of the horse so that the snakes could be brought round. Uttaṅka did so, when lo ! from all the pores on the body of the horse, flames of fire began sprouting out. When the Nāgaloka (country of serpents) got thus filled with fire and flames, Takṣaka lost his nerves and came out with the stolen ear-rings, which Uttaṅka received back. But, that was the last day on which the rings had been promised to be given to his guru's wife by Uttaṅka, who remained there gloomy and sorrow- stricken at the thought that he would not be able to travel all the distance before sunset and give the ear-rings to the guru's wife. Then the horseman gave the horse to Uttaṅka, who reached the Āśrama just in time when the guru's wife was about to curse Uttaṅka for not returning with the rings though it was nearly dusk time. Now the guru and his wife blessed Uttaṅka, who detailed to them his experiences since leaving the Āśrama in quest of the ear-rings. Then the guru spoke thus to Uttaṅka—"The two women whom you found engaged in weaving were Dhātā and Vidhātā, the white and black strings, day and night, and the six boys who turned the wheel with twelve spokes were the six seasons. The ox seen by you on the way was Airāvata (Indra's elephant), the horse seen in Pātāla was Agnideva, and the horseman, Indra. The excretion you ate on your way was nectar and that was the reason why you did not die in the Nāgaloka. Indra who is my friend blessed you because of mercy towards you, my disciple. You could bring back the ear-rings also because of Indra's blessings."

Then the guru blessed Uttaṅka and the latter took leave of thim. (M.B Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).

3) Uttaṅka and Janamejaya's serpent yajña. Uttaṅka, determined on taking vengeance on Takṣaka, went away directly from the āśrama to Hastināpura, where he met Janamejaya and told him the fact that it was Takṣaka, who had bitten to death Parīkṣit, his (Janamejaya) father. It was thus prompted by Uttaṅka to take revenge upon Takṣaka that Janamejaya performed the serpent yajña. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).

4) Uttaṅka and Dhundhumāra. See under Dhundhumāra.
5) Uttaṅka attained salvation. Uttaṅka was put up at a place called Ujjālaka. When he became old, he went about visiting many temples. During this tour one day Uttaṅka saw a hunter in the forest called Gulika attempting to steal the golden plates on the dome of the Viṣṇu temple in Sauvīra. Gulika raised his sword to kill Uttaṅka, when he told the former that he would have to suffer the results of sin during many births if he committed a sin. This admonition of Uttaṅka so touched the heart of the hunter that he fell dead on the spot with a repentant heart. Uttaṅka sprinkled Gaṅgā water on the corpse of the hunter, who attained Vaikuṇṭha (abode of Viṣṇu). On the advice of Viṣṇu, Uttaṅka went to Badarī where he did tapas and also attained Vaikuṇṭha. (Nāradīya Purāṇa).

In Chapters 53-58 of Aśvamedha Parva of Mahābhārata is related the story of one Uttaṅka muni, under the caption 'Utaṅkopākhyāna'. In Mahābhārata (original) he is referred to as Uttaṅka; but in its Malayālam rendering he is called Utaṅka. There are no substantial differences between the story of Uttaṅka and that of Utaṅka, Veda's disciple. But, since, there are differences, in certain aspects some information about the Uttaṅka of the 'Utaṅkopākhyāna' is given below—

1) General. Uttaṅka was a disciple of Gautama, the husband of Ahalyā. The guru had more love for Uttaṅka than for his other disciples, and therefore did not permit the latter to leave the Āśrama even after the other disciples were sent away. Uttaṅka became old; wrinkles attacked his body and greyness his head.

2) Tuition fee (Gurudakṣiṇā). Uttaṅka once returned from the woods with firewood, in a very tired condition. The daughter of the guru shed tears at the sight. Gautama called Uttaṅka to him and asked him about the cause of his grief and sorrow. Uttaṅka replied that the hairs on his head turned grey on account of sorrow that he was not permitted to leave the Āśrama although it was hundred years since he had gone there first as disciple. Then Gautama permitted Uttaṅka to quit the Āśrama. Uttaṅka asked Gautama what he should offer as tuition fee. Gautama consulted his wife on the topic and she suggested as tuition fee the two ear-rings of gems worn by the wife of King Saudāsa, who used to eat the flesh of man. Immediately Uttaṅka set out to fetch the ear-rings and on his way met Saudāsa in the forest, and told the latter about his mission. Saudāsa tried to eat Uttaṅka, who told him that he was in duty bound to obtain the ear-rings for his guru's wife and that, after fulfilling the mission, he would return to Saudāsa to be eaten up by him. Saudāsa agreed to the proposition. He directed Uttaṅka to his wife Madayantī, who spoke to him thus—"Devas and Maharṣis covet these ear-rings. If I place them on the ground, serpents will steal them; if handed over to Ucchiṣṭa, Yakṣas will steal them, and if the watchman sleeps, Devas will snatch them off. Therefore, you should bring some token for me to believe that you are deputed by my husband." Accordingly Uttaṅka went back to Saudāsa and returned to his wife with a token from him, and Madayantī handed over her ear-rings to Uttaṅka. Being told by Saudāsa that Uttaṅka need not return again to him, Uttaṅka started for Gautama's āśrama with the ear-rings. Feeling hungry on the way, Uttaṅka tied to the branch of a vilva tree the ear-rings bundled in deer skin and ate vilva fruits. Just then the bundle of deer skin got untied and the ear-rings kept in it fell on the ground. A serpent carried off the rings between its teeth and concealed itself in a mole-hill. Highly grieved and upset by the sight, Uttaṅka fell down from the tree. For 35 days Uttaṅka dug the mole-hill. Then Indra felt great sympathy for him, appeared on the spot, and passed his Vajrāyudha through the mole-hill. Then the earth burst open and Uttaṅka entered Pātāla through the opening, and a horse, its tail white and the rest of the body black in colour presented itself to him. It asked Uttaṅka to blow through its anus. Uttaṅka did so and the Nāgaloka was filled with flames of fire. (The horse was Agnideva). Then did the serpents return the ear-rings to Uttaṅka, who returned with it to Gautama and presented it to him (Gautama) as tuition fee.

3) Uttaṅka about to curse Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Uttaṅka once went to Dvārakā, and during their talk was about to curse Kṛṣṇa for not attempting to bring about a compromise between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. At once Kṛṣṇa exhibited his Viśvarūpa (himself as containing the whole universe). Thereupon Uttaṅka saluted Kṛṣṇa, who asked him to request for any boon. He prayed for the boon that water might be made available in any desert he visited. Kṛṣṇa told him that whenever he required water he might successfully think of him.

4) Indra tested Uttaṅka. Some time afterwards, while roaming about quite thirsty and tired in a desert, Uttaṅka thought about Kṛṣṇa, and at once there appeared before him a naked Caṇḍāla, his body covered with mud. Dogs encircled him. Uttaṅka hesitated to drink the water given to him by this Caṇḍāla, who had some water with him. The Caṇḍāla again insisted on Uttaṅka drinking the water, but he again refused the offer. The caṇḍāla then disappeared with the dogs. Within a few minutes a person with disc, conch, club etc. about him appeared, and Uttaṅka recognised him as Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Uttaṅka told Kṛṣṇa that it was not proper to give water to a brahmin through a caṇḍāla. Kṛṣṇa's reply to this was as follows:—"I asked Indra to give you nectar instead of water, and he argued that it was not proper that men should be given nectar. I pleaded for you again. Indra replied to this that he himself would, in the guise of a caṇḍāla give nectar to you, and he should not be found fault with, if you refused the nectar. I accepted that proposition of his. But, you did not accept nectar thus offered to you. So, you cannot be given nectar now. But, there will appear water-laden clouds in deserts which you traverse, which would be known as 'Uttaṅka clouds' and they would give you sweet water.

Uttaṅka was pleased, and it is the Uttaṅka clouds, which form as per the above orders of Kṛṣṇa that cause rain to fall, though rarely, in deserts even today.

UTTARA I. The son of King Virāta of Matsya. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9 that Bhūmiñjaya was another name of Uttara. Uttara also accompanied his father Virāṭa, when he went to take part in the Svayaṁvara (choice of a husband) of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 3).

2) Uttara and Arjuna. See the paragraph Ajñātavāsa under Arjuna.

3) The end of Uttara. Uttara had taken part in the battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 77 that a combat took place on the first day of the battle between Uttara and Vīrabāhu. Uttara attacked Śalya who killed Uttara. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Stanzas 36 to 39). Uttara who met with a glorious death in the battle, got a place in heaven with the gods. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanzas 17 and 18).

UTTARA II. A King who had gone down because of his contemptuous behaviour towards his superiors.

UTTARA III. A fire. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 29 and Sabhā Parva, Chapter 22).

UTTARĀ.

1) General information. Daughter of Virāṭa, the King of Matsya. Her brother was called Uttara.

2) Up to marriage. The Pāṇḍavas led their incognito life in the capital of the Matsya Kingdom. Arjuna adopted the name Bṛhannala and was employed as the tutor of princess Uttarā in music and dancing. At the end of the life, King Virāṭa gave his daughter Uttarā in marriage to Abhimanyu the son of Arjuna. (See the paragraph Ajñātavāsa (incognito-life) under Arjuna).

3) Son. The son born to Abhimanyu and Uttarā was Parīkṣit, who became a very famous King later. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanzas 83 and 84). See the seventh paragraph under Aśvatthāmā).

4) The death of her husband. Abhimanyu was killed in the battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 78, Stanza 37 that Uttarā fell unconscious, when she heard of the death of her husband. Śrī Kṛṣṇa consoled Uttarā. In the Mahābhārata, Strī Parva, Chapter 20, Stanzas 4 to 28 the lamentation of Uttarā over the death of Abhimanyu is mentioned.

5) To the forest. Uttarā also was seen among the women who accompanied Dhṛtarāṣṭra, to a little distance when he went to the forest after the battle. (M.B Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 15, Stanza 10).

UTTARADIŚĀ. See under Gālava.

UTTARAJYOTIṢĀ. An ancient city which stood in the western part of Bhārata. It is said in the Mahābhārata that Nakula conquered this city. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 11).

UTTARAKOSALA. An ancient country in Bhārata. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 3 that Bhīmasena conquered Uttara Kosala.

UTTARAKURU. A part of the Jambūdvīpa (Island of Jambū). Mention is made in the Mahābhārata that during his conquest Arjuna had gone up to this place and carried away from there plenty of wealth. It is believed by common people that this place is inaccessible to human beings. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 28, Stanzas 7 to 20). The southern end of this place is the Nīlagiri and the Northern end Mount Meru. The inhabitants are gifted people, with trees bearing flowers and fruits, the flowers fragrant and the fruits sweet.

A particular type of tree known as Kṣīrī (milky) grows here from which milk will flow. There are also trees which will give you whatever you ask. It was the belief of ancient people that with the fruits of Kṣīrī, you could make garments and ornaments. The soil of this place contains gems and in the sand there is gold. Those who fall down from heaven live in this region. The average age of the inhabitants of this place is said to have been eleven thousand years. There is a kind of bird in this place called Bhāruṇḍa. These birds drag dead bodies away to caves. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 8, Stanzas 2 to 13).

UTTARMĀNASA. A holy place of pilgrimage. It is stated in the Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 60, that those who visit this holy place will get atonement from the sin of Bhrūṇahatyā (causing embryoctony).

UTTARAPĀÑCĀLA. An ancient country in Bhārata. Drupada became the King of this country on the death of King Pṛṣata. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 129, Stanza 43). In course of time Uttarapāñcāla came under the control of the Ācārya Droṇa. (See under Droṇa). In the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 137, Stanzas 70 to 76 it is mentioned that this country was on the north bank of the Gaṅgā.

UTTARAPĀRIYĀTRA. A mountain. (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 313, Stanza 8).

UTTARĀPATHA. North Bhārata. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 207, Stanza 43).

UTTARA RĀMĀYAṆA. The second part of the Rāmāyaṇa. Uttara Rāmāyaṇa comprises the story from Śrī Rāma's return from the exile in the forest and assuming the ruling of the country onwards.

UTTARA ULŪKA. The country of Ulūka in North India. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 11 that Arjuna conquered this country.

UTTEJINĪ. A follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 6).

V

VA (व). This letter means Varuṇa and letter 'Vi' means separation (of lovers). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

VĀBHRAVĀYAṆI (BĀBHRAVĀYAṆI). One of Viśvāmitra's sons, who were all Brahmavādins. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 57).

VADĀNYA. An ancient hermit. (For further details see under Aṣṭāvakra).

VADHA. Son of Yātudhāna, a giant. It is mentioned in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa that this giant had two sons Vighna and Śama.

VADHRA. A country in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 55).

VADHRIMATĪ. A princess, praised in Ṛgveda. This beautiful princess got a hermaphrodite as her husband. She shed a good deal of tears and prayed to the Aśvins (Charioteers of Indra, celebrated as Gods of light and helpers) in consequence of which she got a son named Hiraṇyahasta. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Sūkta 116).

VADHŪSARĀ. A river which flowed through the vicinity of the hermitage of Cyavana. This river took its origin from the tears of Pulomā, the wife of hermit Bhṛgu. (For further details see under Cyavana). Because of a bath taken in this river, the body of Paraśurāma shone with radiance. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 99, Stanza 68).

VADHYAŚVA. A king in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 12, that the spirit of this king stays in the palace of Yama, praising him.

VĀDĪ. A son of emperor Pṛthu. Pṛthu had two righteous sons called Antardhāna and Vādī. A son named Havirdhāna was born to Antardhāna by Śikhaṇḍinī. Dhiṣaṇā born in the dynasty of Agni became the wife of Havirdhāna. Six sons named Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina were born to the couple. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 14).

VĀGBHAṬA. A Sanskrit scholar who lived in the 12th century A.D. He is the author of the two medical books 'Aṣṭāṅga-saṅgraha' and 'Aṣṭāṅgahṛdaya'. Another work called 'Neminirvāṇa' is also written by Vāgbhaṭa. This work deals with the story of Neminātha, a Jain hermit.

Not much is known about Vāgbhaṭa. He was a scholar in rhetorical science. There are certain stories about his writing the medical books. It was a period when the muslims had beaten down the Brahmins. They had taken away the medical science also from them. The Brahmins considered this to be a disgrace to them. They decided to select an intelligent boy and send him to a Muslim physician. They selected Vāgbhaṭa. The Brahmins disguised Vāgbhaṭa as a Muslim boy and sent him to the Muslim Physician on the other side of the river. The boy went to the physician and told him that he was coming from far away with the intention of learning medical science. The teacher put certain questions and understood that the boy possessed extraordinary intelligence. He began to teach the boy the science of medicine. Seeing the interest of the boy the teacher asked the boy to eat food from his house and to learn day and night. The Brahmin boy did not like to eat the food of Muslims. The boy said that he had a relative on the other side of the river and that he would go there and have his supper and return for the night study. The teacher agreed and thenceforward Vāgbhaṭa began to learn day and night. Within a short time he completed learning.

One day the teacher was sleeping on the seventh storey of the building and his disciple Vāgbhaṭa was massaging his legs. The boy soliloquised that fate had destined him to massage the legs of a Musalman. Instantly he cried bitterly, and the teacher awoke and understood that the boy was not a Muslim, and tried to cut his head. The boy thought: "The four Vedas and the six Śāstras say that there is a god. If it is true no harm will come to me." Then he jumped out of the window. In consequence of this jump, he became a little lame and no other harm befell him. He swam across the river and reached the other side and told the Brahmins everything. The Brahmins asked him what he imagined when he jumped from the seventh storey. He replied "I jumped with this imagination. The four Vedas and the six Śāstras say that there is a god. If it is true no harm will come to me." As soon as the boy had finished the Brahmins became angry and they all got up. They said "You went wrong in using the doubtful 'if', instead of the affirmative 'As'. The Brahmins joined together and expelled him from the society. The boy thought of going away somewhere. "But there won't be another chance for somebody else to go and learn medical science from the Muslim physicians. So before going away from here I must make the fruits of my efforts available to these people." Thinking so he lived there for a little longer. He lived there without mingling with the Brahmins, cooking his food. It is believed that Vāgbhaṭa wrote 'Aṣṭāṅgasaṅgraha' and 'Aṣṭāṅgahṛdaya', during this period.

VĀGDUṢṬA. One of the seven sons of hermit Kauśika. (Matsya Purāṇa, 20: 3). The famous Pitṛvartti was the youngest brother of Vāgduṣṭa.

VĀGINDRA. Son of the king Prakāśaka born in the family of Gṛtsamada. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 63 that he was the father of King Pramiti.

VĀGMĪ. A son born to Manasyu, the grandson of emperor Puru, by his wife Sauvīrī. This son had two brothers Śakta and Saṁhanana. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 24, Stanza 45).

VĀHANA (CONVEYANCE). To know about the conveyances of Rudra, Yama and so on, see under Jaladhi.

VĀHI. A devil living in the river Vipāśā. The devil had a friend called Hīka. Their sons are called the Vāhīkas. The Vāhīkas are not considered to be the creation of the Prajāpatis. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 1).

VĀHĪKA. A Brahmin who was well-versed in the Vedas. This Brahmin earned his bread by selling salt. In his life, he had committed sins. At last he was killed by a lion. The flesh of his dead body fell in the Gaṅgā in consequence of which he got remission of his sins. (Skanda Purāṇa 2: 4: 1-28).

VAHĪNARA. A king who lives in the palace of Yama. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 15).

VĀHINĪ I. A division of army. (See under Akṣauhiṇī).

VĀHINĪ II. Wife of Kuru, a king of the Lunar dynasty. Five sons such as Aśvavān and others were born to Kuru by his wife Vāhinī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 50).

VAHNI I. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 52 that this asura had been a lokapāla (Indra, Agni, Yama and Varuṇa were called lokapālas) in olden days.

VAHNI II. The son of the King Turvasu. Vahni had a son named Bharga who became very famous. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3: 74. 1).

VAHNI III. One of the sons born to Kṛṣṇa by Mitravindā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VAHNIJVĀLAM. A hell. (See the portion Naraka under Kāla).

VĀHYAKĀ. The two daughters of King Sṛñjaya. They were married by Bhajamāna, a Yādava king. Three sons named Nimi, Kṛmila and Vṛṣṇi were born to them. (Matsya Purāṇa, 44: 49-50).

VAIBHRĀJAKA. A garden. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 5, that this garden is situated on the top of the mountain Supārśva which stands as a prop to Mahāmeru.

VAIDARBHĪ I. A wife of King Sagara. This king born of the Solar dynasty, had two wives named Vaidarbhī and Śaibyā. Vaidarbhī was also called Sumati and Śaibyā had another name Keśinī. Of these two, Vaidarbhī gave birth to sixtythousand sons and Śaibyā to one son named Asamañjasa. (See under Sagara).

VAIDARBHĪ II. Wife of the King Kuśa. Four sons named Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Asūrtarajas and Vasu were born to Kuśa by Vaidarbhī. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 32).

VAIDARBHI III. A king. This King gave his daughter Lopāmudrā in marriage to Agastya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137: Verse 11).

VAIDEHA I. The King of Videha.
VAIDEHA II. See under Varṇa.
VAIDEHA III. Another name of the country of Videha. It has the meaning, that which is in Videha. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 57).
VAIḌŪRYAPARVATA. A mountain which stands near Gokarṇatīrtha (holy place) in the country of Śūrpāraka (Kerala). Agastya once built a hermitage on this mountain. If one bathes in the river Narmadā, after having visited this Vaiḍūrya mountain one could attain the holy worlds. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 13).
VAIDYA. One of the sons born to Varuṇa by his wife Sunādevī. His sons Ghṛṇi and Muni fought with each other and died. (Vāyu: 84: 6-8).
VAIHĀYASA. A cavity or a sacred pit (kuṇḍa) situated near the hermitage of Naranārāyaṇas. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 3).
VAIJAYANTA I. The capital city of an asura named Timidhvaja, otherwise called Śambara. (See under Timidhvaja).
VAIJAYANTA II. Name of the flag of Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 8).
VAIJAYANTA III. A mountain standing in the middle of the sea of Milk. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9, that Brahmā comes to this mountain daily for devotion and meditation.
VAIJAYANTĪ. Two bells of Airāvata. Indra presented these two bells to Subrahmaṇya, who, in his turn, gave one of them to Viśākha. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 13).
VAIKARTANA. Another name of Karṇa.
VAIKHĀNASA. A philosopher. He had written a book known as 'Vaikhānasadharmapraśna'. Matters concerning the duties of a forest-house-holder, occupation suitable for children born of wedlocks which are in accordance with natural law as well as contrary to the natural order, etc. are dealt with in detail, in this book. A large number of quotations from Vaikhānasadharmapraśna occur in Manusmṛti.
VAIKHĀNASAS. A group of hermits of the Vedic age. There were hundred hermits in this group. (Ṛgveda, 9: 66). They were born from the finger nail of Brahmā. (Taittirīya, 1, 23).
VAIKUṆṬHA I. The dwelling place of Mahāviṣṇu.
VAIKUṆṬHA II. Another name of Mahāviṣṇu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Stanza 80, that when Viṣṇu made creation with the five elements, his powers did not have any hindrance (Kuṇṭhita) and so he got the name Vaikuṇṭha.
VAIKUṆṬHA III. A Brahmin saint who lived in the Tretāyuga. The living things got deliverance from sin, the moment they came into contact with him. This power of Vaikuṇṭha to give living things deliverance, is mentioned in Padma Purāṇa, Brahma khaṇḍa, Chapter 3, as follows:

Vaikuṇṭha once lighted a ghee-lamp in the presence of Viṣṇu in Kārttika and returned home. At that time a rat came there and began to drink the ghee. Then the lamp blazed into a flame. The rat was terrified at this, and ran away. But by the grace of Viṣṇu the rat got deliverance from all its sins.

That rat was killed by snake-bite. The men of Yama came with ropes. Instantly the messengers of Viṣṇu also came on Garuḍa. Yama's men got afraid of Viṣṇu's messengers and humbly aksed them : "For what goodness of him are you taking this great sinner to Vaikuṇṭha?" They replied: "He had blazed a lamp before the presence of Viṣṇu. That act has earned for him a place in Vaikuṇṭha. The goodness earned by lighting a lamp with devotion and love in Kārttika, could be described only by Mukunda." After that the rat was taken to Vaikuṇṭha.
VAIMĀNIKA. A holy place. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 23, that those who bathe in this holy place could freely walk about in the world of the celestial maids.
VAIMITRĀ. One of the Saptamātṛs (seven mothers). They are Vaimitrā, Kākī, Halimā, Mālinī, Bṛhadā, Āryā and Palālā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 228, Stanza 10).
VAINATEYA I. One of the prominent sons of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 10).
VAINATEYA II. Son of Vinatā. (Garuḍa).
VAINYA. Another name of emperor Pṛthu. (See under Pṛthu).
VAIRĀJA One of the Sapta Pitṛs (Seven Manes). The Sapta Pitṛs are, Vairāja, Agniṣvātta, Somapā; Gārhapatya, Ekaśṛṅga, Caturveda and Kala. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 46).
VAIRĀMAS. A caste of people in Ancient India. The people of this caste gave Dharmaputra, various kinds of jewels and other costly things as presents and then attended the Rājasūya of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 12).
VAIRĀṬA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 26, that this Vairāṭa was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Bhīmasena.
VAIŚĀKHA. A month. This month comes after the month of Caitra and before the month of Jyeṣṭha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 106, that by observing the fast of taking food only once, daily in this month, one could acquire prominence among kinsmen and people of one's own caste.
VAIŚĀKHAVRATA. See under Dhṛṣṭabuddhi.
VAIŚĀLĀ. A city. This city was founded by King Viśāla, who belonged to the dynasty of Diṣṭa. Because Nābhāga, the son of Diṣṭa had married a woman from Vaiśya caste, he also became Vaiśya. The writings of Vatsa, the son of Bhalandana of this family, are included in the Ṛgveda. The differentiation of castes was not so strict in those days as today. It is not known in what country Diṣṭa and his people Anagas lived. The Kings Karandhama, his son Avikṣit and his son Marutta of this dynasty were great and valiant. Marutta had performed both horse sacrifice (aśvamedha) and imperial consecration (Rājasūya). To Tṛṇabindu, who was in the tenth generation from Marutta, a son was born named Viśāla. This Viśāla founded a city and lived there. That city is called Vaiśālā. Many of the scholars are of opinion that this city Vaiśālā is the same as Ujjayinī. It is stated in Mahābhārata that Somadatta of the seventh generation from Viśāla had performed ten aśvamedhas (horse-sacrifices).
VAIŚĀLĀKṢA. The Law of conduct of Brahmā. Since Śiva, who is Viśālākṣa (far-sighted) had collected and abridged them, it came to be called Vaiśālākṣa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 82).

VAIŚĀLINĪ. The daughter of King Viśāla. She was married by Avikṣit, the son of Karandhama. The famous Marutta was the son born to this couple. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapters 119-126).

VAIŚAMPĀYANA.

1) General information. A prominent disciple of Vyāsa. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, that the main disciples of Vyāsa were Asita, Devala, Vaiśampāyana, Sumantu, Jaimini, Paila and some others. (See under Bhārata).

2) Other details.

(i) It was Vaiśampāyana who told the story of Bhārata composed by Vyāsa, to King Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 20).

(ii) Vaiśampāyana told Janamejaya the story of Bhārata at the instruction of Vyāsa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 22).

(iii) Vaiśampāyana praised Mahābhārata and spoke of its greatness. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 12).

(iv) Once Vaiśampāyana was overpowered by ignorance, and he killed a Brahmin. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 36, that in spite of it he attained heaven.

VAIṢṆAVACĀPA. The bow of Viṣṇu. (For further details see under Viṣṇu, para 7, sub-section 7).

VAIṢṆAVADHARMAPARVA. A sub-section of Āśvamedhika Parva in Mahābhārata.

VAIŚRAVAṆA. Kubera. (See under Kubera).

VAIŚVADEVA (M). A sacrifice. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, that a brahmin should perform this sacrifice to protect himself from hurts caused by oven, threshing stone, axe, cutting knife, and other weapons. This sacrifice could be performed in a cavity for kindling fire on the floor besmeared with cowdung and mud. It should not be done in an ordinary oven meant for cooking, in iron oven, in earthernware or on ordinary floor. As all the deities are having faces of fire, the sacrificial fire should not be kindled by fanning the flame with hand, winnow, hide of black antelope or cloth. By fanning the flame with cloth, the sacrificer will contract disease; by winnowing he would sustain loss of wealth; and death, by fanning with hand. Plums, fruits, roots, curd, ghee etc. could be used as burnt offerings. When these are not available, firewood, roots of herbs, grass etc. could be used instead. Things to be offered as burnt-offerings should be purified, first by sprinkling ghee on them. In the absence of ghee, milk, curd and water may be used. Using things which are unfit as burnt-offerings will invite bad results.

In Vaiśvadeva-sacrifice, half-burnt firewood used in cooking, should never be used. So also salts of any kind. After finishing Vaiśvadeva, Gogrāsa (giving rice to cow) also should be done.

VAIŚVĀNARA I. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7 Verse 18, that this hermit stays in the palace of Indra. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 59).

VAIŚVĀNARA II. The first son of Agni called Bhānu. In Cāturmāsya-sacrifice, this fire Vaiśvānara also is worshipped along with the fire Parjanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 16).

VAIŚVĀNARA III. One of the sons born to Kaśyapa by his wife Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

VAIVĀHIKAPARVA I. A sub-section of Ādi Parva in Mahābhārata. This Comprises chapters 192 to 198 of Ādi Parva.

VAIVĀHIKAPARVA II. A sub-section of Virāṭa Parva. This comprises Chapters 70 to 72 of Virāṭa Parva.

VAIVASVATA MANU. The seventh Manu. There is a description of Manu Vaivasvata under Manvantara.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:—Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān- Vaivasvata Manu.

2) The incarnation of Matsya and Vaivasvata Manu. See under Avatāra, Section "Matsya."

3) Wife and children. The wife of Vaivasvata Manu was Śraddhā. Many sons were born to the couple. Prominent among them were, Yama, Yamī, Aśvinīkumāras, Revanta, Sudyumna, Ikṣvāku, Nṛga, Śaryāti, Diṣṭa, Dhṛṣṭa, Karūṣa, Nariṣyanta, Nābhāga, Pṛṣadhra and Kavi.

VAIVASVATA TĪRTHA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 39, that he who bathes in this holy bath would become himself a holy tīrtha.

VAIŚYA. One of the four castes. (For further details see under Varṇa and Cāturvarṇya).

VAITĀLĪ. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 67).

VAITAṆḌA. Son of Āpa, one of the eight Vasus. Āpa had four sons named, Vaitaṇḍa, Śrama, Śānta and Dhvani. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15).

VAITARAṆĪ I. A hell. (See under Kāla, the Section Naraka).

VAITARAṆĪ II. The name of river Ganges when it flows through the world of the Manes. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 22).

VAITARAṆĪ III. A river. The prominence of this river is given below :

(i) This river stays in the court of Varuṇa and glorifies him. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 20).

(ii) This river gives remission of sins. There is a spot called Virajatīrtha, in this river. He who bathes in this holy place would shine like the moon. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 6).

VĀJA. A son of Sudhanvā, whose father was Aṅgiras. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Aṣṭaka, 1, Sūkta 111, that Sudhanvā had three sons named Ṛbhu, Vibhvan and Vāja.

VĀJAPEYA. A sacrifice.

VĀJASANEYA. A religion or religious book (scripture). At the end of Kaliyuga, people will become thieves and lose all good qualities, and moreover fifteen branches of the Veda Vājasaneya alone will be accepted as Regulations of life. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

VĀJASANEYĪ (VĀJASANEYAS). A group of Priests. Priest Yājñavalkya was one of the disciples of Yajur Veda-group of Vyāsa. Of the line of disciples, Yājñavalkya had fifteen disciples. They were called Vājasaneyins or Vājasaneyas.

The Yajus—collection received from the god Sun were divided into fifteen groups by Yājñavalkya and given to each of his disciples. From that day onwards, his disciples became famous by the name Vājasaneyas. (Br. U 7-3-7).

VĀJAŚRAVAS. A priest who was the son of Naciketas. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, 6-4-33).

VAJRA I. Son of Viśvāmitra. He was an expounder of Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 52).

VAJRA II. The son of Aniruddha, who was the grandson of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 72, that after the extermination of the Yādavas by the mausala fight (the fight with grass grown from the filings of the iron-pestle), Arjuna anointed Vajra as the King of the remaining Yādavas. When the Pāṇḍavas began the Mahāprasthāna (the great departure), Yudhiṣṭhira called Subhadrā and instructed her to look after Vajra with particular care. (M.B. Mahā Prasthāna Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 8).

VAJRABĀHU I. A notorious asura. Vajrabāhu was born of a Vidyādhara-damsel named Cañcalākṣī, when she was raped by the asura Sahasramukha. This Vajrabāhu did penance before Śiva and obtained Pāśupatāstra (a divine arrow) and an impenetrable armour. After this, he caught hold of Indra and bound him. Subrahmaṇya rescued Indra and killed Vajrabāhu. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa).

VAJRABĀHU II. A monkey. With other monkeys Vajrabāhu got on the body of Kumbhakarṇa and scratched his face and body and did much harm in the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa. Kumbhakarṇa caught hold of them and ate them. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 287, Stanza 67).

VAJRADAMṢṬRA I. A ferocious giant who was a follower of Rāvaṇa. In Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 54, mention is made that this giant was killed by Aṅgada in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle.

VAJRADAMṢṬRA II. A captain of the army of Tripurāsura. It is stated in Gaṇeśa Purāṇa that Tripurāsura gave his captain clothes, villages etc. as presents, for bringing Pātāla (netherworld) under control.

VAJRADATTA. The King of Prāgjyotiṣapura. He was the son of Bhagadatta. He attacked the neighbouring Kings and defeated them. He caught hold of the sacrificial horse of Yudhiṣṭhira, led by Arjuna, who fought with Vajradatta for three days and defeated him. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapters 65 and 74).

VAJRAJVĀLĀ. A daughter of Mahābali. This Vajrajvālā was the wife of Kumbhakarṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

VAJRAKAṆṬAKAŚĀLI. A hell. (See the part Naraka under Kāla).

VAJRAMUṢṬI. A giant. Vajramuṣṭi was the son born to Mālyavān of his wife Sundarī. Vajramuṣṭi had six brothers named Virūpākṣa, Durmukha, Suptaghna, Yajñakośa, Matta and Unmatta and a sister named Nalā. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

VAJRANĀBHA I. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 63).

VAJRANĀBHA II. A King of the line of Śrī Rāma. The genealogy is the following. Śrī Rāma-Kuśa-Aditi-Niṣadha-Nabhas-Puṇḍarīka-Kṣemadhanvā - Devānīka - Ṛkṣa-Pāriyātra-Bala-Vinda-Vajranābha. Khagaṇa was the son of Vajranābha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VAJRANĀBHA III. An asura. Prabhāvatī whom Pradyumna the son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa married, was the daughter of this asura. (For details see under Prabhāvatī).

VAJRANĀBHA IV. A King who ruled over Mathurā. He was a friend of Parīkṣit. At the request of hermit Śāṇḍilya, Uddhava talked to Vajranābha about the greatness of Bhāgavata.

VAJRĀṄGA. An asura. This asura was born to Kaśyapa of his wife Diti. Tārakāsura was born to Vajrāṅga of his wife Varāṅgī (For details see under Pārvatī, Para 2)

VAJRAPRĀSĀDA. A house in heaven. Maṇidvīpa is situated above the world of Brahmā. This is an island in the sea of Amṛta with an area of several yojanas. All the sand particles on the shore of the sea of Amṛta are jewels. Beyond the trees of jewels standing on the sea-coast, there is an iron-wall with four towers. Those who come here to see Devī (goddess) should get down from their vehicles here. Beyond this wall of iron, there are seven walls of bronze, copper, lead, brass, a mixture of five metals, silver and gold. They are called Saptaśālas. Between the walls there are several parks such as Kalpavāṭikā, Santānavāṭikā, Haricandanavṛkṣavāṭikā, Mandāravāṭikā, Pārijātavāṭikā, Kadambavāṭī etc. On passing the seven walls, several houses are seen. They are topaz-house, jacinth-house, beryl-house, diamond-house, chrysoprase-house, sapphire-house, ruby-house, emerald-house, etc. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 11).

VAJRAŚĪRṢA. A son of hermit Bhṛgu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 125, that hermit Bhṛgu had seven sons named Cyavana, Vajraśīrṣa, Śuci, Aurva, Śukra, Vareṇya and Savana.

VAJRAVEGA. A giant who was the brother of Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Tri'iras. In the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa Vajravega stood as the attendant of Kumbhakarṇa and fought with Śrī Rāma and was killed by Hanūmān. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 287).

VAJRAVIṢKAMBHA. A child of Garuḍa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 10).

VAJRĀYUDHA (Thunderbolt). The famous weapon of Indra.

1) The making of this weapon. In olden days a fierce asura named Vṛtra was born. The Kālakeyas and many other asuras became his followers. They began to create havoc in the world, and cause harm to the Devas. At last under the leadership of Indra, the Devas went to Brahmā and informed him of their grievances and requested for advice as to the way of killing Vṛtra. Brahmā told them that only with a weapon made of the bone of the hermit Dadhīca, could Vṛtrāsura be killed. The Devas went to the bank of the river Śoṇa and saw the hermit Dadhīca, who was the foremost of munificent men, doing penance there. Indra told him the purpose of their visit. He told the Devas to take his bone, if it was useful to them. Saying this he forsook his body. The Devas took the bones of the hermit and gave them to Viśvakarmā who made a powerful weapon with them and gave that to Indra. They named the weapon the 'thunderbolt'. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 100).

2) The face of Subrahmaṇya was cut. Once Indra was defeated by Narakāsura. He went to the Himālayas and hid himself there. Unable to see their King Indra, the devas went to Subrahmaṇya. When Indra knew this, he thought that Subrahmaṇya had taken possession of the world of the gods. So he came and fought with Subrahmaṇya. The thunderbolt of Indra touched the face of Subrahmaṇya and wounded him. From the blood which flowed from the face of Subrahmaṇya two noble men appeared who eventually became warriors of Subrahmaṇya. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka, Taraṅga 6).

3) Daily thunderbolt. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 5 and Aṁśa 2, Chapter 8, a process by which thunderbolt is made daily in the evening from the water particles thrown by Brahmins when they recite the spell Gāyatrī, is described.

In the evening, the fierce giants called the Mandehas wish to eat the Sun. Prajāpati had given them a curse that though their bodies would not perish they would daily meet with death. So there is a fight between these giants and the sun daily in the evening. At that time the Brahmins recite the spell Gāyatrī with the Brahma-pervading syllable 'OM', and throw up water. This water becomes the Vajra weapon, and burns the giant.

4) The thunderbolt became a tiger. The hermits Nārada and Parvata once went to the palace of the King Sṛñjaya. The King worshipped them and served them for a long time, as a result of which a son was born to him. Indra decided to lessen the superior power of these hermits. Once the son of the King, who was a mere boy, was playing in the forest. At the instruction of Indra, the thunderbold took the form of a tiger and went to the forest and killed the boy. Sṛñjaya became very sad. Nārada and Parvata brought the boy to life again and gave him to the King. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 30).

VAJRĪ I. Indra who wields the weapon Vajra (q.v)

VAJRĪ II. An eternal god concerned in offering to the manes. (Mahābhārata, Anu āsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 33).

VAKA (BAKA). See under Baka.

VĀKĀ. The daughter of the giant Mālyavān. Viśravas married her. Three sons Triśiras, Dūṣaṇa and Vidyujjihva and a daughter Anupālikā were born to the couple (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3: 8: 39-56; Vāyu Purāṇa, 70 34-50). But in mahā Bhārata, mention is made only about three wives of Viśravas, named Puṣpotkaṭā, Rākā and Mālinī

VAKA DĀLBHYA (BAKA DĀLBHYA). A hermit of Ancient India. The information obtained from Mahābhārata about this hermit is given below.

(He was a member of the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 11).

(ii) Once Vaka Dālbhya lectured to Yudhiṣṭhira about the greatness of Brāhmaṇas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 6).

(iii) On another occasion he described the welfare of eternal beings to Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 193).

(iv) Once he stopped Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who was going to Hastināpura, and conversed with him on the way. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 65).

(v) The hermit Baka Dālbhya once talked about how the kingdom of Dhṛtarāṣṭra would be made burnt offering to fire. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 41, Stanza 5).

VAKANAKHA (BAKANAKHA). One of Viśvāmitra's sons who were expounders of the Vedas. (Mahā Bhārata Anuś āsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 58).

VĀKPĀRUṢYA (Using harsh words). One of the wrongs brought under the rule of chastisement in ancient India. Without caring for the truth or falsity, a man praising another with a view to tease or offend him, is Vākpāruṣya. The teasing may be aimed at somebody with disabled members of the body or disabled organs of sense. Besides, using heart-rending words also comes under this crime. In olden days kings issued orders to fine anybody found guilty of this crime. Ordinarily the fine was 25 Paṇas. If the crime was committed against one who was below the level of the culprit the fine to be paid was only half. If harsh words were used against other women or people of a higher level the fine was double. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 258).

VAKRA. A King in Ancient India. He is known by the name Dantavaktra. (For further details see under Daṇṭavaktra).

VAKṢOGRĪVA. Viśvāmitra's son, who was an expounder of Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 53).

VALA (BALA). An asura. It is stated in Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, how Indra killed this asura.

One day Vala went to the sea for his evening worship. Devendra saw the asura, shining with the radiance of celibacy and the divine rod and deer-hide, praying on the sea-shore. Instantly Indra cut him into two with his weapon, the thunderbolt. Vala fell down motionless. Mention is made about this asura in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 4. (For further details see under Bala).

VALĀKA (BALĀKA). A forester. (For further details see under Balāka).

VALĀKĀŚVA. See under Balākāśva.

VĀLAKHILYAS. See under Bālakhilyas.

VALALA. See under Ballava.

VALGUJAṄGHA A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Brahmavādin. (See under Viśvāmitra).

VALĪMUKHA. A famous monkey in the army of Śrī Rāma. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 4, Verse 52).

VĀLIŚIKHA. See under Bāliśikha.

VALKALA. See under Balvala.

VALLABHA I. The husband of Hemaprabhā, an unchaste woman. (See under Hemaprabhā).

VALLABHA II. Son of Balākāśva. He was a righteous King. Vallabha had a son named Kuśika. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 5).

VĀLMĪKI I. A hermit who was the first among poets and the author of Rāmāyaṇa.

1) General information. Knowledge about this hermit who was the first among the poets of Bhārata, is scanty. So we have to depend mainly on some hearsay for the life history of this sage.

It is said that Vālmīki was the tenth son of Varuṇa. But in his younger age he fell into the hands of wicked people and became a wicked man, like his friends. Then his name was not Vālmīki. Being a father, he had to support his family. For this purpose he used to plunder travellers. Once he happened to catch the Saptarṣis (the seven hermits) who passed by that way. The hermits asked him whether his wife and children would share the sins he had incurred by plundering. The plunderer could not answer that unexpected question. He ran home and asked his wife and children if they would share the sins incurred by him. They were not prepared to do so. In a moment his life underwent a thorough change. He ran to the Saptarṣis and knelt before them. They imparted to the forester, knowledge of the Vedas. The forester sat under a tree and began to sing 'Rāma Rāma'. Days and months and years passed, unknown to him. He did not know that white ants had built a shelter above him. After several years the Saptarṣis returned by that way. They broke the ant-hill and took the hermit out. Because he came out of Valmīka or white-ant-hill he came to be known as Vālmīki. He built his hermitage on the bank of the river Tamasā and lived there with his disciples. It was at this place that he composed the famous poem Rāmāyaṇa. (For further details see under Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Other details.

(1) Vālmīki shines in the palace of Indra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 16).

(ii) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 27, that Vālmīki met Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was going to Hastināpura as a messenger of the Pāṇḍavas.

(iii) Sātyaki recited a poem composed by Vālmīki, after having killed Bhūriśravas in the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 143, Stanza 57).

(iv) Vālmīki told Yudhiṣṭhira of the benefits of his devotion to Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 8).

VĀLMĪKI II. One of the prominent sons of Garuḍa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 11).

VĀMĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 12).

VĀMADEVA. An ancient hermit.

1) Vāmadeva and Śala. Three sons named Śala, Dala and Bala were born to King Parīkṣit by his wife Suśobhanā, a princess of Maṇḍūka. In due course, King Parīkṣit anointed his eldest son Śala as King and went to the forest for penance.

Once Śala went to the forest to hunt. While chasing a deer, the King asked his charioteer to bring horses capable of overtaking the deer. The charioteer told the King that such horses were available at the hermitage of Vāmadeva. They went to the hermitage of Vāmadeva and got the horses on condition that they would be returned.

After the hunting, Śala reached his capital. Seeing the beauty and the vigorous nature of the horses, the King did not like to part with them. Vāmadeva sent his disciple to the court of the King to take the horses back. But the King sent him back empty-handed. Vāmadeva got angry. He came in person and demanded his horses. The King replied that Brahmins did not require such horses. While these two were quarrelling with each other, some fierce giants came there and pierced Śala with a trident and killed him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 192).

2) Other information.

(i) He was a friend of Vasiṣṭha and a priest of Daśaratha. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa. Sarga 7, Stanza 3).

(ii) Maṇḍala 4 of Ṛgveda was composed by Vāmadeva.

(iii) Vāmadeva was a hermit who had praised the Aśvinīdevas when he was in his mother's womb. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Sūkta 119).

(iv) Once Vāmadeva tried to eat the flesh of a dog because of hunger, with a view to save Brahmins. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 10, Stanza 106).

(v) He was a prominent member in the assembly of Indra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 17).

(vi) Once Vāmadeva gave advice about righteousness to King Vasumanas. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 92).

VĀMADEVA II. A King. Arjuna defeated this King during his regional conquest of the North. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 11).

VĀMADEVA III. One of the seven sons born to Manu by his wife Śatarūpā. It is stated in Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 4, that the Brahmin was born from the face, Kṣatriya from the hand, Vaiśya from the calf of the leg and Śūdra from the foot, of Vāmadeva, who was an incarnation of Śiva. This Vāmadeva who had five faces and a trident in his hand, fought with Candra, when Tārā the wife of Bṛhaspati was carried away by Candra. (Matsya Purāṇa, 4-13).

VĀMANA I. An incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu.

1) General information. There are ten main incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu. Of these, the incarnation of Vāmana is the fifth.

2) Two Vāmanas. Two different stories occur in the Purāṇas about the incarnation of Vāmana. One story is about how Mahāviṣṇu took the incarnation of Vāmana and thrust Mahābali an asura, down to the netherworld. This story is more widely known. In the second story the place of Mahābali is given to the asura called Dhundhu. This is the main difference. For a comparative study, both stories are given below:

a) The first story of the incarnation of Vāmana. The devas (gods) such as Indra and the others were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi and the asuras (demons) such as Mahābali and others, by his wife Diti. The Daityas (asuras) began to harm and harass the Devas to a great extent. Once Aditi, the mother of the Devas, complained to Kaśyapa about this. He advised her to take the fast called 'Payovrata' fixing the image of Mahāviṣṇu in her heart and that he will take birth through her as Vāmana and destroy Mahābali. According to the advice of her husband, Aditi began to take Payovrata, at the end of which Mahāviṣṇu appeared before her and asked her what her wish was. She told Viṣṇu, of her grievances and Viṣṇu consoled her and said "You have invoked me by your prayer and fast for the safety of your sons. So I will enter your womb through the penance of Kaśyapa and take birth as your son and rescue your sons."

Mahāviṣṇu disappeared. Aditi worshipped her husband with devotion. By contemplation Kaśyapa knew everything. He infused the energy he had acquired by penance into Aditi, who gave birth to a son. The birth took place on the twelfth day of the month of Bhādrapada, in the bright lunar fortnight at the auspicious moment called Abhijit, in the star of Śrāvaṇa. The infant had four hands. While Kaśyapa and Aditi were looking on, the infant changed its form and became a dwarfish Brahmin boy. The Devas brought presents to the child. The Sun taught him the spell called Sāvitrīmantra. Bṛhaspati gave the Brahmastring. Kaśyapa gave the string worn round the waist. The earth gave the hide of a black antelope. Soma the Vanaspati gave a rod; Aditi gave the cloth over the privities, the sky an umbrella, the seven hermits gave Kuśa-grass, Brahmā gave a waterpot, Sarasvatī gave a rosary and Kubera gave a pot.

At that time, the powerful Mahābali had brought the three worlds of heaven, earth and Pātāla (the netherworld) under his control. That Asura King performed a horse-sacrifice with the help of a Bhārgava Brahmin. Hearing about it Vāmana started for the place of sacrifice. Mahābali was performing the sacrifice at a place called Bhṛgukacchaka on the North bank of river Narmadā. The priests who were performing the rites and ceremonies of the sacrifice saw Vāmana coming slowly to the sacrificial hall. They wondered whether it was the Sun, Sanatkumāra or Agni (Fire) coming to see the sacrifice. While they were standing thus, Vāmana with his umbrella, rod and water pot filled with water entered the sacrificial hall. Mahābali welcomed Vāmana and asked him the purpose of his visit. Vāmana said "Oh King! Your words are sweet. Noble Asura! give me three feet of ground which I measure with my feet. That is all what I want."

Mahābali agreed. The teacher-priest Śukra felt some doubts regarding the identity of Vāmana. So he secretly told Mahābali that the boy Vāmana was none other than Mahāviṣṇu and as such, he should not give any promise. But Mahābali had already given the promise. He refused to go back upon his words. The priest Śukra got angry at this and cursed Mahābali thus. "You boast that you are wise and learned. But you are disobedient, slow-witted and unwise. So all your prosperities will be destroyed."

Though he was cursed, he did not deviate from the path of truth. He gave the promised ground to Vāmana by pouring water with the water brought in golden pot by his queen Vindhyāvalī. The names, Aśanā and Koṭarā also are used in the Purāṇas for Vindhyāvalī the wife of Mahābali. She came out for the purpose wearing golden ornaments. Mahābali himself washed the feet of Vāmana, who instantly began to grow and became large beyond imagination. Everybody on the spot was amazed at the unimaginable bigness of Vāmana. On that huge figure, Mahābali saw the priest, the performers of sacrificial rites, the sacrificial hall, the universe, the elements, the qualities the senses, the mind, the individual spirits, and at the feet of the figure the world Rasātala. He saw the earth on its feet, mountains below the knees, birds on its knees, the Maruts on its thighs, evening on its clothes, the Prajāpatis on its privities, the noble and mighty asuras on its loins, the sky on its navel, the oceans on its stomach, Dharma (duty) in its heart, rightness and truth on its breasts, Mahālakṣmī holding lotus on its chest, songs of Sāman and all other voices in its neck, all the gods beginning with Indra on its hands, the points (directions) on its ears, the ether on its head, the clouds on its hair, breaths in its nose, the sun in its eyes, fire on its face, the Vedas in its words, Varuṇa in its tongue, day and night agreement and disagreement in its winking and anger on its forehead. In its touch there was desire, in its radiance there was water, in its buttocks lawlessness, sacrifice in its steps, death in its shadow, illusion in its laugh, medicines in its hairs, rivers in its veins, stones in its nails, Brahmā in its intelligence, hermits, devas etc. in its life-breaths. Thus the figure was seen by Mahābali. Vāmana had trodden on the whole of the earth, which was completely under the cont ol of Mahābali, with one foot, filled the whole of the sky with his large body and the four points were filled with his hands. The second step was put on Maharloka, Janaloka and Tapoloka (three worlds). No spot was left in the universe for a third step.

Vāmana said :—"You have given me three feet of ground. I have measured two feet of ground. Show me the place to measure the third step. I have measured the earth with one step and the heaven with the second step. You have seen it. If you cannot keep your promise you had better go down to Pātāla." Bali requested him to place the third step on his head. Vāmana placed his foot on the head of Mahābali and thrust him down to Pātāla.

Vāmana brought Indra to the spot and anointed him as the ruler of heaven, in the presence of all the gods and hermits. Indra sent Vāmana with the Lokapālas (Indra, Agni, Yama and Varuṇa) in a divine Vimāna to the world of Viṣṇu. (Bhāgavata Skandha 8).

b) The second story of the incarnation of Vāmana. Dhundhu, an asura boy, was born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. That asura did penance and pleased Brahmā. He made a request that he should not be killed by Indra and the other gods or anybody else. Brahmā, who was pleased at his penance, gave him the boon he asked. The boy Dhundhu, at the beginning of the fourth Kaliyuga, during the period of Hiraṇyakaśipu, went to heaven and defeating Indra and the other Devas, established his rule there as Indra. The mighty Hiraṇyakaśipu was travelling on the mountain Mandara as an official under Dhundhu.

The defeated and grief-stricken Devas went to the world of Brahmā and lived there. Dhundhu, who knew this, wanted to drive them out of that place also. He requested Śukra, the priest and teacher of asuras, to tell him the means of doing it.

Śukra said. "Devendra was enabled to enter the presence of Brahmā, because he had performed one hundred horse-sacrifices. "Hearing this, Dhundhu, with the permission of the teacher Śukra, began to perform sacrifice in the holy place called Prācīna tīrtha.

Hearing that Dhundhu had begun the horse-sacrifice, Indra and the Devas trembled with fear and, leaving the world of Brahmā, went to the world of Viṣṇu and prayed for protection. Bhagavān came to know of everything and consoled them and sent them back. After this Mahāviṣṇu took the form of a Vāmana and jumped into the Devikājala and lay afloat like a piece of dry wood. Dhundhu and the hermits saw by chance, Vāmana sinking and coming up in the water. They took the Vāmana-Brahmin out of water and asked him how he had fallen in water. Vāmana replied with shiver:—"In the family of Varuṇa there was a Brahmin named Prabhāsa, who was a scholar. I am Gatibhāsa, the younger of his two sons. After the death of father, I requested my brother to divide the property of our father. My brother quoted several rules and said that I was not entitled to get any portion of my father's wealth. I spoke against him and getting angry he caught me by my hair and threw me into the river. It is a year since I, being not able to swim, began to sink and come up in this river. Thus you have seen me here."

The Bhārgavas who were present there, requested Dhundhu thus. "Oh! King of the asuras! Be pleased to give this boy a well-furnished house, servant-maids and plenty of wealth." Hearing this Dhundhu said to Vāmana. "I will provide you with wealth, servant-maids, house, gold, cows, land, clothes etc."

Vāmana humbly said to Dhundhu "Oh Lord! I do not want any wealth. It is my desire for wealth that has brought me to this plight. I request you to give me only three feet of ground."

As soon as the asura-King complied with his request, Vāmana began to grow like the moon. He assumed the shape of Trivikrama to measure each of the three worlds with a foot. In two steps he measured all the worlds. Vāmana whose body was bigger than Mahāmeru became angry when he did not see place to measure the third step, and fell on Dhundhu. By this heavy fall there appeared a great cavity thirty thousand yojanas deep. Bhagavān Viṣṇu took the asura Dhundhu and threw him into that deep pit with a mighty force, and by a shower of dust he filled the cavity.

Indra with the Devas occupied the world of Gods. Leaving the asura King in the sea of dust, Bhagavān jumped into the river Kālindī and disappeared. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 78).

VĀMANA II. One of the eight elephants supporting the universe. This elephant was one of the four sons of Irāvatī. Airāvata, Supratīka and Añjana were the other three. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3 : 7 : 292). This Vāmana was the conveyance of a famous giant in the army of Ghaṭotkaca during the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 56).

VĀMANA III. A holy place situated on the borders of Kurukṣetra. By bathing in the particular spot called Viṣṇupāda, in this holy place and worshipping Vāmana, one could enter the world of Viṣṇu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 86, Stanza 103).

VĀMANA IV. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 13, that those who worship Hari (Viṣṇu) in this place will never become miserable.

VĀMANA V. A mountain in the Krauñca Island. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12).

VĀMANABHAṬṬABĀṆA. A great Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 15th century. He has written several poems and plays. His poetic works are 'Nalābhyudaya' and 'Raghunāthacarita'. The former consists of eight Kāṇḍas and the latter, thirty Kāṇḍas.

It is stated that Vāmanabhaṭṭabāṇa was the teacher of Vidyāraṇya. Besides these two major works, he had written several poems and dramas. Imitating the poem 'Meghasandeśa' of Kālidāsa, he had written a poetic work of the same type called 'Haṁsasandeśa'. A minor Drama called Śṛṅgārabhūṣaṇa was written by this Vāmana. It is said that this drama was acted at Vijayanagara. The two plays, named—Pārvatīpariṇaya and 'Kanakarekhā' were also written by the same poet.

VĀMANAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa).

VĀMANIKĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 23).

VAṀKṢU. A river which is famous in the Purāṇas. The low-caste people who lived on the basin of this river, came to the Rājasūya (imperial consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 17).

VAṀŚĀ. A daughter born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Pradhā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 45).

VAṀŚAGULMA. A holy bath. The rivers Śoṇa and Narmadā start from this bath. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 9, it is stated that by visiting this holy bath one could obtain the fruits of performing a horse-sacrifice.

VAṀŚAMŪLAKA. A holy place situated on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 41, that if a bath is taken in this holy place one could bring about the uplift of one's race.

VAṀŚĀVALĪ. (GENEALOGY). The genealogy of the characters in the Purāṇas is given separately at the end of this book.

VĀMYA. Name of the horse of the hermit Vāmadeva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 41).

VANAPARVA. An important Parva in Mahābhārata.

VĀNAPRASTHA. (House-holder in the forest). One of the four stages of life. (See under Āśrama).

VĀNARA (MONKEY). Monkeys are given a prominent place in the Purāṇas. Considering them as born in the family of Hanūmān, an ardent devotee of Śrī Rāma, some worship monkeys. It is mentioned in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa that the monkeys got a prominent place first among the gods and spirits. It is stated in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 33, that the leaders of the monkeys were Bāli, Sugrīva, Aṅgada, Mainda, Gavaya, Dvivida, Gavākṣa, Gaja, Śarabha, Sūryākṣa, Hanūmān, Vidyunmālī, Vīrabāhu, Subāhu, Nala, Kumuda, Jāmbavān, Tāra, Supāṭala, Sunetra, Nīla and Dadhivaktra.

The social life of the monkeys, is described as follows in the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 33. "Mahendra mountain, the Himālayas, the Vindhya mountain, the peaks of Kailāsa and Śveta mountain, Mandara mountain etc. are the places mostly inhabited by monkeys. On the mountains shining like the rising sun, on the east of the western ocean also monkeys live. The Monkeys which inhabit black soil are blue in colour. Monkeys which live in red arsenic caves are yellow in colour. Those which live in Mahā Meru and Dhūmra (smoky) mountain have the colour of the rising sun and are drunkards."

VANASPATI I. Those trees which produce fruits without flowering are called Vanaspati according to Manusmṛti Chapter 1, Stanza 47. Atti (fig tree) is an example. (Apuṣpāḥ phalavanto ye te vanaspatayas smṛtāḥ).

VANASPATI II. One of the seven sons of the King Ghṛtapṛṣṭha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

VĀNAVA. A country famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 54).

VANAVĀSIKA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 58).

VANĀYU I. A son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa of his wife Danu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva Chapter 65, Stanza 25, that he was the most prominent of the ten sons of Danu.

VANĀYU II. A son born to Urvaśī from Purūravas. The sons of Urvaśī were Āyus, Dhīmān, Amāvasu, Dṛḍhāyu Śatāyu and Vanāyu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 25).

VANĀYU III. A country in ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 56.

VAÑCULA. A bird. The cry of this bird, is believed to forebode victory. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa Sarga 69, Stanza 22).

VANDANA. A hermit mentioned in Ṛgveda. Once this hermit was pushed into a well by Asuras. But he was saved by the Aśvinidevas. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 1, Sūkta 116).

VANDANĀ. A river famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).

VANDĪ (BANDĪ, VĀNDĪNA). A scholar and scientist in the palace of King Janaka. He defeated the hermit Kahoḍaka in an argument and dipped him in water. (For further details see under Aṣṭāvakra).

VĀNDĪNA. See under Vandī.

VANEYU. A King who was the grandson of emperor Pūru and the son of Rudrāśva. Vaneyu was born to Rudrāśva by a celestial woman named Miśrakeśī. Ten sons named Vaneyu, Ṛceyu, Kakṣeyu, Kṛpaṇeyu, Sthaṇḍileyu, Jaleyu, Tejeyu, Satyeyu, Dharmeyu and Santateyu, were born to this celestial woman. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 8).

VAṄGA. An important state in ancient India. The present name of this country is Bengal. Several statements occur in the Purāṇas about Vaṅga.

The following are the statements about Vaṅga given in the Mahābhārata.

(i) Arjuna visited this country during his pilgrimage. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 9).

(ii) Bhīmasena attacked Vaṅga. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 23).

(iii) The Kings of Vaṅga visited Yudhiṣṭhira with presents. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 18).

(iv) Karṇa conquered this country during his regional conquest. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Stanza 8).

(v) In the Bhārata battle the King of Vaṅga confronted Ghaṭotkaca and was defeated. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 6).

(vi) Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa conquered the country of Vaṅga. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 15).

(vii) Paraśurāma exterminated the Kṣatriyas of Vaṅga. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 12).

(viii) The low castes of Vaṅga attacked the sacrificial horse led by Arjuna who killed every one of them. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 29).

VAṄGṚDA. An asura. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 1, Sūkta 10, that the Kings Atithigva and Ṛjiśvā, with their armies surrounded the cities of the asuras Karañja, Parṇaya and Vaṅgṛda and that Indra helped the two Kings.

VAÑJULA. See under Vidura II.

VAPUS I. A daughter of Dakṣa. Dharmadeva married her. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 7).

VAPUS II. A celestial maid. She made a futile attempt to hinder the penance of the hermit Durvāsas, and by the curse of the hermit she had to take birth as the daughter of Kundhara by Menakā in the next birth. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 1, 49, 56; 2, 41).

VAPUṢMĀN. Son of Saṅkrandana, the King of Vidarbha. Dama, a famous King of Diṣṭa dynasty carried away by stealth Sumanā, the daughter of Cāruvarmā, the King of Daśārṇa, in consequence of which Vapuṣmān and Dama became enemies.

Vapuṣmān waited for an opportunity to take revenge and when a convenient moment came, he killed Nariṣyanta the father of Dama. Indrasenā the mother of Dama told him of his father's murder and then jumping into the funeral pyre of her husband, she died. Because of grief at the loss of his parents and anger towards the slayer, Dama started with a mighty army and engaged Vapuṣmān in a fierce battle. He killed Vapuṣmān in the battle and with his blood he made offerings to the spirits of his parents. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 133).

VAPUṢMATĪ. Daughter of the King of Sindhu. She became the wife of Mārutta. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 133).

VAPUṢṬAMĀ. The prominent queen of King Janamejaya. She was the daughter of Suvarṇavarmā, the King of Kāśī. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 2). Vapuṣṭamā had two sons, Śatānīka and Śaṅkukarṇa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 86).

VARADA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

VARADĀNA. A holy place near Dvārakā. It was here that Durvāsas gave Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa boons (Vara). From that day this became a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, that those who take bath in this holy place would obtain the fruits of giving a thousand cows as alms.

VARADĀSAṄGAMA. A holy place. Those who take bath in this holy place would obtain the fruits of giving a thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 35).

VARĀHA. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 17, that this hermit stayed in the palace of Yudhiṣṭhira.

VĀRĀHA II. A holy place in the middle of Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 88, that Mahāviṣṇu stayed in this place for a while in the shape of Varāha (Boar) and that those who bathe in this holy bath would obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Agniṣṭoma.

VARĀHA III. (Boar). One of the ten incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu.

1) Need for this incarnation. Jaya and Vijaya, two doorkeepers of Mahāviṣṇu showed disrespect towards the famous hermits Sanaka and others who went to visit Mahāviṣṇu. The angry hermits cursed them to take birth as asuras. Accordingly Jaya and Vijaya took birth as the two asuras Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu and were born from Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Diti.

Even their birth itself was inauspicious. Once, while Kaśyapa was carrying on evening worship, his wife was filled with libid. She embraced Kaśyapa. Because she got pregnancy in an inauspicious moment, two asura sons were born. At the time of their birth darkness spread over the whole of the world, and some ill omens were seen. The Devas (gods) trembled.

The elder son was called Hiraṇyākṣa and the second son was called Hiraṇyakaśipu. As Hiraṇyākṣa grew up he began to quarrel with the Devas. When the fight grew fierce, he picked up the earth in his hands as a ball and went under water. There was left only water. The Devas went to Mahāviṣṇu and prayed to him in order to get the earth back.

At this time Manu Svāyambhuva, the son of Brahmā, was living with his father looking after his welfare. The father, who was pleased with the services of his son said. "My dear son, you should worship Devī, who will be pleased with your devotion and will bless you. If she is pleased with you, you will become a famous Prajāpati." Hearing the words of Brahmā, Svāyambhuva worshipped Devī with ardent devotion, deep meditation and severe vows and penance, at which Jagadambā was pleased. She appeared before him and asked him what boon he wanted. Manu requested that he should be permitted to carry on creation without any obstruction. Devī gave him permission. Manu returned to his father Brahmā and said. "Father, point out to me a solitary place. I will sit there and create subjects by the blessings of Devī." Only when he heard the request of his son, did Brahmā begin to think about the exigency of providing his son with such a place. For, the earth was completely under water. For a long time even Brahmā was being subjected to much inconvenience to carry on creation. Only Bhagavān Ādi Nārāyaṇa (Viṣṇu) could do anything in this matter. So Brahmā with the Manus, hermits and others began to meditate on Mahāviṣṇu.

2) Incarnation. Instantly the young one of a Boar jumped out of the nose of Brahmā through his breath. That divine figure of Boar stood in the air and began to grow. Within a few moments, it became a colossal Being. It grew up as big as an elephant. Soon it became as large as a mountain. Seeing this, Brahmā and the others stood in amazement. The Boar made a grunt in a loud roaring sound. The people of Janaloka, Satyaloka etc. understood that it was the sound of Mahāviṣṇu. They raised glory and praise to Bhagavān, who heard all these praises, but without condescending to tell anything, looked at all of them with grace and love, and with a mighty force jumped into the sea. It was immensely troubled by the manes of God Almighty. Varuṇa prayed to him to save him from them. Bhagvān folded his mane and went down to the deep water and made a search for the earth. The Boar walked smelling and snorting and found out the earth. He slowly lifted it on his tusks and started from there. On the way, the fierce and wicked Hiraṇyākṣa hindered him. Bhagavān Viṣṇu used his club Nandaka and killed Hiraṇyākṣa. It was besmeared with his blood; Mahāviṣṇu came up to the surface of water with the earth. He set the earth firm over the water. Thus Brahmā gave Manu a place in the earth which floated on the water like a lotus-leaf, and empowered him to perform creation.

3) Incarnation of Boar again. The goddess Earth, the deity of earth which was raised to the surface of water, fell in love with Mahāviṣṇu and embraced him. He embraced her in return. These mutual embraces continued for one complete Devavarṣa (year of God) and consequently the goddess Earth became tired and weak and unconscious. So the earth slid down a little under water. Bhagavān took the form of a Boar again and lifted the earth to its original place and returned to Vaikuṇṭha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 3; Devī Bhāgavata Skandhas 8 and 9; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 5; Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapter 91).

VARĀHA IV. A mountain near Girivraja, the capital city of Magadha. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 2).

VARĀHAKA. A serpent born in the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burned in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 18).

VARĀHAKARṆA. A Yakṣa (demi god). This Yakṣa remains in the palace of Kubera. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 16).

VARĀHĀMBA. An asura. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva. Chapter 227, Stanza 52.

VARĀHA PURĀṆA .See under Purāṇa.

VARAMAṆI. A beetle made of jewel. Brahmā had given a boon that only he who fought with this jewel-beetle in his mouth could kill Pātāla Rāvaṇa. This secret was known only to the giants, such as Rāvaṇa. and others. This Varamaṇi was kept in an underground cell of a harem near the Kālī temple in the Pātāla.

The battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa was going on. Hanūmān made a fort coiling his tail like a spring and Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa stayed inside this fort. While they were sleeping, Pātāla Rāvaṇa made a tunnel under the earth and carried away Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. Vibhīṣaṇa knew this, only next day morning. Instantly he sent Hanūmān to Pātāla. In accordance with the advice of Vibhīṣana, Hanūmān went directly to the cell in the harem, took Varamaṇi and put it in his mouth. Then he fought with Pātāla Rāvaṇa and defeated him. Thus with the help of the Varamaṇi Hanūmān rescued Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

VARAṆĀ. A river famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vāmana Purāṇa that the river Varaṇā which flowed from the right leg and the river Asī, which started from the left leg of Bhagavān, who lies in contemplation at Prayāga, are two holy rivers. (See under Vārāṇasī).

VĀRAṆA. A country in ancient Bhārata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 31, that the army of the Kauravas had surrounded this country.

VĀRAṆĀSĪ (VĀRĀṆASĪ). Kāśī.

(Before reading the information given here refer to the details given about Kāśī under Kāśī and Divodāsa).

1) The name Vāraṇāsī. Formerly this place was known as Prayāga. Later it got the name Vāraṇāsī and then Kāśī. The name Vāraṇāsī is originated from two rivers. Bhagavān Yogaśāyī who stays in Prayāga was born from a portion of Mahāviṣṇu. From the right leg of Yogaśāyī the river Varaṇā started and from his left leg the river Asī started. These two rivers are praised and worshipped all over the world. The temple of Yogaśāyī is situated in the place between these two rivers. As the place is situated between Varaṇā and Asī it is called Vāraṇāsi. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

2) Other information.

(i) Bhīṣma went to Kāśī and took Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā, the daughters of the King of Kāśī, to his kingdom by force. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 102, Stanza 3).

(ii) Vāraṇāsī is a holy place of pilgrimage. By bathing in Kapilāhrada, a holy bath there, and worshipping Śaṅkara, one could obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Rājasūya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 78).

(iii) The middle part of Vāraṇāsī is called Avimukta. Those who forsake their lives at Avimukta will obtain heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 79).

(iv) Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa made Vāraṇāsī a prey to fire. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Stanza 76).

(v) A very great scholar named Tulādhāra Vaiśya once lived in Vāraṇasī. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 261, Stanza 41).

(vi) Once, in ancient days, Śiva imparted to the hermit Jaigīṣu at this place, the eight miraculous attainments such as aṇimā, garimā etc. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 37).

(vii) Vāraṇāsī is equal to the capital city of Indra

(Amarāvatī). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 16).

(viii) In ancient days a hermit named Saṁvartta used to come here daily to worship Śiva. It was at this place that the emperor Marutta accepted the hermit Saṁvartta as his priest. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapters 6 and 7).

VĀRAṆĀVATA. The place where Duryodhana built the wax-house for the Pāṇḍavas. It is believed that the modern village Varṇava, 19 miles north east to Meerut in North India, is the place where this Purāṇic Vāraṇāvata stood. Information about Vāraṇāvata found in Mahābhārata, is given below ;

(i) Once the ministers of Dhṛtarāṣṭra made a consultation about the festival in this city. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 192, Stanza 3).

(ii) Vāraṇāvata was one of the five villages requested for by the Pāṇḍavas, on their return after their life in the forest. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 19).

(iii) Yuyutsu, the son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, carried on a battle here for six months. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 58).

VARĀṄGĪ I. The wife of Vajrāṅga, an asura. (For more details see under Pārvatī, Para 2).

VARĀṄGĪ II. Wife of Saṁyāti, a King of the Lunar dynasty. The father of this Varāṅgī was Dṛṣadvān. A son named Ahaṁyāti was born to Varāṅgī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 14).

VARARUCI. An ancient Indian scholar in astronomy and astrology. (Some details regarding Vararuci are given under Bhartṛhari).

1) Birth. It is stated in Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpīṭhalambaka, Taraṅga 1, that Vararuci was the rebirth of a Gaṇanāyaka (guard of Śiva) named Puṣpadanta. Once Śiva happened to tell Pārvatī some previous stories of the Vidyādharas. Puṣpadanta eavesdropped and heard everything. Pārvatī understood this and cursed him to become a man. Accordingly Puṣpadanta was born in the city of Kauśāmbī under the name Vararuci or Kātyāyana. (For details about the curse see under Guṇāḍhya).

2) Of sharp intelligence. Vararuci was born as the son of the Brahmin Somadatta at Kauśāmbī. Agniśikha was another name of Somadatta. Vasudattā was the mother of Vararuci. In the previous birth, Vasudattā was a hermit maid. Due to a curse she lost her hermit-maidhood and took birth as a woman under the name Vasudattā and became the wife of Somadatta.

As his father died in his childhood, Vararuci was brought up by his mother. She was in great penury after the death of her husband. One day two travellers came to her house. While they were sitting on the veranda, the sound of a conch was heard. Then the mother called Vararuci and said to him. "Son, the dance of Nanda, the friend of your father, is about to begin." Vararuci requested his mother to let him go to the temple and see the dance so that he might learn it. Hearing this, the guests were amazed. How can one learn dance by seeing only once? That was the doubt in the minds of the travellers. "Vararuci could learn anything by hearing only once", his mother said. As a test, they recited to him a portion from the Vedas. Vararuci repeated the portion to them without any mistake. After this the guests took the boy and showed him the dance and brought him back. The boy performed every item of the dance he saw, before the guests. They were immensely pleased.

3) Getting a teacher. The guests had actually been searching for a boy who could understand anything at the first hearing. There was reason for it.

In the great city of Nandarāja, there was a great Brahmin named Śaṅkarasvāmī. He had two sons named Varṣa and Upavarṣa. Both married and lived in separate houses. By and by Varṣa became cruel and wicked and poor. Upavarṣa became learned and wealthy. The rainy season approached. In those days it was a custom for women to make a sweet food of rice flour with sugar and give it to cruel Brahmins. It was to prevent the extreme cold in the winter and the extreme heat in the summer from affecting them severely. The wife of Upavarṣa made this sweet food and gave it to Varṣa. When he brought it home, his wife scolded him. Varṣa felt very sorry because of his foolishness. He gave up all his desires and began to worship Kumārasvāmī. Kumārasvāmī was pleased with him and blessed him with all kinds of knowledge. Kumārasvāmī had ordered him to teach all of this knowledge to one who could learn at first hearing. From that day onwards Varṣa had been waiting for a disciple who could learn at first hearing.

During this period there lived two Brahmins named Devasvāmī and Karambhaka in the city of Vetasapura. They were friends. A son was born to each of them. The son of Devasvāmī was named Vyālī. The name of the son of Karambhaka was Indradatta. When Vyālī was a child, his father died. Seeing their grief the father of Indradatta left the country. Both of the boys, having nobody to look after them, went to perform penance, before Subrahmaṇyasvāmī. Subrahmaṇya ordered them in their sleep to go to Varṣa in Pāṭalikā, the city of King Nanda, and to learn every thing from him. The boys immediately went to the city of King Nanda and enquired about the teacher Varṣa. The people told them that Varṣa was a fool. They were sorry to hear it. Still they did not turn back. They reached the house of Varṣa, and entered the house which was the abode of rats and bats, the walls of which were crumbling due to rain as it had not been thatched for a long time. The courtyard was full of Cassiatora plants. Inside the house, here and there on the floor, Cyperus-grass was growing. The wife of Varṣa who was in utter penury stood up and welcomed them. She told them about her husband. "He is waiting for a disciple who would learn everything at first hearing." Vyālī and Indradatta agreed to bring such a disciple and they started on a journey in search of such a boy. They were the two travellers who came to the house of Vararuci.

Vyālī said all about these things to the mother of Vararuci. She was very glad and said. "Everything fits well. At the birth of my son, an ethereal voice said : "At first hearing he will learn everything. He will learn everything from the teacher Varṣa. He will publish works in grammar and astronomy". If he has interest in good things he will get the name Vararuci. So I had been thinking how and where to find this teacher Varṣa."

Next morning, with the permission of his mother, Vararuci started for the house of Varṣa, with Vyālī and Indradatta. They reached the house of Varṣa. Next morning they smeared and purified the floor and the three sincere and simple disciples sat facing the east. The teacher Varṣa recited to them the divine spell 'Om', and instantly all the Vedas and the ancillaries of Vedas made their appearance. The teacher commenced teaching. The three disciples learned, Vararuci hearing only once, Vyālī hearing twice and Indradatta hearing thrice. Hearing these divine recitations and repetitions which were not to be heard anywhere else, Brahmins crowded to the place. King Nanda of Pāṭalīputra praised the teacher Varṣa and sent him plenty of wealth and conferred on him ranks and privileges.

4) Marriage. Vararuci learned everything from the teacher Varṣa. He went with his friends once to see the Indra-festival. There, Vararuci happened to see Upakośā the daughter of Upavarṣa and fell in love with her. That night he did not sleep. At last he slowly closed his eyes. A divine woman clad in white garments appeared before him. It seemed to him that the woman said to him. "You need not worry in this matter. Upakośā was your wife in the previous birth. She will marry only you. I am Sarasvatī who pervades your body." Vararuci woke up. Next day the elders came to know of this, and gave her in marriage to Vararuci.

5) Vararuci becoming a Minister. Education was finished. It was time for Vyālī and Indradatta to give presents to the teacher Varṣa. The teacher demanded a crore of Vilkas (a Venetian ducat used for neck-ornament). They were not having so much wealth. They went with Vararuci to Nanda, the King of Ayodhyā, and the Brother-in-law of Vararuci. When they reached Ayodhyā, they heard that the King had just died. Indradatta said "By the practice of contemplation I shall enter the body of the King. Vararuci should come and beg money of me. Till my return Vyālī must keep my body."

"The spirit of Indradatta immediately entered the King's body. The dead King rose up. People were struck with wonder. They celebrated a festival. Vyālī kept the body of Indradatta within a temple. Vararuci went to the presence of the King and begged for a crore of Vilkas. The King called his minister Śakaṭāla and told him to give Vararuci a crore of Vilkas. Śakaṭāla, who was an intelligent man, felt some doubt in the coming to life of the King. He decided that some one might have entered the body of the King. He ordered that every dead body in the city should be burnt. Along with the bodies, the body of Indradatta also was taken by force from Vyālī. At this time the King compelled Śakaṭāla to give the beggar Vilkas. But till the dead bodies were burnt, Śakaṭāla did not obey him. Because his body was burnt Indradatta had to remain in the body of the King. Śakaṭāla gave Vararuci the required amount. But of what use was the money ? Indradatta had become the King. The King and Vyālī made a secret consultation, as a result of which Vararuci was made the Prime Minister. Śakaṭāla was charged with Brahmahatyā and was put into a dungeon with his hundred sons. They were allowed fried and powdered grain and a 'ceratu' (a measure) of water as food for each.

Śakaṭāla said to his sons. "My sons, all of us cannot live with so little food. The most intelligent one among us should live by eating the whole food, to take revenge on the Yoga Nanda King. Who will do so?"

Sons:—We don't think that we are powerful to do that. So you must live, father !

So Śakaṭāla ate the whole food and lived while his sons, one by one, died of hunger before his eyes. Śakaṭāla sat in the middle of the Skeletons with the sole purpose of taking revenge. Vyālī gave the present to the teacher and went home.

Indradatta and Vararuci lived as king and minister.

6) Loss of ministership. By and by Indradatta had fallen into bad ways. The subjects were beset with famine. The people hated the king and the minister. They made a cry to bring Śakaṭāla back. They obtained the permission of the king and brought Śakaṭāla out of the dungeon. Śakaṭāla knew that so long as Vararuci was alive, he could do nothing to the King Yoga Nanda. So he decided to wait for an opportunity, and accepted an office under Vararuci. One day Yoga Nanda went out for a walk. He saw in the Ganges the palm of a hand with five fingers. He called Vararuci and asked him what the sight was. Vararuci showed two fingers in that direction. Immediately the palm of the hand disappeared. The King was amazed at this and asked him for its meaning. He said "The meaning of showing fingers was that if five men unite together, they could accomplish anything. I showed two fingers, to mean that if two men unite together they also could achieve anything." At this reply the king was much pleased and Śakaṭāla felt miserable at the intelligence of Vararuci.

On another occasion the King saw his wife looking at a Brahmin guest through the window. He got angry and ordered that Brahmin to be killed. When that Brahmin was being taken to the scaffold, a dead fish, placed for sale, laughed loud. The king asked Vararuci for its reason. Saying that he had to consider about it before giving a reply, he went out and meditated upon Sarasvatī. Devī appeared and told him. "If you climb up to the top of this palm tree and sit there to night you will understand why the dead fish laughed." Vararuci did as he was told. A fierce giantess came there with her young ones. The children began to ask her for food. The giantess told them that they would get the flesh of a Brahmin next day, and that he was not killed that day because the dead fish had laughed. The young ones asked her why the dead fish laughed. The giantess said "The wives of the kings are not chaste. In all harems men live in the guise of women. Without stopping this the king was going to kill an innocent Brahmin. That is why the dead fish laughed."

Vararuci, who heard this conversation, got down when the giantess was gone. He went to the king and told him why the fish laughed. The king made a sudden search in the harem. He found out some men in the dress of women. The king honoured Vararuci and released the Brahmin. One day an artist who drew portraits, came to the palace. He drew a portrait of the king and the queen and placed it before the king. The picture was life-like. The king gave the artist several presents. Once Vararuci happened to enter the bed-room of the king. He saw the picture on the wall. The picture was beautiful. Still, considering the appearance of each part of her body the queen ought to have a mole on her loin. Vararuci put that mole in the picture. When Vararuci had gone the king entered the room and saw the mole in the picture. The king asked his servant, who that person was who had put that mole in the picture. He replied that it was Vararuci. The king thought that Vararuci had nocturnal connections with the queen. Perhaps it was in this way that Vararuci found out men in the dress of women. The king called Śakaṭāla to him and told him to kill Vararuci secretly. Śakaṭāla felt pity on Vararuci and hid him in a place.

Vararuci told Śakaṭāla "No body can kill me. My friend is a giant. He will come to me the moment I think of him. If I tell him he will swallow the whole world." When he heard this, Śakaṭāla desired to see the giant. Vararuci thought of him and the giant appeared. Śakaṭāla was terribly afraid of the giant. Vararuci made him disappear. Śakaṭāla asked him how he got the friendship of the giant. Vararuci replied.

"While you were in the dungeon, a city chief was disappearing daily from this city. The king asked me to find out the reason. One night, while I was walking through the city, I saw this giant. He asked me. "Who is the most beautiful woman in this city?" I replied "Whoever falls in love with a woman, to him, that woman is the most beautiful. You who do not know this principle, are a fool." The giant had no answer. He said "You alone have defeated me. I am glad of it. The moment you think of me I will come and help you." Saying this the giant disappeared. Thenceforward we became friends."

Śakaṭāla felt great respect for Vararuci. Hiraṇyagupta, the son of Yoga Nanda, went for hunting. His horse ran fast and he was separated from his army and got into a deep forest far away. He ate some fruits and plums and got on a tree to rest for the night. At that time a lion chased a bear, which climbed on the same tree. The prince trembled with fear. The bear said "Do not fear. I am your friend." Both talked for a while and became fast friends. Shortly, the prince began to sleep. The lion asked the bear to push that man down. The bear said that he would not deceive his friend. The disappointed lion sat under the tree. Then the bear slept and Hiraṇyagupta sat awake. The lion asked the prince to push the bear down. Thinking that he could save his life by complying with the request of the lion, he pushed the bear down. Fortunately the hold of the bear was firm and so it did not fall. The bear cursed Hiraṇyagupta. "May you become mad." The king was very sorry when his son returned a mad man. The king repented that he had killed Vararuci. For this was the time when the king needed him most.

Śakaṭāla went to the presence of the king and said that Vararuci was still alive. In accordance with the order of the king, Śakaṭāla brought Vararuci. The king showed him his mad son. By the blessing of Sarasvatī, Vararuci understood that the prince had deceived his friend, and informed the king of what had happened. Immediately the prince was cured of his madness. Yoga Nanda asked Vararuci, how he knew the cause of the madness of the prince. He replied. "A man of intelligence can understand anything by symptoms and inference." He also said that in this way he knew about the mole of the queen. When the king heard this he bowed down his head.

After this Vararuci left the palace. He did not stop to accept the favours of the king. Nor did he pay any heed to the compulsion of the king to stay. He reached his house. Everybody who saw Vararuci began to cry. Not knowing the reason, he stood dumbfounded. Upavarṣa came to him and said that when the news about the slaughter of Vararuci reached home, Upakośā got into fire and his mother died of broken heart. The grief-stricken Vararuci went to the forest for penance.

After this Śakaṭāla waited for an opportunity to bring Indradatta (Yoga Nanda) down. Once he had been walking out side the city when he saw a Brahmin digging a pit. Śakaṭāla asked him why he was digging the pit. He replied " I stumbled on this Darbha grass. So I am rooting it out." Śakaṭāla resolved to make use of this Brahmin to achieve his purpose. His name was Cāṇakya. Śakaṭāla took Cāṇakya to the palace. A ceremony of offerings to the manes was being conducted in the Palace. Another Brahmin named Subandhu also came there. The king ordered 'agrabhojana' (first meal) to be given to Subandhu. Cāṇakya trembled with fury. At that time his lock of hair was loosened. He took a vow that only after pacifying his anger by killing Yoga Nanda within seven days, would he tie up his lock. Cāṇakya began practising sorcery against the king. The king caught burning fever and died on the seventh day. Śakaṭāla killed Hiraṇyagupta. After this Sakaṭāla made Candragupta, the son of the real Nanda who died earlier, the king. Making Cāṇakya his minister, Śakaṭāla went for penance.

7) Sons. See under Pākkanār.

8) The end. Vararuci began to perform penance in the Vindhya mountain. At that time a brahmin came to the hermitage of Vararuci. He informed Vararuci of the death of Yoga Nanda. Thinking about the littleness of the pleasures of the world, he began to walk through the Vindhya mountain when he saw the devil called Kāṇabhūti. Telling everything to the devil Kāṇabhūti, Vararuci started for Badaryāśrama to discard his body. On the way he saw a hermit who lived on water alone. In the meanwhile his finger was cut with the tip of Darbha grass and blood oozed from the wound. Vararuci, by his attainments, changed the blood into the juice of a pot-herb. The hermit cried out "Oh, I have become a man of attainments." With a laugh Vararuci said "You have not yet overcome your egoism. I did so to test you. First of all you must overcome your egoism and become wise."

After saying this Vararuci went to Badaryāśrama and reached there. He did penance there and Devī appeared. According to her advice he made a fire by contemplation and burned his body in it. Then Vararuci became the old Puṣpadanta and went to the presence of Śiva.

VARASTRĪ. A sister of Bṛhaspati. The Vasu named Prabhāsa married Varastrī. This woman who was an expounder of the Vedas, pervaded all the creations by the power of harmony with the Supreme Spirit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 96: Vāyu Purāṇa, 84, 15).

VARATANTU. The preceptor of a hermit called Kautsa. (See under Kautsa).

VARATANU. A King of the Kurus. Because of his sinful deeds in the previous birth he was denied the happiness of getting children in the next birth. In the rebirth his name was Śrīdhara. He lived with his wife Prabhāvatī for a long time, but did not get children. When the hermit Vyāsa came to his palace once, the King asked him for the reason of his remaining childless. Vyāsa replied "Oh King, hear why you have only one wife and why you do not get children. In the previous birth you had been a brahmin named Varatanu. Your wife was called Śaṅkarī. When both of you were going somewhere once, you happened to see a low-caste child falling into water. Without paying any heed to it, you went on your way. The child was drowned. Though both of you have taken births in royal families due to the several good deeds of yours, you have become childless because of that one sinful act."

According to the instruction of Vyāsa, he gave Brahmins alms of gold, clothes, oxen, pumpkin etc. and performed Bāla vrata, the rite for the sake of children. Thus he got remission of his sin. Within a year he got a son loved and respected by everyone. That handsome prince became an emperor who came to be the founder of a dynasty. (Padma Purāṇa, Brahma Khaṇḍa, Chapter 6).

VARATRI. One of the four sons of Śuka. The other three were, Pṛthuraśmi, Bṛhadaṅgiras and Rajata. Devendra killed them because they were against sacrifice. It is stated in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa that after a while from the severed heads of these sons date palm trees grew up.

VARAYU. A King born in the family of Mahaujas. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 15).

VARCAS I. Son of Soma, one of the eight Vasus. Manoharā was the mother of Varcas. Abhimanyu, the son of Arjuna was the next birth of Varcas. (For further details see under Abhimanyu).

VARCAS II. The son of Sucetas, a Brahmin born in the family of Gṛtsamada. This Varcas had a son called Vihavya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 61).

VĀRDHAKṢEMI. A mighty King of Vṛṣṇi dynasty. The following details about him are taken from Mahābhārata.

(i) He was a great warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 171, Stanza 17).

(ii) He was present at the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 9).

(iii) He confronted the Teacher Kṛpa in the Bhārata battle and was killed by him. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 21).

VARDHAMĀNA. A character in the story of Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).

VARDHANA. One of the sons born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of his wife Mitravindā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VAREṆYA. One of the seven sons of Bhṛgu. The seven sons of Bhṛgu were Cyavana, Śuci, Aurva, Śukra Vajraśīrṣa, Savana, and Vareṇya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 126).

VARGĀ. A celestial maid. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, describing how Vargā and her friends were changed into crocodiles and had to live in water for a long time.

Once there lived an 'apsaras' (celestial maid) named Vargā in Devāraṇya. She had four friends called Saurabheyī, Samīcī, Budbudā and Latā. Once they were going to the house of Kubera their patron. On the way they saw a hermit. They saw the whole forest shining with the radiance of the power of penance of the hermit. They decided to entice the hermit somehow. With this intention they entered his hermitage. Seeing their dalliance and coquetry, the hermit got angry and cursed them to become crocodiles for a hundred years. They implored him with tears, for liberation from the curse. The hermit told them that in due course a noble man would come and get them out of water and that then they would obtain their original form. They walked towards a lake.

On the way they saw Nārada. They told him everything. He told them. "On the coast of the southern ocean there are five tīrthas (holy baths) known as Agastya, Saubhadra, Pauloma, Kārandhama and Suprasanna. You may go to these lakes and live there as crocodiles one in each. In due ccurse Arjuna, the son of Pāṇḍu will come and redeem you."

According to the words of Nārada the five celestial maids walked to the south and reached the Pañcatīrtha (the five holy baths) and each of them entered a lake as a crocodile. After this nobody dared to live near those holy baths. After some time Arjuna started on his pilgrimage. He passed through many places and reached the Pañcatīrtha. He enquired why the place was forsaken by people. The hermits told him that there was a crocodile in each of the five baths and that they would eat anybody who got into the bath. Arjuna got into a lake. Immediately a crocodile came and caught hold of him. With great difficulty he dragged it out of the lake. Instantly the crocodile changed into a beautiful damsel. The celestial maid Vargā told the amazed Arjuna her story and she added that her four friends were lying in the neighbouring four lakes. Arjuna redeemed every one of them. After this, Vargā and her friends went to Devāraṇya and Arjuna to Maṇalūra. From that day onwards the five tīrthas came to be known as Nārītīrthas.

VARĪ. An eternal God concerned with offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 33).

VĀRISENA. A King. This King stays in the Palace of Yama and worships him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 20).

VARIṢṬHA. The son of Manu Cākṣuṣa. The following story, how Variṣṭha cursed the hermit Gṛtsamada, occurs in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18. Indra once performed a sacrifice which lasted for a thousand years. Variṣṭha and Gṛtsamada, as friends of Indra were present at the sacrifice. Gṛtsamada committed some mistakes in the recitation of Sāmans. Variṣṭha got angry and cursed Gṛtsamada that he would wander in the forest as an animal for ten thousand one hundred and eighteen years. Accordingly Gṛtsamada wandered through forests in the form of an animal for a very long time.

VARĪTĀKṢA. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 52, that he had been a King once and that fate made him an asura.

VĀRKSĪ. Daughter of the hermit Kaṇḍu. It is stated in (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 195, Stanza 15, that she became the wife of the ten Pracetases. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 6, that Dakṣa was born from this Vārkṣī

VARMĀ. In ancient days it was the custom to add the word 'Varmā' to the names of Kṣatriyas. Brāhmaṇas had to add the word Śarmā, Kṣatriyas the word Varmā Vaiśyas the word Gupta and Śūdras the word Dāsa to their names according to rules. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 153).

VARMACIT. A King of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata Skandha 9).

VARṆA. Caste. The four castes of Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra and the eleven castes produced by the intermingling of these four castes, only these are taken into account when we speak of Varṇa. To understand about the four castes of Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra, see under Cāturvarṇya.

To know about the eleven mixed castes that originated from the four castes, see under Ekādaśasaṅkara Varṇas.

VARṆASAṄKARA. See under Ekādaśasaṅkara Varṇas.

VARṢA I. The teacher of Vararuci. (For details see under Vararuci).

VARṢA II. See under Kālamāna.

VĀRṢAGAṆYA. An ancient hermit. The Gandharva King Viśvāvasu learned about the connection between the individual soul and the Universal soul, from this hermit. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 59).

VARṢAKETU. A King of the Pūru dynasty. The father of Varṣaketu was Kṣemaka, and his son was Vipu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

VĀRṢṆEYA. I. A charioteer of King Nala. It was Vārṣṇeya who took the prince Indrasena and princess Indrasenā to Kuṇḍinapura when Nala, after being defeated in the game of dice, went to the forest with Damayantī. After this, Vārṣṇeya went to Ayodhyā and became the charioteer of King Ṛtuparṇa. Vārṣṇeya played an important part in finding out Nala. (For more details see under Nala).

VĀRṢṆEYA II. Another name of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 37).

VĀRṢṆEYA III. An ancient country. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 24, that the King of Vārṣṇeya brought presents to the imperial consecration-sacrifice (Rājasūya) of Yudhiṣṭhira.

VĀRTA. A King of ancient India. This King stays in the palace of Yama praising and worshipping him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 10).

VARUṆA I. One of the eight guardians of the quarters.

1) Birth. Varuṇa was the son of Prajāpati, Kaśyapa born of Aditi. He was one of the twelve sons of Aditi. So he is considered to be one of the twelve Ādityas (Sons of Aditi). The twelve Ādityas are Dhātā, Aryaman, Mitra, Śakra, Varuṇa, Aṁśa, Bhaga, Vivaśvān, Pūṣā, Savitā, Tvaṣṭā and Viṣṇu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15).

These twelve Ādityas were the twelve Devas (gods) known as Tuṣitas in the Manvantara of Manu Cākṣuṣa. A statement occurs in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15, that when Vaivasvata Manvantara was about to begin after the end of Cākṣuṣa Manvantara, the famous Tuṣitas united together and took birth as the sons of Kaśyapa.

2) Kingship of the waters. In Kṛtayuga the Devas approached Varuṇa and said to him. "You must be the lord of all the waters, as Indra is our protector. You can live in the heart of the ocean. All the rivers in the world, and the ocean which is their husband will obey you. You will wax and wane along with Candra (Moon)." Varuṇa agreed to comply with their request. All of them anointed Varuṇa as the King of the waters. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 47).

3) The Guardian of the quarter west. Brahmā appointed Varuṇa as the guardian of the western zone. Vaiśravaṇa once did penance before Brahmā, and when Brahmā appeared before him, he made a request that he should be appointed as one of the guardians of the quarters. Brahmā replied. "I have already selected Indra, Varuṇa and Yama as guardians of the points. I was thinking who, the fourth, should be, when you came. So from this day onwards, Indra shall be the guardian of the East, Yama that of the South, Varuṇa, that of the West and you Vaiśravaṇa shall be the guardian of the North." After saying this, Brahmā disappeared. Thus Varuṇa became the guardian of the West. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Family. Varuṇa had several wives and children. Prominent among them were Gaurī and Varuṇānī. Mention is made about the sons Suṣeṇa, Vandī and Vasiṣṭha and daughter Vāruṇī. Cārṣaṇī was another wife of Varuṇa. Prajāpati Bhṛgu, who died in the sacrifice of Dakṣa took birth as the son of Varuṇa and Cārṣaṇī. Devī Jyeṣṭhā, the daughter of Priest Śukra was another wife of Varuṇa. The children of Jyeṣṭhā were Bala, Surā the Suranandinī and Adharmaka the destroyer of the elements. The semen of Varuṇa fell on Valmīka (White-ant-hill) from which the great hermit Vālmīki was born. Besides them, Dakṣasāvarṇi, the ninth Manu was the son of Varuṇa. Puṣkara was another son of Varuṇa. The handsome Puṣkara was received as husband by the daughter of Soma (Candra). Vandī, who was defeated by the hermit Aṣṭāvakra at the palace of Janaka was the son of Varuṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 9; Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 52; Ādi Parva, Chapter 99, Stanza 5; Vana Parva, Chapter 134, Stanza 24; Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa Sarga 17, Stanza 13; Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 46, Stanza 36).

5) Carrying away Utathya's wife. Bhadrā, the daughter of Soma (Moon) was extremely beautiful. Soma gave her in marriage to the hermit Utathya. Varuṇa carried her away. Utathya got angry and drank up the ocean dry. Varuṇa returned Bhadrā to Utathya. (For further details see under Utathya).

6) Theft of Varuṇa's cow by Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa once decided to perform a sacrifice. He made all preparations. But he did not get the required cow at the stipulated time. So he got the Homadhenu of Varuṇa by theft and began to perform the yāga (sacrifice). Varuṇa knew this. Instantly he went to Kaśyapa and demanded his cow. But Kaśyapa refused to return the cow. Varuṇa complained to Brahmā, who sent for Kaśyapa and asked him about the cow and both Brahmā and Varuṇa cursed Kaśyapa that he who had taken the cow by stealth would take birth as a cowherd in Ambāḍi. (For further details see under Kaśyapa and Nandagopa).

7) Cursing Hariścandra. For detailed story see under Hariścandra.

8) Other information.

(i) The Vaiṣṇava bow received by Śrī Rāma from Bhārgava Rāma, was given to Varuṇa. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 77, Stanza 1).

VARŪTHINĪ. A celestial maid. This celestial maid performed a dance in the palace of Indra, in honour of the visit of Arjuna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 29).

VAŚA. A hermit who is praised in the Ṛgveda. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Sūkta 116).

VĀSANĀ. Wife of the Vasu named Arka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

VASANTAKA. A person in the story of Udayana. (See under Udayana).

VAŚĀTALA. A country in India famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 15, that the princes of this country gave presents to Yudhiṣṭhira at the time of his sacrifice of royal consecration.

VASĀTI I. A king of the Candra (lunar) dynasty. He was the eighth son of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 57).

VASĀTI II. A country in ancient India. The Kṣatriya kings of this country took the side of the Kauravas in the Bhārata Battle and were employed to protect Bhīṣma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 14).

VASĀTI III. A King who fought on the side of Duryodhana. When Abhimanyu entered Cakra-vyūha of the army formed by Droṇa this King took a vow that he would commit suicide if he did not kill Abhimanyu and then ran to the scene of the battle. In the fight between Vasāti and Abhimanyu, Vasāti was killed. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 43, Verses 8-10).

VASĀTIKA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed in the fight with Abhimanyu. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 8).

VĀSAVADATTĀ. Wife of Udayana. (See under Udayana).

VAŚAVARTĪ. A group of devas (gods). It is said that in the third Manvantara there were five groups of Devas, each group containing twelve persons, known as the Sudhāmās, the Satyas, the Japas, the Pratardanas and the Vaśavartins. (For more details see under Manvantara).

VĀSAVĪ. Another name of Satyavatī the mother of Vyāsa. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 63).

VAŚĀYU. A son born to Purūravas by Urvaśī. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, 12).

VASIṢṬHA. A hermit who was the son of Brahmā.

1) The three births of Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha with the radiance of Brahmā, is very famous in the Purāṇas. He had three births.

i) First birth.

a) Birth. Vasiṣṭha is one of the mental sons of Brahmā. This is the first birth of Vasiṣṭha.

"Nārada was born from the lap, Dakṣa was born from the right thumb, Vasiṣṭha from the breath (prāṇa) Bhṛgu from the skin, Kratu from the hand of Brahmā."

In this birth, Arundhatī was the wife of Vasiṣṭha. Arundhatī was known by the name Ūrjā also. There is a Purāṇic story behind the marriage of Vasiṣṭha and Arundhatī.

In her previous birth the name of Arundhatī was Sandhyā. She was born from the passion of Brahmā. As soon as she was born she grew up. Seeing her exquisite beauty the Prajāpatis were filled with excitement. Even Brahmā, her father, was some-what excited at her sight. Śiva, who understood this, teased Brahmā. Sandhyā was ashamed. Even after Śiva, Brahmā, Prajāpatis and the others had gone their ways, she remained there blaming her birth. She said to herself: "The moment I was born, I grew up to be a young woman. My father and my brothers looked at me with desire. I also looked at them excitedly. As an atonement for this sin, I will burn my body in fire. I do not want a body desired by my father and brothers. With this decision she went to the mountain Candrabhāga, which is the source of the river Candrabhāgā, and began to perform penance. Brahmā who came to know of this, was filled with pity and sent Vasiṣṭha to her. He went there in the form of a Brahmin boy and taught her how to perform penance. After the return of Vasiṣṭha she continued the severe penance to Viṣṇu. Her penance became the subject of talk and wonder everywhere. After a short while Viṣṇu appeared before her sitting on his conveyance Garuḍa. She praised Viṣṇu. Viṣṇu was pleased with her and asked what her desire was. She said: "Lord, creatures should not be sexually excited at their birth. They should have sexual desire only when they are grown up. The three worlds must know that I am chaste. In all my births I should not look at anybody except my husband with sexual desire. The man who looks at me with sexual desire should lose his manliness and become a hermaphrodite."

Mahāviṣṇu agreed to her request. It was from that day onwards that sexual desire appeared in creatures in their grown-up stage only, after they have passed the stages of infancy and childhood. Mahāviṣṇu told her. "It is preordained that this body of yours will be burnt in fire. Medhātithi, (Meghātithi), the son of Priyavrata is performing the great sacrifice called Jyotiṣṭoma which is to be completed in twelve years. It is coming to a close. There is none equal to him because of this sacrifice. That great hermit's sacrifice is being performed in the basin of this river Candrabhāgā. Unseen by the hermits, you should go there and get into the fire. Because of my blessing you will be born from that fire as the daughter of Medhātithi. You should go into the fire thinking of him whom you want to be your husband in this birth."

Mahāviṣṇu touched Sandhyā with the tip of his finger. Sandhyā walked to the sacrificial hall. Seen by none, she got down into the fire. She was burnt in the blazing fire. By the order of Viṣṇu; the God fire placed Sandhyā who was burnt in the sacrificial fire, in the Solar region. The sun divided that body into two and placed them in his chariot. The upper portion became the prātassandhyā (dawn) between the day and the night and the lower portion became the Sāyantana Sandhyā (the evening twilight). At the end of the sacrifice, from the centre of the sacrificial fire a girl, like the flame of fire rose up. Medhātithi took that child in his hands and called her Arundhatī. The child became famous throughout the three worlds, as the name stood for the principle that on no reason what-so-ever will righteousness be obstructed. (Rodha means obstruction. So Arundhatī is one who cannot be obstructed). In some other Purāṇas Arundhatī is given as the daughter of Prajāpati Kardama and Devahūti.

b) Marriage. Arundhatī grew up in the hermitage of Medhātithi. Candrabhāgā holy bath which was the playfield of Arundhatī, is even today, known as Arundhatītīrtha. Arundhatī became five years of age. Brahmā saw her when she was playing on the ground after having taken her bath. At the instruction of Brahmā, Arundhatī was entrusted to Sāvitrī and Bahulā for education. Sāvitrī is the wife of the Sun. Arundhatī lived in Mānasa lake with Sāvitrī, Gāyatrī, Bahulā, Sarasvatī, Drupadā and such other celestial women and completed her education. One day Arundhatī happened to see Vasiṣṭha who was shining with radiance. They fell in love with each other. Parents and relatives and the elders came to know of this. Sāvitrī patting Arundhatī blessed her to become the wife of Vasiṣṭha. The marriage of Arundhatī with Vasiṣṭha was conducted in the presence of the Gods.

c) Sons. Seven sons, named Citraketu, Purocis, Viraca, Mitra, Ulbaṇa, Vasubhṛdyāna and Dyumān were born to Vasiṣṭha by Arundhatī. All the seven of them were Brahmarṣis.

d) The meaning of the names Vasiṣṭha and Arundhatī. The meaning of the name Vasiṣṭha is given by Vasiṣṭha himself as follows:—

I am known as Vasiṣṭha for two reasons. I am 'Vasumān'. The Śrutis say that Air, Earth etc. are Vasus. I have become Vasiṣṭha because I have brought under control the Vasus beginning with Aṇimā (the power of reducing the body to an atom). See what Arundhatī herself says, about the meaning of the name Arundhatī.

"I consider mountains, earth and heaven as elements in which I live, only after considering my husband as the element in which I live. My husband is the first and foremost element in my life. Moreover I conform (anurodha) with the mind of my husband. So know me as Arundhatī."

e) Conjugal fidelity of Arundhatī. The Saptarṣis (the seven hermits) once left Arundhatī alone in a forest and went to the Mountain Himālayas to gather fruits and roots. In those days, due to severe summer, the earth became a wilderness. So the hermits lived in the Himālayas. Arundhatī all alone did penance in the forest. On one day Śiva took the form of a Brahmin and going near Arundhatī requested her for alms. She replied: "There are only Ziziphus fruits here, and nothing else to eat." The Brahmin asked her to boil them. She placed the pot of Ziziphus fruits on the oven and sat there hearing the good stories told by the Brahmin. Thus without thinking about her hunger or thirst she sat there for twelve years hearing the stories narrated by the Brahmin. When the hermits returned from Himālayas, Śiva assumed his original form and said, "Hermits! This woman, sitting in the hermitage, has acquired more penance than you have acquired in the Himālayas. Good woman! What boon do you want?" She requested that that place should be known as the holy place called 'Badarapacana (cooking of Ziziphus fruits). Śiva allowed it. Even today that place is considered a holy place.

f) Death. When so many devas were dead at the sacrifice of Dakṣa, Vasiṣṭha also died along with them. Arundhatī followed her husband. After death both of them entered the firmament and became two stars.

g) Seeing Arundhatī. In India there is a custom of showing the women, the star Arundhatī. Arundhatī is the first of the women who took only one husband in her life. The meaning of this custom is this that this mentality of Arundhatī should be acquired by the married women of India. Moreover, if the star stands in front of the star Vasiṣṭha, it is considered to forebode calamities in the world. (Kālikā Purāṇa).

ii) Second birth.

General information. Vasiṣṭha who died at the sacrifice of Dakṣa took birth again from the sacrificial fire of Brahmā. Akṣamālā was the wife of this Vasiṣṭha. Akṣamālā was the rebirth of Arundhatī. So, in some Purāṇas, both are shown as one. This birth of Vasiṣṭha was terminated by the curse of emperor Nimi of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (For details see under Nimi).

(iii) Third birth. In the third birth Vasiṣṭha was born from a pot as the son of Mitrāvaruṇas. In this birth Vasiṣṭha was the brother of Agastya. (For detailed story see under Agastya, para 2). In this birth the wife of Vasiṣṭha was an Arundhatī, who was the sister of Nārada. Thus according to the Purāṇas, it took three births for Vasiṣṭha to complete his life. It is difficult to ascertain, in which particular birth, a particular story, stated in the Purāṇas, took place. It is probable that a large number of episodes might have taken place in the second and third births.

Stories connected with the life of Vasiṣṭha are given below:

2) Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were two hermits who quarrelled with each other throughout their lives. The quarrel between Vasiṣṭha a Brahmin hermit and Viśvāmitra a royal hermit, is given below:

(i) Reason for the enmity. Viśvāmitra was a King who cared much for the welfare of his subjects. Once he went with his army to hunt. He became tired by the hunt and reached the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha who welcomed them with hospitality. He told them that food would be ready when they returned after a bath. The King and his men bathed quickly and when they returned, a grand feast was ready for so many thousands. The King was in great perplexity. After the meals Viśvāmitra approached the hermit Vasiṣṭha and asked him how he got such a grand feast ready. He replied that the cow Kāmadhenu in his hermitage was capable of granting any wish. The king desired to have the cow. He asked the hermit to exchange the cow for a crore of ordinary cows. Vasiṣṭha did not agree to this. Viśvāmitra said that the noble and superior things of the country belonged to the King. The hermit did not agree to that also. Finally Viśvāmitra was about to take away the cow by force. Thus the quarrel began. Understanding the wish of Vasiṣṭha Kāmadhenu held her horns and tail up and stood as a fierce and cruel figure. From the various limbs of the cow so many thousands of warriors jumped out and a fierce battle ensued in which the hundred sons and the huge army of Viśvāmitra met with defeat. At last Viśvāmitra tried to launch a direct attack against Vasiṣṭha. But the arrows of Viśvāmitra were changed to flowers when they touched the body of Vasiṣṭha. At last the King admitted that the power of the penance of a Brahmin hermit was the real power and he admitted defeat from Vasiṣṭha. From that day onwards a deep-rooted, hatred against Vasiṣṭha arose in the heart of Viśvāmitra. He left the administration of his Kingdom in the hands of his relatives and went to the south where he erected a hermitage and began to do severe penance. He acquired great powers of penance and became a royal hermit of immense attainments and the quarrel between the two great hermits Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra began. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 5 sargas from 51).

(ii) Second confrontation. The next contest between the two hermits was due to the king Triśaṅku of the Solar dynasty. Triśaṅku wanted bodily attainment of heaven. Vasiṣṭha tried to discourage the king. Viśvāmitra took up the matter. He began to perform a sacrifice to lift up the king bodily to heaven, and Triśaṅku began to rise up higher and higher. But Indra did not allow him to enter bodily into the heaven. At last Viśvāmitra, by the power of his penance created an artificial heaven midway between the heaven and the earth and placed Triśaṅku in that heaven. With this the gap between the two hermits widened. (For more details see under Triśaṅku).

(iii) Third confrontation. By the blessing of Varuṇa, a son named Lohita was born to Hariścandra. He had promised Varuṇa to sacrifice his son Lohita. But Lohita came to know of this and he left the palace. Hariścandra was in a difficult situation. Vasiṣṭha advised him to buy a son and to sacrifice him. Accordingly a Brahmin boy named Śunaśśepha was bought. Vasiṣṭha decided to sacrifice him. Viśvāmitra said that he could not be sacrificed. Hariścandra was loved by Vasiṣṭha. So Viśvāmitra tried to harm him as far as possible. Hariścandra fell in the trap of Viśvāmitra and lost his country, city, wife, everything and had to live in funeral places. (For detailed story see under Hariścandra.)

(iv) Fourth confrontation. Vasiṣṭha did not like the deception practised by Viśvāmitra, on Hariścandra. Once Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha met in the forest by chance. Vasiṣṭha scolded Viśvāmitra, who had only the guise of a hermit, thus: "You wicked Viśvāmitra! Why do you put the truthful Hariścandra into so much misery? You are deceiving him as the stork sits in meditation and deceives the fish. So you will become a stork."

Viśvāmitra looked at the hermit Vasiṣṭha who had cursed him and said. "So long as I am a stork you shall be Kingfisher. Thus they cursed each other.

Both of them became birds and went to the shore of Mānasa lake and each building a nest on the top of trees began to live there. There was nothing but quarrel between the two birds daily. Both pecked and scratched each other to such an extent that they were covered with bleeding wounds. They looked like an Erythrina tree filled with flowers. Everybody who saw them was filled with sadness. Thus they lived there for a long time.

Once the Kind-hearted Brahmā, the father of Vasiṣṭha, saw their sorry plight. Having pity on them he came there with the other gods and delivered them both from the curse. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

(v) Fifth confrontation. Viśvāmitra called the river Sarasvatī and asked her to bring Vasiṣṭha along with her current. Sarasvatī did not like the idea. Still, fearing the curse of Viśvāmitra she agreed to do so. The river-basin where Vasiṣṭha had been performing penance was pulled down by the current of the river, and taking Vasiṣṭha in the current carried him down. Sarasvatī did not wish to leave Vasiṣṭha at the mercy of Viśvāmitra. So when they reached the door of the hermitage of Viśvāmitra, she carried him further down in a swift current. Viśvāmitra got angry and cursed Sarasvatī. "Let blood flow through the river." With that the water of Sarasvatī changed to blood-colour. The gods were perplexed at this. They all gathered on the banks of the river. In the presence of the gods, both the hermits came to a compromise. Thenceforward that place became a holy tīrtha under the name Vasiṣṭhāpavāha. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 42).

VĀSUKI. One of the famous Nāgas (serpents).

1) Birth. The uragas and nāgas (serpents) were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrū. Vāsuki, the eldest son of Kadrū spent his childhood with his parents.

2) Difference of opinion. Vinatā and Kadrū staked on the colour of the tail of Uccaiśśravas (A horse obtained at the churning of the sea of Milk. To win the stake, Kadrū asked her sons to hang on the tail of Uccaiśśravas as black hairs. But the truthful Vāsuki was not prepared to do so. Kadrū cursed Vāsuki and the others who sided with him. From that day onwards Vāsuki and those who were cursed, separated from their mother and formed into a serpent group. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 37 and 48).

3) The length of Vāsuki. The Devas and the asuras decided to get Amṛta (Ambrosia—the celestial honey of immortalily) by churning the sea of milk. The Devas went to bring Mandara-mountain, to be used as the churning rod. Their attempt was futile. The asuras made a trial with the same result. The Bhūtagaṇas (Guards) of Śiva also made a vain attempt. On the instruction of Viṣṇu, Garuḍa went and brought the mountain as easily as an eagle takes away a frog. Now Vāsuki should be brought. The Devas and Gandharvas failed in that attempt also. Garuḍa who was haughty of his strength and speed, went to the city of the nāgas (serpents) and requested Vāsuki to come to the sea of Milk. Vāsuki replied that if the matter was so urgent he had no objection for being carried to that place. He took the middle part of Vāsuki in his beak and flew up higher and higher and reached beyond the horizon. Still the lower half of Vāsuki was lying on the ground. So he took Vāsuki in his beak as folded in two. Still the result was the same. Garuḍa became aware of the impossibility of carrying Vāsuki and returned, ashamed and disappointed. Viṣṇu rebuked him for his arrogance. After this, Śiva stretched his hand to Pātāla. Vāsuki became a small bangle on that hand. Thus Vāsuki was brought to the shore of the sea of Milk. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

4) Other details.

(i) For the safety and protection of the Nāgas (serpents) Vāsuki gave his sister Jaratkāru as wife to the hermit Jaratkāru. (See under Jaratkāru).

(ii) The nāgas anointed Vāsuki as their King. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Chapter 36).

(iii) When Vāsuki saw the serpents, born of his family, falling into the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and dying in large numbers, he sent his nephew Āstīka to find out a way to rescue the perishing nāgas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 20).

VASUMĀN (VASUMANAS) III. A fire. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 27, that if a woman during her monthly course happens to touch the holy fire, an aṣṭakapāla should be offered to the fire Vasumān. This fire called Vasumān now stays in the palace of Brahmā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, stanza 30).

VASUMĀN (VASUMANAS) IV. A prince of the family of Janaka. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 309, that a hermit had given him exhortations regarding righteousness.

VASUMITRA I. An ancient Kṣatriya King. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 41 that this King was born from a portion of the asura named Vikṣara, the son of Danāyu.

VASUMITRA II. A King born of the dynasty of Śuṅga. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, that Bhadraka, otherwise called Udaṅka was the son of this King.

VASUPRABHA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 63).

VASUŚARMĀ. See under Dharmaśarmā I.

VASUṢEṆA. A name of Karṇa at the time of his boyhood. He was called by the name Vasuṣeṇa by his foster-father Adhiratha and his foster-mother Rādhā. (See under Karṇa).

VASUŚRĪ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 14).

VASVANANTA. The father of Yuyudha, and the son of Upagupta. He was the King of Videha. (Bhāgavata. Skandha 9).

VASVOKASĀRĀ. One of the seven branches of the Ganges. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 48).

VAṬA. One of the five attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by the god Aṁśa. The five attendants were Vaṭa, Parigha, Bhīma, Dahati, and Dahana. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 34).

VĀTA. One of the Saptarṣis (seven hermits) of the Manvantara (Age of the Manu) of Manu Svārociṣa. In this age of the Manu the Devendra was Vipaścit. The Saptarṣis of that Age of the Manu were Ūrja, Stamba. Prāṇa, Vāta, Vṛṣabha, Niraya and Parīvān. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 1).

VĀṬADHĀNA. A Kṣatriya King. This King was born from a portion of the asura Krodhavaśa (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 67).

VĀṬADHĀNA(M). A country in ancient India. The people of this country were called the Vāṭadhānas. The following information is available about them from the Mahābhārata.

(i) Nakula defeated the Vāṭadhānas who were Kṣatriyas at the time of his regional conquest. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 8).

(ii) Once the Kauravas surrounded this country which abounded in wealth and food. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 31).

(iii) Vāṭadhāna was one of the foremost countries in India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 47).

(iv) In the Garuḍa Vyūha of the army formed by Bhīṣma, Aśvatthāmā and the Vāṭadhānas stood at the head of disposition, in the Bhārata-Battle. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 4).

(v) Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated the Vāṭadhānas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza, 17).

(vi) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 73, Stanza 17 that in Bhārata-battle Arjuna destroyed all the armies of the country of Vāṭadhāna.

VĀTĀDHIPA. A King who is famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 15, that this King was subdued by Sahadeva during his southern regional conquest.

VĀTAGHNA. One of Viśvāmitra's sons who were expounders of Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 54).

VĀTAJA. A country in Ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 45).

VĀTĀPI I. A giant. See under Agastya, Para 5, for the story of how this asura was eaten along with his food by Agastya.

VĀTĀPI II. A notorious asura (demon) born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 28).

VAṬARODHA. A hell. For further details see the section Naraka under Kāla.

VĀTASKANDHA. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 14, that he sits in the palace of Indra praising and worshipping him.

VĀTAVEGA I. (VĀYUVEGA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 195, that he had been present at the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Draupadī and in the Karṇa Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 2, that he was killed by Bhīmasena in the Bhārata-battle.

VĀTAVEGA II. One of the famous sons of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 10).

VĀTIKA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 67).

VATSA I. Son of Pratardana the King of Kāśī. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 79, that the name Vatsa was given to him because he was brought up in his childhood by calves of cows.

VATSA II. A King of the family of Śaryāti. This King was the father of Tālajaṅgha and Hehaya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 7).

VATSA III (VATSABHŪMI). A country in ancient India. The following information is given about this country in the Mahābhārata.

(i) Bhīmasena conquered this country during his regional conquest. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 10).

(ii) Karṇa once brought this country under control. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Stanza 9).

(iii) During the battle of Bhārata, the people of Vatsa were on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 1.

(iv) Deified beings (semigods) and heavenly singers had lived in this country. There is an asylum there for holy men. Ambā, the princess of Kāśī once lived in this hermitage. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 34).

(v) Ambā became a river and still flows through this country under the name Ambā. (M.B. Udyoga Parva Chapter 186, Stanza 40).

(vi) In the battle of Bhārata, the warriors of Vatsa stood on the left side of the disposition of the army called Krauñcāruṇavyūha, formed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 53).

VATSALĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 72).

VATSANĀBHA. A hermit. Dharma, once took the form of a she-buffalo and saved Vatsanābha from heavy rain. After this he thought that he was an ungrateful man and so he decided to forsake his body. But Dharma dissuaded him from this attempt. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 12).

VATSARA. The younger of the two sons of Dhruva. Utkala, the elder was a man of abstinence. So the younger brother Vatsara became the prince apparent. Vatsara married the princess named Svarvīthī. Six sons named Puṣpārṇa, Tigmaketu, Īśa, Ūrja, Vasu and Jaya were born to them. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

VĀTSYA I. A hermit belonging to the Guruparamparā (the line of teachers). It was this hermit Vātsya who wrote the famous Vātsyāyana Sūtra (the science of Amour). He was one of the guests at the serpant-sacrifice (Sarpasatra) of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 53, Stanza 9). He visited Bhīṣma who lay on the bed of arrows. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza). See under Guruparamparā.

VĀTSYA II. A country famous in the Purāṇas. This country has the name Vatsa also. (See under Vatsa)

VĀYASAVIDYĀ. The art of making the crow tell the past and foretell the future. (For further details see under Kālakavṛkṣika).

VĀYU I. One of the eight guardians of the world. (Dikpālakas).

1) General information. Vāyu was born from the breath of Viśvapuruṣa. (Ṛgveda 10, 90). Tvaṣṭā was the son in-law of Vāyu. The eight dikpālakas are Indra, Vahni (Fire), Yama, Nirṛti, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Kubera and Śiva. Vāyu is the guardian of the North West zone. The palace of Bhagavān Vāyu is known as Gandhavatī.

2) Confrontation with Vāsuki. Once Vāyu and Vāsuki tried to find out who of the two was mightier, in consequence of which, Trikūṭaparvata, a peak of Mount Himālaya, was broken from its bed and thrown into the southern ocean near Laṅkā. Later, the city of Laṅkā was built on this mountain. (For details see under Trikūṭa).

3) Children. Bhīmasena and Hanūmān are said to be the prominent sons of Bhagavān Vāyu. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 112, that Agni was the son of Vāyu. To make fire from wood by attrition, the hands obtain strength by the help of the life breath called Vyāna (a breath or vāyu). It is from this, that the idea that fire is the son of Vāyu, came into existence. To know how Vāyu obtained the paternity of Bhīma and Hanūmān see under Bhīma and Hanūmān. It is stated in Brahma Purāṇa that a group of celestial maids called 'Mudā' owes its origin to Vāyu.

4) Love of Vāyu. Once Bhagavān Vāyu happened to see the six beautiful daughters of Kuśanābha, a king, and he was excited sexually. As the princesses refused to satisfy his desire, Vāyu changed the damsels into hunchbacks, by a curse. (For detailed story see under Kuśanābha).

5) The Vāyus (breaths) in the body. (See under Nāḍīcakra).

6) Curbing the arrogance of Silk-cotton tree. Long ago a silk-cotton tree grew up on the top of the Himālayas. It grew up to be a big tree spreading its branches in all directions. Birds built their nests on the branches of that big tree and hermits and animals found shelter under its shade. The silk-cotton tree became arrogant. Once Nārada came there and praised the tree:— "How gigantic, this silk-cotton tree is ! Even in a great storm its branches do not move." The praise of Nārada made the tree more haughty. It told Nārada that the storm etc. were its servants. Nārada told Vāyu, what the silk-cotton tree said to him. Vāyu got angry and coming to the tree, said thus:- "You, wicked silk-cotton tree, in days of yore, when Brahmā was carrying on creation he took rest on you for a while. That is why I keep motionless when I come to you. It is not because I am afraid of you. I knew that you belittled me before Nārada. If you are bold enough, come and fight with me."

The silk-cotton tree accepted the challenge. Next day Bhagavān Vāyu changed into a storm and blew against the tree. The tree lost leaves, flowers and fruits and stood bare. Thus within a very short time the arrogance of the tree was curbed.

This story was told to Yudhiṣṭhira by Bhīṣma, to show that rendering help to a foe, will only make him haughty. (M.B. Śānti Parva, 3 Chapters from 154).

Other details.

(i) When Indra cut off the wings of the mountains, Bhagavān Vāyu saved the mountain Maināka from this danger, by hiding it in the ocean. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 1, Stanza 126).

(ii) The image of Bhagavān Vāyu should be consecrated as sitting on the haunch of a deer, holding a flag. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

(iii) Indra sent Vāyu also along with Menakā to hinder the penance of Viśvāmitra. While Menakā was dancing in front of Viśvāmitra, Vāyu displaced her cloth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 1).

(iv) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 22, that Vāyu is the messenger of the gods.

(v) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 20, that Vāyu stays in the palace of Brahmā, praising him.

(vi) Once Pradyumna tried to kill Śālva. At that time Vāyu went to Pradyumna as the messenger of Gods. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 22).

(vii) Vāyu proved that Damayantī was chaste. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 36).

(viii) Vāyu declared that Sītā was chaste. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 291, Stanza 27).

(ix) In Tripuradahana (the burning of Tripura) Vāyu acted as the arrow of the bow of Śiva. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 202, Stanza 76).

(x) Vāyu gave Subrahmaṇya two attendants called Bala and Atibala. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 44).

(xi) Once Vāyu advised Purūravas about the need of a priest. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 72, Stanzas 10-25).

(xii) Once Bhagavān Vāyu talked elaborately on the secrets of goodness and badness. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 128).

(xiii) Bhagavān Vāyu once talked about the greatness of Brahmins to Kārtavīryārjuna. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 152).

VĀYU II. An ancient hermit of India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 9, that this hermit visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows.

VĀYUBALA. See under Vāyucakra.

VĀYUBHAKṢA. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 13, that this hermit had been a prominent figure in the palace of Yudhiṣṭhira.

VĀYUCAKRA. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 38, Stanza 32, that this Vāyucakra was born from the semen kept in a pot by the hermit called Maṅkaṇaka. From this same pot some other hermits such as Vāyubala, Vāyujvāla and others were born. (See under Maṅkaṇaka, Para 3).

VĀYUHĀ. A son of the hermit Maṅkaṇaka. (See para 3, under Maṅkaṇaka).

VĀYUJVĀLA. See under Vāyucakra.

VĀYUMAṆḌALA. A son of the hermit Maṅkaṇaka. See para 3, under Maṅkaṇaka.

VĀYUPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa).

VĀYURETAS. A son of the hermit Maṅkāṇaka. (See para 3, under Maṅkaṇaka).

VĀYUVEGA I. A Kṣatriya King in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 63 that this King was born from a portion of the asura named Krodhavaśa.

VĀYUVEGA II. A son of the hermit Maṅkaṇaka. (See Para 3, under Maṅkaṇaka).

VĀYUVEGA III. One of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was present at the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Draupadī (M.B. Araṇya: Chapter 177, Verse 2).

VAYYA. A royal hermit of the period of Ṛgveda. Mention is made about the royal hermits such as Vayya, Karkandhu and others in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Sūkta 112.

VEDA. The son of the hermit Ayodhadhaumya. (For further details see under Ayodhadhaumya).

VEDA (S).

1) Introduction. The root 'Vid' in Sanskrit means 'to know'. The books composed of the knowledge of the Āryans, collected and compiled were called the Vedas.

2) The origin and importance of the Vedas. It is said that Brahmā was the creator of the Vedas. Many say that, for the performance of sacrifices Brahmā created from Agni (fire), Vāyu (Wind) and Ravi (the Sun), the three Vedas Ṛg, Yajus and Sāman which are eternal and in accordance with regulations.

The Vedas have two sides, the spiritual and the mundane. Moreover all the explanations of the Vedas from the Brāhmaṇas to the Bhāṣya of Sāyaṇa, pertain to sacrifices. The literary meaning of Veda is mundane. Considering these two points and the facts that they are religious books and that they reveal the mental and social outlooks of the early Āryans, and as the origin of all the thoughts of Indians, all the Vedas, especially Ṛgveda, hold a lofty place.

3) Parts of the Vedas. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Vyāsa in Dvāpara Yuga and divided the Vedas. The first Veda consisted of four pādas and a hundred thousand granthas. Vyāsa divided it into four parts known as, Ṛgveda, Yajurveda, Sāmaveda and Atharvaveda. The sage and seer Vyāsa thus created by Ṛg, "Hautra" (a collection of lyrics in praise of different Gods, to be recited by the priest styled the 'hotṛ'), by Yajus "Ādhvaryava", (a book of sacrificial prayer, of prose formulas to be uttered by the 'Adhvaryu' priest, who performed the manual work involved in a sacrifice), by Sāman, "Audgātra", (Songs meant to be sung at the Soma sacrifice by a special class of priests 'Udgātṛ') and by Atharva "Brahmatva", (a collection of songs, spells and incantations, for the healing of disease, the restoration of harmony, the exorcism of evil spirits and to celebrate the power and omniscience of God) and established them separately. Paila, a scholar in Ṛgveda, and a disciple of Vyāsa, gave the original Veda to Indrapramiti and its Saṁhitā (collections)to Bāṣkala as gifts. Bāṣkala divided the Saṁhitā into four, and gave each of them to Baudhya and others. Yajurveda was divided into twentyfour branches. They were composed by Vaiśampāyana of extraordinary intelligence, a disciple of Vyāsa. Kāṇḍas (Chapters) such as Vājasaneya etc. were composed later by hermits such as Yājñavalkya and others in the form of Smṛtis (tradition, as handing down only the tradition derived from ancient sages, to whom the Vedas were 'revealed'). Jaimini the disciple of Vyāsa, divided Sāmaveda into different branches. Sumantu and Sukarmā compiled separate Saṁhitās (collections) from them. Sukarmā composed thousand Saṁhitās. Sumantu the disciple of Vyāsa took the Atharvaveda and taught it to thousands of Paippalāda disciples. By the blessings of Vyāsa, Sūta made the Purāṇa Saṁhitā (the collection of Purāṇas). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 150).

4) Branches of the Vedas. It has already been mentioned that the Vedas are four in number called Ṛg, Yajus, Sāma and Atharva. Each of these Vedas has branches called Saṁhitās (collections) and Brāhmaṇas (treatises relating to prayer and sacrificial ceremony). Āraṇyakas are appendices to the Brāhmaṇas. Upaniṣads (secret or esoteric doctrines) are appendices of the Āraṇyakas. Thus each of the Vedas has Saṁhitās, Brāhmaṇas, Āraṇyakas and Upaniṣads. All these are, in a way, expositions of the Vedas. In all these expositions there are numberless Sūktas. All these taken together are called Vedic literature.

In the Saṁhitās there are lyrics in praise of different gods. All these are spells and incantations (mantras) in the form of songs. The under-currents of all these spells are Vedas and stories from the Vedas. Generally speaking the Brāhmaṇas contain prose texts giving practical observations on sacrifice which are mentioned in the songs of praise. Here and there stories from Purāṇas and epics occur. The Āraṇyakas (forest-texts) got that name, because they are books of instruction to be given in the forest or writings meant for wood-dwelling hermits. As they contained esoteric spells and incantations which might cause injury even to those who were not concerned with them instruction in them was not given in towns or villages. The contents of the Āraṇyakas are the allegorical signification of the rites and sacrifices and the mystic meaning of the Vedas.

It has been mentioned that the Upaniṣads are appendices of the Āraṇyakas. Still there is not much difference between the two and hence they cannot be separated from one another so easily. The Upaniṣads are called Vedāntas, (The aim and completion of the Vedas), because they are the end of the Vedas. The Vedāntas belong to the later period of the Vedic age. Instruction in Vedāntas was given only after completing the study of the mantras (Vedas) and the Brāhmaṇas.

The Upaniṣads contain philosophical speculations about the conception of Brahman and the Vedas. The word Veda includes the Vedāṅgas also. Vedāṅgas (Ancillaries of the Vedas) are Śikṣā (phonetics), Vyākaraṇa (grammar), Chandas (metrics), Nirukta (etymology), Joytiṣa (astronomy), and Kalpa (ritual). At first instruction is given in the study of Brahman and the study of Vedas. When more discussions and expositions on them are needed, the study of Brāhmaṇas and Āraṇyakas are resorted to. In course of time the Brāhmaṇas and Āraṇyakas, which contain discussions and expositions of the Vedas became independent branches of study under these names. That is why they contain mainly prose texts.

There are one lakh of mantras or spells and incantations in all the four Vedas taken together. They are for blessing everybody and to make the four objects of life easily attainable. Sāṅkhyāyana and Āśvalāyana sorted and grouped the mantras. Accordingly there are two thousand one hundred and ten mantras known as Brāhmaṇas. Dvaipāyana and other hermits have stated the number of granthas (verses) in Ṛgveda. It is said that there are one thousand nine hundred and ninety nine mantras in Yajurveda. There are one thousand eightysix branches also. The branches in Yajus are known by the names Kāṇvī, Mādhyandinī, Kaṭhī, Madhyakaṭhī, Maitrāyaṇī, Taittirīya, Vaiśampāyanikā and so on.

In Sāma Veda there are branches such as Kauthumī, Ātharvaṇāyinī and so on; and songs such as Āraṇyakam, Ukthami, Ūham and so on. The number of Sāmavedic verses are nine thousand four hundred and twenty-five.

Sumantu, Jañjali, Ślokāyani, Śaunaka, Pippalāda, Muñjakeśa and such others were responsible for the sorting and grouping of the mantras in the Atharvaveda. Altogether there are one thousand six hundred Upaniṣads. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 271).

5) Expositions of the Vedas. The religion of the Āryans became an established one when Vyāsa had created the Vedasaṁhitās. The aim of Vyāsa was to bring about uniformity in the religious observances by performing rites and rituals, religious ceremonies such as sacrifices etc. without any flaw. Following this a very wide Vedic literature grew up. The study of the Vedas, critical review of meaning, the connection between mantras and tantras (Chants and rituals), Grammar, etymology, all these became inevitable. As the Vedas could be looked at from different points of view, from very early days, various types of expositions of the Vedas came out. Seven types of commentaries, Nairukta, Yājñika, Vaiyākaraṇa Jyautiṣa, Sāmpradāyika Ādhyātmika, Aitihāsika (pertaining to etymology, sacrifice, grammar astronomy, customs of a tribe, Brāhma or Spiritual legends and ancient lore) were the prominent among them. When the westerners began research work in the Vedas, another branch of literature also took form, known as the Āgamikas (the historical). Even in the time of Yāska, who was an authority on Nirukta (etymology) the Vedas were expounded on the basis of legends and ancient lore. Hints to this effect are seen in Yāska's works. Mention is made about other types of expositions also, in them. The last book of importance in the Sāmpradāyika type of exposition, was Vedārthaprakāśa, of Sāyaṇa. But the commentary of Skandasvāmī, the books Ṛgarthadīpikā and Udgīthabhāṣya of Mādhavācārya etc. have spread the sāmpradāyika type of speculations in India. There is another cult in India which believes that everything seen in the Vedas is spiritual and that the spells and incantations are esoteric.

6) The gods of the Vedas. All the gods known today are not found in the Vedas. Even those who are found do not have the prominence that is given to them now. For example, the deity Viṣṇu, worshipped as one of the three godheads today, is not as omnipotent as the Indra of the Vedas. Though Viṣṇu is praised in five spells in Ṛgveda, when compared with other deities, he was not of much prominence. In the Vedas the incarnation of Vāmana is not given much importance. Even though Rudra is a recognized deity and mention occurs about Kapardī, in the Vedas, there is not a song of praise of Śiva in the Ṛgveda. There is no mention at all, about the worship of the Phallus, Devī and so on in the Vedas. The Vedas celebrate the Omniscience of Varuṇa, Indra, Agni, Mitra, the Maruts and so on. The lustre of Indra was gradually dimmed with the efflux of time and he became a mere libertine in the Purāṇas. The importance of many deities such as Varuṇa, Agni, Mitra, Aśvin and so on was greatly diminished in the Purāṇas. Thirtythree deities pertaining to Earth, Ether and Sky are praised in the Vedas.

7) The rites concerning instruction in Vedas. Manu has given certain instructions as to how the teaching of Vedas should be conducted.

8) The teachers of Veda. See under Guruparamparā.

9) The period of the Vedas. The Indians believe that the spells and incantations and the Brāhmaṇas are not man-made, but are revelations by God. So they are considered to be beginningless and endless. The hermits are considered to be seers of the spells. It is mentioned "Mantradraṣṭāraḥ na tu Kartāraḥ". (They are seers of Mantra, not makers). In the opinion of one party, according to this maxim, it is not necessarry to search for the creators or the period of creation, of mantras. They hold that only the Sūtras (thread, clue, guide, rule, aphorism) are made by man.

The westerners and the modern thinkers of India do not agree completely with this view. They believe that the early Āryans who entered India, first settled down in the Punjab and that the local civilization which they had assumed, broke out as songs of praise. In course of time, these songs of Praise took the form of Ṛgveda mantras (saying, song, formula). In the beginning there was only one Veda. Many believe that this state continued up to B.C. 1500. It is a fact universally acknowledged, that this Vedic literature is the most ancient literature of the world. There is difference of opinion as to the period of origin of this Vedic literature. Prof. Macdonell and Prof. Jacobi are foremost among those who have made their opinions. In the opinion of Prof. Macdonell, the Vedic literature originated in the period between B.C. 1500 and 1200. But Jacobi's opinion is that all the Vedas were made before B.C. 4000.

VEDADIṢA. The son of Bṛhadratha, the King of Cedi. Mention is made about him in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9.

VEDAGARBHĀ. A name of Devī. When Devī killed Śumbha and such other Asuras, Indra got pleased with her and praised her as follows :

> "Āryā, Durgā, Vedagarbhā,
> Ambikā, Bhadrakālī; Bhadrā, Kṣemyā
> Kṣemakarī, Naikabāhū, I praise you."
> (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

VEDAKALPA. A section of Atharvaveda. The hermit Muñjakeśa divided Atharva Veda into five Saṁhitās (collections) called Nakṣatra Kalpa, Veda Kalpa, Saṁhitā Kalpa, Āṅgirasa Kalpa, and Śānti Kalpa. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 6).

VEDANĀ. A goddess who caused pain to living things. Adharma married Hiṁsā. Two daughters named Nṛtā and Nirṛti were born to them. From them Bhaya, Naraka, Māyā and Vedanā were born. Mṛtyu was the daughter of Māyā. Duḥkha was the son of Vedanā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

VEDĀṄGA. See under Veda.

VEDANIDHI. A hermit. For further details see under Pramohinī.

VEDĀNTA. See under Veda.

VEDAŚARMĀ I. The son of a brahmin named Śivaśarmā. (See under Śivaśarmā).

VEDAŚARMĀ II. See under Vidura.

VEDAŚIRAS I. A hermit born in the clan of Bhṛgu. He was born to the hermit Mārkaṇḍeya by his wife Mūrdhanyā otherwise called Dhūmrā. Pīvarī was the wife of Vedaśiras. (Brahma : 2, 11, 7; Vāyu Purāṇa 28 : 6).

While Vedaśiras was doing penance once, a celestial maid named Śuci came to make him deviate from penance. A daughter was born to him by her. Yamadharma wished to kidnap that daughter. Vedaśiras cursed Yamadharma to become a river. (Skanda Purāṇa, 4 : 259).

VENA I. An ancient King who was notorious for his bad rule.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order : Brahmā - Svāyambhuva Manu - Uttānapāda - Dhruva-Śiṣṭi-Ripu-Cākṣuṣa Manu-Kuru-Aṅga-Vena.

2) Birth. Ten sons including Kuru, were born to Manu Cākṣuṣa by his wife Naḍvalā. Āgneyī, the wife of Kuru gave birth to six sons Aṅga and others. Aṅga married Sunīthā. The son Vena was born by Sunīthā. It is mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 13, that Sunīthā, the mother of Vena was the eldest daughter of Yama, and in Vāmana Purāṇa Chapter 47, that this Sunīthā was the daughter born to Kāla and Mṛtyu. Vena who was born as the son of the daughter of Yama was born a wicked man because of the badness of his grandfather.

Vena grew up as a great sinner. A story occurs in Padma Purāṇa about an incident which caused Vena to become a great sinner.

The story says that Sunīthā was the mother of Vena. In her play she used to imitate her father's job which was hurting others. One day when she went to the forest for play with her maids she saw Suśaṅkha the son of a Gandharva named Gītakolāhala. That youth who was handsome in every part of his body, was doing penance meditating on the goddess Sarasvatī for the attainment of the art of music. Sunīthā began to annoy him daily. Suśaṅkha bore this annoyance patiently. He said only this -"Go away, go away." But she did not pay heed to his appeals. Once she became angry and struck him. Getting angry at this, Suśaṅkha called out, "You wicked girl ! Why do you annoy me ? You have beaten me, who am engaged in penance, for no cause." That righteous Gandharva youth curbed his anger considering that she was a woman.

She told him "My father will beat everybody in the three worlds. He will harm the wicked, and will not do any harm to the good. So he rules the country righteously." Sunīthā told all about the story to her father. Though Yama, the incarnation of righteousness, heard all that his daughter said he did not give any reply.

She again went to the forest and struck him with a whip. Suśaṅka rose up, shivering with pain and cursed her thus :

"You wicked girl ! When you become a house-holder and join your husband you will get a son who will be a scoffer of Devas and Brahmins and an all-round sinner." Thus cursing her he continued his penance. Vena was born according to this curse.

3) The wicked rule of Vena. The hermits anointed Vena as the King. He became lord of the whole earth. He made a proclamation thus:—"Sacrifice is prohibited. Giving alms, is prohibited. Offerings of no kind should be made. Who else, other than I, can be the Yajñapuruṣa ? (the deity who eats the food of sacrifice) ? I am the only lord and consumer of sacrifices".

Hearing this proclamation, the hermits approached him and told him that the Vedas were the basis of righteousness, that sacrifices were ordained in them, and that if no sacrifice was performed the Devas would not be pleased and so on. But this did not make any change in his behaviour.

The hermits became angry. They all gathered together and recited spells and struck him with Darbha (poa) grass and killed him. As there was no King the world fell into darkness. Because of the troubles caused by plunderers, people gathered round the hermits. Hermits joined together and churned the left hand of Vena, from which a man of short stature came out, to whom the hermits said, 'Niṣīda' (sit). Because the hermits said Niṣīda', Niṣāda came into existence from that dwarf born of the sins of Vena. Then the hermits churned the right hand of Vena. At this churning a person as big as a mountain with divine signs came out. He had bow and arrows and in his palm there were marks of a wheel and flag. Seeing this the Devas anointed him the King of the earth. He ruled righteously and brought the goddess earth (Pṛthvī) who had estranged herself from his father Vena close to him. Because he had conciliated Pṛthvī he became famous as a King. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 47).

VENA II. One of the ten sons of Vaivasvata Manu. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 15).

VIBHĪṢAṆA I. Brother of Rāvaṇa. The son Viśravas was born to Prajāpati Pulastya. Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa were born to Viśravas by his wife Mālinī. A daughter named Śūrpaṇakhā also was born to them. Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa went to do penance under the leadership of their eldest brother Rāvaṇa. They did severe penance and obtained various boons. The boon given to Vibhīṣaṇa was to live as a righteous man. After that they came back and defeated Kubera, the ruler of Laṅkā and brought Laṅkā under their control. Rāvaṇa became the ruler of Laṅkā. Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa lived with their brother in Laṅkā. Rāvaṇa married Mandodarī. Kumbhakarṇa took Vajrajvālā the daughter of Mahābali and Vibhīṣaṇa took Saralā, the daughter of Śailūṣa a Gandharva as their wives, according to Uttara Rāmāyaṇa. Rāvaṇa conquered the three worlds and was ruling as the emperor of the whole world, when Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa went to the forest, with Sītā. Rāvaṇa carried Sītā away to Laṅkā. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, with the help of the monkey-army entered Laṅkā. At this time Rāvaṇa called together his ministers to consider the details about the battle with Śrī Rāma. Every one present except Vibhīṣaṇa voted for the battle. Vibhīṣaṇa advised Rāvaṇa to return Sītā, the stolen property and beg Śrī Rāma for pardon. Rāvaṇa got angry and expelled Vibhīṣaṇa from Laṅkā. Vibhīṣaṇa joined the side of Śrī Rāma and informed him of all the military secrets of Rāvaṇa. In the battle which ensued Rāvaṇa was killed and Vibhīṣaṇa was made the king of Laṅkā by Śrī Rāma. It is stated in Kambarāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa that according to the instruction of Śrī Rāma and at the instance of Indra, Viśvakarmā came to Laṅkā and renovated the city of Laṅkā.

Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā and became the king. One day Candragupta, the second son of Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa (Rāvaṇa with thousand heads) stole away the daughter of Sugrīva and the daughter-in-law of Vibhīṣaṇa. Vibhīṣaṇa informed Śrī Rāma of this. Śrī Rāma, with Lakṣmaṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa, Sugrīva, Hanūmān and the monkey-army went to the city of Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa in the middle of Milk-sea. A fierce battle ensued which lasted for three days. All the Rākṣasas were killed. (See under Sahasramukharāvaṇa).

It is mentioned in Kamba Rāmāyaṇa that in the horse sacrifice performed by Śrī Rāma, the control of the army was in the hands of Sugrīva and financial control was vested in the hands of Vibhīṣaṇa.

VIBHĪṢAṆA II. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, as given below, about another Vibhīṣaṇa who had ruled over Laṅkā.

Once Ghaṭotkaca went to the palace of Vibhīṣaṇa as the messenger of Sugrīva. Vibhīṣaṇa who heard from Ghṭotkaca about Yudhiṣṭhira honoured the messenger greatly and gave him a large quantity of valuable presents.

(iv) Dhātā and Vidhātā gave to Subrahmaṇya two followers named Suvrata and Sukarmā. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 42).

VIDHAVĀ A woman whose husband is dead. In ancient India, it was ordained how a widow should live. It was allowed for a widow to get a son by her younger brother -in law to continue the family line in case the death of her husband occurred before the couple had children.. The procedure about this is given in Manusmṛti, Chapter 9.

"He who goes to accept the widow with the permission of great people, should besmear his body with ghee and go to her bed in the night in a dark room. She should have only one son in this manner. After she has become pregnant, they should behave to each other as a teacher and a younger brother-in-law."

VIDHṚTI. Son of Khagaṇa and the father of Hiraṇyanābha. He was a King. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VIDRUTA. A King born in the family of Yayāti. He was the son of Rucaka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VIDULĀ. A heroic Kṣatriya woman of India. In Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, there is a story, how this Vidulā sent her son, who had fled from the battle-field because of fear, back to the battlefield again.

The Pāṇḍavas, who had completed forest-life and Pseudonymity successfully and returned to Hastināpura were again deceived and put to shame. Śrī Kṛṣṇa's argument as a mediator was not successful, in the palace of the Kauravas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came away from the palace of Duryodhana and entered the house of Vidura and visited Kuntī. Śrī Kṛṣṇa asked her opinion on the idea of waging a war against the Kauravas. It is not meet and right on the part of a heroic mother to welcome a son who comes home being defeated in battle. To substantiate this point, she told Śrī Kṛṣṇa the story of Vidulā, as given below.

Vidulā was a brave woman, who lived in ancient India. Her son Sañjaya fought with the King of Sindhu and was defeated. When he came home Vidulā did not receive him. She emboldened him by saying that she would be more proud of a son, who had sacrificed his life in the battlefield than one who returned home defeated. All his arguments which were excuses for his cowardice, were refuted by his mother. At last Sañjaya engaged again in a battle with the King of Sindhu.

On hearing this story told by Kuntī Śrī Kṛṣṇa became immensely pleased. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, 3 Chapters from 134).

VIDURA I.

1) General information. Vidura was a superhuman being, very famous in the story of Mahābhārata, as a brother of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, as a man of colossal intelligence who had been closely watching the goings and comings of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas, as the adviser of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and as a man of immense learning and wisdom.

2) Incarnation af Dharmadeva. There is a story in Mahā-Bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 107, which describes Vidura as born from a portion of Dharmadeva. The story is given below.

Long ago there was a hermit called Māṇḍavya in India. As he was standing in deep meditation near his hermitage, the men of the King chased some thieves and came to the place where the hermit stood. The robbers placed the stolen property near the hermit and ran away. The king's men caught the hermit, and the thieves. The King ordered them to be placed on a trident. The thieves died on the trident. But Māṇḍavya was not dead. The King sawed the trident and got Māṇḍavya down. The hermit went to Dharmadeva and asked him what his blame was for suffering the punishment of the trident on him. Dharmadeva replied that the punishment was inflicted for a cruel deed he had done in his childhood. He had caught some flies and made a bunch of them by piercing them with the rib of a coconut-palm leaf. But Māṇḍavya argued that Dharmadeva was not right in punishing him because the Śāstras and rules of righteousness said that mistakes committed by boys below the age of twelve could not be considered to be sins. Further he cursed Dharmadeva that he would take birth on the earth from the womb of a Śūdrā. Accordingly Dharmadeva took birth from the womb of the servant of Ambikā and Ambālikā.

3) Birth. Vidura was born as the brother of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. (For detailed story see under Dhṛtarāṣṭra 1, para 2).

4) Up to marriage. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura spent their younger days in Hastināpura as inseparable brothers. Their teacher was Bhīṣma. Vidura learned the Vedas, Śāstras, Purāṇas, Itihāsas etc. also, along with the education given to a prince such as archery, club-fight, sword-fight, wrestling, controlling elephants etc. He understood that to be righteous was far better than fighting. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 108, that Vidura got the sense of righteousness, and education in fighting, at the same time.

Childhood ended. As Vidura was born to a Brahmin by a Śūdrā woman he had no right to become King. When he grew up, the duty to find a wife for him fell on Bhīṣma. At that time a damsel born to a Brahmin by a Śūdrā woman was being brought up in the palace of King Devaka. With the permission of Devaka, Bhīṣma brought the girl and gave her in marriage to Vidura. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 114, that sons and daughters were born to the couple.

5) Partiality towards the Pāṇḍavas. Vidura was the most intelligent and wisest man of his time, and he always favoured righteousness. Though he viewed the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas with equal favour, in his heart he felt some partiality towards the Pāṇḍavas, because they were virtuous, whereas the Kauravas were becoming more and more wicked. As this partiality arose from his sense of righteousness, nobody could blame Vidura for this. His aim was the prosperity of the Lunar dynasty of Kings.

Many ill omens were seen at the time of the birth of Duryodhana. Vidura understood that if that infant grew up he would be a comet to the Lunar dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 115, that Vidura advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra that it would be better for him to throw away that infant.

The death of Pāṇḍu drew Vidura closer to the Pāṇḍavas. Vidura took the lead in performing the funeral rites and other ceremonies which followed. The Pāṇḍavas. were very sad and miserable at the death of their father. It was at this time that Duryodhana poisoned Bhīmasena, tied him with a rope and threw him into the river Ganges. Bhīmasena was carried to the world of nāgas (serpents). Kuntī felt grieved at the loss of her son Bhīma, but Vidura consoled her.

It was due to the wisdom of Vidura that the Pāṇḍavas escaped from the disaster in the lac-house. As soon as Duryodhana had completed the lac-house, Vidura understood the deception lying hidden under it. and he informed the Pāṇḍavas of everything about it. Moreover he sent a man named Khanaka and made an underground passage from the lac-house. When the lac-house was burnt down, the Pāṇḍavas escaped by the under-ground passage and reached the banks of the Ganges. Vidura had sent a ferryman secretly to take them to the other side of the Ganges. When Bhīṣma got the news that the Pāṇḍavas had been burnt to death in the lac-house he became very sad. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 149, that Vidura informed Bhīṣma secretly that the Pāṇḍavas were not dead.

After this event the Pāṇḍavas come into the scene only at the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Pāñcālī. Bhīṣma and Droṇa proposed that the Pāṇḍavas should be brought back and be given half of the kingdom. Vidura, by his arugments convinced Dhṛtarāṣṭra that the proposal of Bhīṣma and Droṇa was correct. Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Vidura to bring the Pāṇḍavas back. Vidura went to the city of Drupada and brought the Pāṇḍavas back and consoled their mother Kuntī. After this Yudhiṣṭhira performed Rājasūya (sacrifice of royal consecration). Vidura took part in it and took the charge of financial part of the sacrifice. It was after this that Duryodhana challenged Yudhiṣṭhira for a game of dice. Vidura saw beforehand that this move on the part of Duryodhana was dangerous. So he talked forcibly against this, and gave warning to all concerned. As Duryodhana did not agree with Vidura, he was scolded. But Duryodhana was firm and the game was conducted. Pāñcālī was harassed by means of stripping and the Pāṇḍavas went to the forest. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3, that Vidura had been witnessing all these scenes with wet eyes.

6) Separated from the Pāṇḍavas. When the Pāṇḍavas were driven to the forest, Dhṛtarāṣṭra felt sorry. He became more afraid of the people than he was sorry for the Pāṇḍavas. He understood that his subjects would unite and rise against his sons. He called Vidura and asked him for a remedy. Vidura who was full of impatience, made a speech against the wickedness of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and advised him to forsake his own sons and to bring the Pāṇḍavas back and give them the kingdom. Dhṛtarāṣṭra did not like this approach. He said that Vidura was partial to the Pāṇḍavas and asked him to go away from the palace. Vidura became grieved at this. He followed the Pāṇḍavas, and walking a long distance, reached the forest Kāmyaka and met the Pāṇḍavas.

When Vidura had gone Dhṛtarāṣṭra felt miserable. He sent for Vidura and when he returned Dhṛtarāṣṭra begged for pardon. Vidura again became the adviser of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 6).

7) Adviser of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. The advice of Vidura is famous in Mahābhārata. The main duty of Vidura was to console Dhṛtarāṣṭra by speaking about righteousness when he became troubled in mind because of the constant quarrels between his sons and the Pāṇḍavas. Vidura fulfilled his duty well. Duryodhana was firm on the point that not a dot of land would be given to the Pāṇḍavas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to Hastināpura as mediator. Duryodhana showed disrespect to him. Vidura said in strong words that it was wrong on the part of Duryodhana to have done so and compelled Dhṛtarāṣṭra to show due respect and hospitality to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Accordingly Dhṛtarāṣṭra welcomed Śrī Kṛṣṇa and showed respect and hospitality. Knowing this, Duryodhana and his brothers tried to make Śrī Kṛṣṇa a captive. Vidura harshly scolded them for this attempt. Seeing all these impudent actions on the part of his sons, Dhṛtarāṣṭra became distressed. Vidura consoled him by good exhortations. He told Dhṛtarāṣṭra about the transience of life and the importance of the soul. When the battle was fiercely going on in the battle-ground of Kurukṣetra, Vidura remained with Dhṛtarāṣṭra consoling him and giving him good advice. The death of Bhīṣma was an unbearable grief to Vidura. He took part in the funeral of Bhīṣma. He himself placed the body on the funeral pyre. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Stanza 11).

8) Pilgrimage. When Vidura failed in his attempt to ward off a pitched battle between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas he felt extremely miserable. Without taking part in the battle, he started on a pilgrimage. Getting the news at Prabhāsakṣetra about the end of the battle, he went to the basin of river Yamunā. On the way he heard the news of the passing away of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, from Uddhava. Before death Śrī Kṛṣṇa had revealed that Vidura had heard Uddhavagītā from Maitreya. This book which is in the form of a conversation between Vidura and Maitreya contains the talk between Kapila and Devahūti. Description of the line of Manus, sacrifice of Dakṣa, story of Dhruva, story of Pṛthu, story of Purañjana etc. were the subjects of the talk. (Bhāgavata, 3--4).

9) End. The Bhārata-battle came to an end. The Kauravas were exterminated. Efforts were begun to establish law and order. In all these efforts Vidura was a help to the Pāṇḍavas. Still he spent most of his time with the old Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Yudhiṣṭhira came to Dhṛtarāṣṭra and both embraced each other. Seeing this Vidura cried aloud. Vidura advised Yudhiṣṭhira how to carry on the administration of the new government. After this he decided to go to the forest to spend his last days. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī, Kuntī, Vidura and Śakuni went to the forest. The Pāṇḍavas tried in vain to prevent them from going. When Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī, Kuntī, Vidura, Sañjaya and others started for the forest, even Bhīmasena cried aloud. Pāṇḍavas and the people of the city went along with them up to the river Ganges. On the bank of the Ganges near the hermitage of Śatayūpa, a hermitage was erected and Vidura and the others lived there.

They lived there for nearly six years. The Pāṇḍavas became unable to bear the separation from their elders. Once Dharmaputra dreamt about his mother. Next day the Pāṇḍavas went to the banks of the Ganges. Pāñcālī, Subhadrā, Uttarā and many people of the city followed them. They went to the Śatayūpa-hermitage and saw Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the others. But the great Vidura was not there. When asked about it he got the reply that having become abstemious and having no more desires he was wandering about. Yudhiṣṭhira was greatly troubled.

Next day at dawn when Yudhiṣṭhira went to bathe in the Ganges, on the way he saw Vidura sitting in contemplation with a stone in his mouth. Yudhiṣṭhira stood with joined palms before the lean and weak form of that sage and said "Look, Dharmaputra bows before you." He repeated this several times. But there was no change in Vidura. Yudhiṣṭhira's disappointment did not last long. For, in a short while Dharmaputra saw that a divine radiance emanated from the body of Vidura and passed on to his body and that the body of Vidura fell lifeless on the ground. This union took place because both Vidura and Yudhiṣṭhira were portions of Dharmadeva. After this Dharmaputra made preparations to burn the body of Vidura. Then an ethereal voice said "Vidura is abstemious. His body should not be burned." Dharmaputra went to the hermitage and informed all, about the death of Vidura. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapters 26 to 28).

Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 22, that Vidura entered Svarga (heaven) and stays there in the form of Dharmadeva.

VIDURA II. A Kṣatriya who lived in Pāñcāla. The story of this Vidura, who had killed a Brahmin because of his want, is given in Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapter 91. The story is given below:

Long ago there lived a Kṣatriya, named Vidura, in Pāñcāla. Because of penury he killed a Brahmin. After that the Kṣatriya discarded his lock of hair and Brahmastring and went to every house saying "Look, here am I, a slayer of Brahmin. Please, give alms to the drunkard and killer of a Brahmin." Saying thus he walked from house to house and took alms. But he did not get remission of Brahmahatyā (killing of a Brahmin).

Filled with grief and sorrow and mental worry the sinner Vidura sat in the shade of a tree. At that time Candraśarmā, a Brahmin of Magadha came there. He was a wicked man who had killed his teacher because of inordinate lust in consequence of which he had been forsaken by his own people. Vidura asked Candraśarmā who wore no sign of a Brāhmaṇa, what he was. Candraśarmā told his story to Vidura who in return told him his sinful acts.

At this time another Brahmin named Vedaśarmā came there. He also was a sinner. The three of them told each other about their sinful acts. At this time Vallāla, a Vaiśya came there. He was a drunkard who had killed cows. These four desperate sinners travelled together and visited several tīrthas (holy baths). But they did not get remission of their sins. At last they started for Kālañjaragiri.

While these desperate sinners were living in Kālañjara a poor Brahmin came there. He asked them why they were so sad. They told him everything. When he heard their stories he felt pity for them. The old Brahmin said "You sinners should go to Prayāga, Puṣkara, Sarvatīrtha and Vārāṇasī and bathe in the Gaṅgā on New Moon days and you will become free from sin." They obeyed the old Brahmin and went to the holy places told by him. Thus Vidura and his friends became sinless.

VIDŪRA. A king of the Kuru dynasty. He was the son born to the great king Kuru by Śubhāṅgī, a damsel of Dāśārha family. Vidūra married Sampriyā, a princess of Madhu royal family. A son named Anaśvā was born to her. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanzas 39-40).

VIDURĀGAMANARĀJYALĀBHAPARVA. A sub-section of Ādi Parva, comprising chapters 199 to 217, in Mahābhārata.

VIDŪRATHA I. A king of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. Information got from Mahābhārata about this king is given below.

(i) Vidūratha also was present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 19).

(ii) In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 10, mention is made that the brightness of this king increased after his participation in the festival conducted on mount Raivata.

(iii) Vidūratha was one of the seven famous and mighty kings of the Yadu dynasty. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 14).

(iv) Vidūratha was a close friend of Śiśupāla, Śālva, Jarāsandha and so on. Jarāsandha employed this Vidūratha as the guardian of the Eastern entrance of the city of Mathurā. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed his brother Dantavaktra, Śālva, Śiśupāla and others, Vidūratha ran to take revenge on Kṛṣṇa. But he was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

(v) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 16, that after death he joined the Viśvadevas.

VIDŪRATHA II. A king of the Pūru dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 75, that Ṛkṣavān hid the son of this king in a mountain and saved him from the Kṣatriya-extermination of Paraśurāma and at that time spotted leopards brought up this child.

VIDŪRATHA III. A king who was the friend of the hermit Bhalanda. This king had two sons named Sunīti and Sumati and a daughter named Mudāvatī. One day while Vidūratha was hunting in the forest, he saw a cleavage on the earth caused by the yawning of Kujṛmbhāsura. The king stood there for a while looking at the cleavage. Then the hermit Suvrata who had been standing close by approached the king and said. "This asura Kujṛmbha has a divine pestle with him. Because of the possession of this pestle he has become invincible and is a threat to the whole world."

Vidūratha, who knew everything from Suvrata, lived cautiously. One day his daughter was carried away by this Kujṛmbhāsura. Sunīti and Sumati confronted the asura to rescue their sister but were made captives. Finally Vatsapri, the son of the hermit Bhalanda killed the Rākṣasa (giant) and liberated princess Mudāvatī. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 113).

VIḌŪRATHA I. A king born in the family of Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta. The father of this king was Suratha and his son was Sārvabhauma. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VIḌŪRATHA II. Brother of Dantavaktra. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa had defeated Dantavaktra, his brother Viḍūratha came to fight with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and was killed in the fight. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VIDUṢA. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. Ghṛta was the father of king Viduṣa and Pracetas was his son. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

VIDYĀ I. A maid of Devī Umā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 48).

VIDYĀ II. A deity. This deity is worshipped as the deity of three Vedas which are the most important of the religious or Vedic literature. Mention is made about this deity in the preface of Ṛgvedabhāṣya by Sāyaṇa, as follows.

Once Vidyā approached a Brahmin and said "I am your wealth. Your duty is to impart me to disciples who are pure, celibate, law-abiding and active, and who protect the treasure. I hate disciples who are jealous."

VIDYĀDHARA(S). A group of semi-gods. Vidyādharas, Apsarases (celestial maids), Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras and so on are semigods. Of these Kinnaras are lute-players, and Vidyādharas wear garlands, and all these groups live in the sky. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 8, that when attracted by spells and incantations, Indra went to the Sarpasatra (serpent sacrifice) of Janamejaya, the Vidyādharas walked behind him (Indra).

VIDYĀNĀTHA (AGASTYA). A Sanskrit writer on rhetorics. He was also called Agastya. He is the author of Pratāparudrīyam. The real name of Pratāparudrīyam is Partāparudrayaśobhūṣaṇam.

He was a member of the court of King Pratāparudradeva who ruled over the Kingdom of Warāṅgal from 1295 to 1323 A.D. He has written a drama of five acts, under the name "Pratāparudra Kalyāṇa." Pratāparudrīyam is a book on rhetorical figures.

VIDYĀSĀGARA. Father of Bhartṛhari. See under Bhartṛhari.

VIDYĀTĪRTHA. A holy place in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 52, that those who bathe in this tīrtha (bath) would get knowledge.

VIDYOTA. The son born to Sage Dharma, by his wife Lambā, the daughter of Dakṣa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

VIDYOTĀ. A celestial maid of Alakāpurī. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 45, that Vidyotā took part in the dance performed in honour of Aṣṭāvakra, the hermit.

VIDYUDDHARA. A Deva Gandharva. (See under Nahuṣa).

VIDYUDRŪPA. A Yakṣa who was the favourite of Kubera. This Yakṣa married Madanikā, the daughter of Menakā. Once when these two were sitting on mount Kailāsa and drinking liquor the bird Kaṅka born of the family of Garuḍa came there. Vidyudrūpa killed Kaṅka after a small fight.

Hearing about the death of Kaṅka, his brother Kandara came to avenge the death of his brother. A fierce battle ensued between the two, in which Vidyudrūpa met with death. After this Madanikā accepted Kandara as her husband. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 2, 4, 28).

VIDYUDVARCAS. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the manes. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 31).

VIDYUJJIHVA I. A Rākṣasa (giant). This Vidyujjihva was a friend of Ghaṭotkaca. He was killed by Duryodhana in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 20).

VIDYUJJIHVA II. Husband of Śūrpaṇakhā. A son named Śambhukumāra was born to the couple. As this son Śambhukumāra was standing like a young tree in the forest Daṇḍakāraṇya, Lakṣmaṇa cut it down by his sword. Thus Śambhukumāra died. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa).

VIDYUJJIHVA III. One of the important Rākṣasa followers of Rāvaṇa. This giant, by his sorcery and witch-craft, showed Sītā, the head cut off from the body of Śrī Rāma and his broken bow, to make her consent to become the wife of Rāvaṇa. He repeated this stratagem on several occasions. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 12).

VIDYUJJIHVA IV. One of the sons born to Viśravas by his wife Vākā. Mention is made in Vāyu Purāṇa that this Rākṣasa lives in the city called Arvāktala in Pātāla (underworld) known as Mahātala.

VIDYUNMĀLĪ I. A son of Tārakāsura. He was one of the Tripuras. (For details see under Tripura).

VIDYUNMĀLĪ II. A mighty and brave Rākṣasa who was a friend of Rāvaṇa. After the death of Rāvaṇa, this asura, who lived in the Pātāla (underworld) stole away the sacrificial horse of Śrī Rāma to avenge the death of Rāvaṇa. Śatrughna killed Vidyunmālī and redeemed the sacrificial horse. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa).

VIDYUTĀ. A celestial maid of Alakāpurī. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 45, that this celestial maid performed a dance in honour of the hermit Aṣṭāvakra.

VIDYUTĀKṢA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 62).

VIDYUTKEŚA. A Rākṣasa (giant). (For details see under Praheti).

VIDYUTKEŚĪ. A Rākṣasa King. The notorious Sukeśī was the son of this King. (See under Sukeśī).

VIDYUTPARṆĀ. A celestial maid born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Pradhā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, that celestial maids such as Alambuṣā, Vidyutparṇā, Miśrakeśī, Tilottamā and such others were famous for their beauty.

VIDYUTPRABHA I. See under Muktāphalaketu.

VIDYUTPRABHA II. A hermit. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 125).

VIDYUTPRABHA III. A Dānava (Asura). This asura pleased Rudradeva by penance and acquired from him the control of all the three worlds for one lakh of years, the recognition as a follower of Śiva and the kingdom of Kuśadvīpa, as boons. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14).

VIDYUTPRABHĀ I. Ten celestial maids of Northern quarter .(M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 21).

VIDYUTPRABHĀ II. Grand-daughter of Mahābali. (See under Śrīdatta).

VIGĀHANA. A famous King, born in Mukuṭa Vaṁśa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 16).

VIGHANA. A giant on the side of Rāvaṇa. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 6).

VIGRAHA I. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by the ocean. The other one was Saṅgraha. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 50).

VIGRAHA II. One of the six attributes of Kings. (See under Ṣaḍguṇa).

VIGRAHA III. (Image).

1) General information. God, who is not discernible to the outward senses, is given embodiment and consecrated in places of worship by people. These figures are called Vigrahas (idols or images). People worship Śālagrāma, (a kind of ammonite found in the river Gaṇḍakī), Bāṇaliṅga (Phallus), mystical diagrams, animals, birds, trees, rivers, lakes, places of death etc. and so many other things.

2) The different kinds of Vigrahas. Vigrahas are of three groups. They are :-(1) Mysterious (2) Evident-mysterious (3) Evident. Śālagrāma, Phallus etc. belong to the group mysterious. The Mukhaliṅga, considered to be the image of Trimūrti (Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva) in the Elephanta cave, belongs to the group Evident. The image of Phallus is Evident-mysterious. In the first, there is no form or figure. In the second there are parts of the figure. The image which shows the entire figure is Evident.

Some gods and goddesses possess two appearances, peaceful and fierce. Those who wish to succeed in performing cruel deeds and to vanquish enemies, worship fierce gods whereas those who wish for peace, worship peaceful Gods. Viśvarūpa, (assuming all shapes), Narasiṁha (the man-lion), Vaṭapatraśāyī (as lying on banyan-leaf) and Paraśurāma are fierce forms of Viṣṇu. Destroying Kāma (cupid) Gaja and Tripura are fierce forms of Śiva worshipped by some people. Generally temples with images in this form are erected outside the village or city.

Owing to the differences, in the making and the materials used, the images are divided into three groups.

They are portraits, Half-portraits and corrupted portraits. The whole of the figure will be made in (portraits) citras. In half-citras only the front view will be completed. Corrupted Citras are images done on the wall or rock.

3) Main images. Main images are mostly Śaivite or Vaiṣṇavite. There will be one or two other images. Worship of Devī (Goddess) is one of them. The Śaivites will worship Pārvatī also after Śiva and the Vaiṣṇavites Mahālakṣmī also after Viṣṇu. In South India the worshippers are Śaivites and Vaiṣṇavites.

4) Śaivites. In India a large number of people worship Śiva. There is not much difference in the mode of worship of these various people. There are worships which are in accordance with the Vedas and which are not. Forms of worship which are Sāttvika (of goodness) and which are not, could be seen. The Śaiva worship called Paraśupada is very ancient. The phallus at Guḍimalla is considered to be as old as B.C. 2nd century. From this it could be inferred how old, the Śaivite worship is in India.

5) The Śaivite images. Of the emblems denoting Śiva, the most important is the Phallus, which is of two kinds, movable and immovable. Risen by itself and or erected and set firm and consecrated inside temples are immovable; that which is made of earth, metal, jewel, wood or stone, is movable. There are Phalluses made for the time being. They are fixed on platforms or pedestals. They are of different sizes and shapes. The Phallus is made of male stone and the pedestal of female stone.

6) The portions of Śiva. There are various kinds of images meant to reveal various attributes of Śiva. Liṅgodbhava (originated from Phallus), Candraśekhara, Raudra, Umāsaṁhita (with Umā) etc. are some of them. Kāmāntaka (killing Kāma or Cupid), Gajāri (enemy of Gaja), Kālāri (Enemy of Yama) and Tripuradāhaka (burning Tripura) are figures of extermination. Śiva has the figures of blessing Caṇḍeśa, Viṣṇu, Nandīśvara, Vighneśa and Arjuna also. There are a large number of images in various dancing poses.

There are four other figures of Dakṣiṇāmūrti, such as the explanation, knowledge, yoga (or meditation, contemplation and other ways of union with the Universal Soul) and Vīṇādhara (carrying a lute). A few other forms are Bhikṣāṭaka (begging alms), Kapāladhārī (wearing skulls), Gaṅgādhara (bearing the Ganges), Ardhanārīśvara (God half of whom is a woman), Vṛṣabhavāhana (seated on a bull), Viṣabhakṣaka (eating poison) etc. The figures of Sadāśiva, Maheśa, Ekādaśarudras (eleven Rudras), Vidyeśvara and Mūrtyaṣṭaka are seen occasionally here and there. There are scriptures describing these figures.

7) The Devas (gods) connected with Śiva. Among the gods connected with Śiva, first place is given to Gaṇapati. Worship of Gaṇapati was in vogue from 6th or 7th century B.C. Perhaps the images that we see today were made after this period.

In South India temples dedicated to Gaṇapati are not scarce. The position of Gaṇapati is at the entrance of villages and fortresses, at the foot of banyan trees, at the entrance of temples and at the south-west corner of Śaivite temples.

There are images of Gaṇapati in the postures of standing and dancing. Main images are those with the trunk turned to the right and to the left. The trunk is turned to the right in some and to the left in others.

8) Subrahmaṇya. Subrahmaṇya is worshipped only in South India. Subrahmaṇya is known by various names such as Kumāra, Muruka, Kārttikeya, Skanda, Ārumukha, Guha, and so on. Temples dedicated to Subrahmaṇya are seen in plenty in Tamil Nadu. They are all situated on the tops of hills.

There is sufficient proof in the poetic works of the Saṅgha period, to the fact that Subrahmaṇya-worship was prevalent in South India. On excavation at the place Nāgārjunakoṇḍa in the District of Guntur, images of Subrahmaṇya were found under the earth. They were as old as 3rd century B.C.

Images of Subrahmaṇya are seen in various postures and shapes such as sitting, with six faces, with one face, with two hands, with four hands, sometimes with wife, in the state of having finished investiture with the Brahma-string etc. There are figures sitting on the peacock also.

9) Other images. Images of Śakti, Lakṣmī, Earth-goddess, Sarasvatī, Saptamātṛs (Seven Mothers), Jyeṣṭhā, Viṣṇu, the ten incarnations, the planets such as the sun etc. the deities of the weapon like the thunderbolt, Śakti (lance), Nandikeśvara, Caṇḍeśvara, Śāstā, Kṣetrapāla, Brahmā, Guardians of the zones, Aśvinīdevas, half gods, etc. are also dedicated and worshipped in temples.

VIHAṄGA. A serpent (nāga) born in the race of the Nāga Airāvata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 12, that this serpent fell in the sacrificial fire of the serpent-sacrifice performed by Janamejaya and was burnt to death.

VIHAṄGAMA. A soldier of the giant Khara. This Khara who confronted Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa in Daṇḍakāraṇya (forest Daṇḍaka) had twelve army captains under him, including Vihaṅgama, (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 26).

VIHAVYA. The son of Varcas who was born in the dynasty of Gṛtsamada. Vitatya was the son of this Vihavya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 61).

VIHUṆḌA. An asura. This asura was the son of the mighty and great Asura Huṇḍa. At the time of the fierce battle between the devas and the asuras, this mighty asura Huṇḍa and Nahuṣa confronted each other and Huṇḍa was killed. After this Vihuṇḍa, the son of Huṇḍa fought with Nahuṣa. In the earlier part of the battle Vihuṇḍa and his army suffered defeat. Vihuṇḍa began to do penance in order to defeat the Devas who got terrified at this and went to Mahāviṣṇu and prayed for protection. Viṣṇu consoled them saying that he would take necessary steps. When the Devas were gone, Viṣṇu took the form of a beautiful woman and went in search of Vihuṇḍa. They met each other in the garden Nandana. Vihuṇḍa fell in love with her. He wanted to marry her. She said, "Oh, Handsome Vihuṇḍa, I have no objection to be your wife. But there is a condition, you, must gather seven crores of Kāmoda flowers and offer them as oblation to Śiva, and then make a garland of Kāmoda flowers and put it on my neck. From that day onwards I am yours."

Vihuṇḍa agreed to it. He went for the flowers. He wandered over forests and mountains. Nobody had any idea of such a tree or flower. Thinking that this condition, laid by the damsel, was a deceit played upon him, he stood perplexed when the hermit Śukra saw him. He told the hermit everything. Then Śukra told him, "Kāmoda is neither a tree nor a flower. She is goddess who came up from the sea of Milk at the time of the churning. She dwells at Gaṅgādvāra. When she laughs pure white fragrant flowers fall from her lips, on the water of Gaṅgā, every moment. When she is sad, the flowers that fall from her lips will be red."

Vihuṇḍa started for Gaṅgādvāra. Nārada knew this. He came to Vihuṇḍa and said, "It is difficult to reach Gaṅgādvāra and please Kāmodā, and obtain the flower. So the easiest way is to gather the flowers that come down through the water of Gaṅgā." Vihuṇḍa agreed. He took his seat on the bank of Gaṅgā and waited for the flowers to come.

Nārada decided to cause harm to Vihuṇḍa. So he went to Kāmodā and by way of telling her news, he informed her that the hermit Bhṛgu had cursed Mahāviṣṇu and changed him into a man. On hearing this Kāmodā began to cry. Red flowers fell from her lips. They were carried down in cluster by the water of Gaṅgā. Vihuṇḍa gathered them and went to the dwelling place of Śiva. Śiva and Pārvatī saw this by their inward eyes. Pārvatī did not like the idea of offering red flowers at the feet of her beloved husband. Śiva found out a remedy for it. He advised Pārvatī to offer pure white flowers at his feet standing as a boy. Vihuṇḍa came with red flowers Pārvatī appeared in the form of a boy. Both began to vie with each other in offering flowers at the feet of Śiva. Gradually it changed to a fight between the boy and Vihuṇḍa. In the fight Vihuṇḍa was killed. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi khaṇḍa, some chapters from 119).

VIJAYA I. A minister of Daśaratha. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 7, Stanza 3).

VIJAYA II. A gate-keeper of Vaikuṇṭha. (See under Jaya).

VIJAYA III. A Son of Purūravas. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that Āyus, Śrutāyus. Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya were the sons born to Purūravas, by Urvaśī.

VIJAYA IV. A King of Kosala. It is stated in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 73, that this King Vijaya of Kosala confronted Paraśurāma and was defeated.

VIJAYA V. This was the secret name given to Arjuna by Dharmaputra during the time of their pseudonymity. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 35), VIJAYA VI. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He joined with Jaya and Durjaya, two Kauravas and fought with Nīla, Kāśya and Jayatsena. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 45).

VIJAYA VII. The name Vijaya is used as a synonym of Śiva in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 51.

VIJAYA VIII. The name Vijaya is used as a synonym of Viṣṇu in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 21.

VIJAYA IX. A King who ruled over the city of Vārāṇasī. Vijaya destroyed the city of Khāṇḍavī and the forest Khāṇḍava rose there. Later he gave the forest to Indra. The most powerful King of this dynasty was Uparicara (Kālikā Purāṇa, Chapter 92).

VIJAYA X. A country of ancient India famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 45).

VIJAYA XI. The trident of Śiva. During the journey to Bhadravaṭa, of Subrahmaṇya, this trident Vijaya of Śiva went behind King Yama. This trident had three prongs. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 37).

VIJAYA XII. A bow of Indra. This is as bright as Gāṇḍīva and as strong as the bow Śārṅgadhanus of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The bows of the Devas, considered to be most divine, are Vijaya, Gāṇḍīva and Śārṅga. Vijaya belongs to Indra, Gāṇḍīva to Varuṇa and Śārṅga to Viṣṇu. Once Druma, a Kimpuruṣa (demi god) who lived in the mountain Gandhamādana got Vijaya from Indra. After that Rukmī, his disciple got this bow from Druma. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 3).

VIJAYA XIII. The divine bow of Karṇa. It is said that this bow was the most divine of all weapons. This bow which was made by Viśvakarmā, originally belonged to Indra. At that time Indra had defeated many asuras with the help of this bow. Indra gave this bow to his loved disciple Paraśurāma. Karṇa got it from Paraśurāma. It is said that this bow was superior to Gāṇḍīva. It was with the help of this bow that Paraśurāma conquered the Kṣatriyas twentyone times. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 42).

VIJAYĀ I. The daughter of King Dāśārha. The emperor Bhumanyu married her. A son named Suhotra was born to the couple. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 33)

VIJAYĀ II. Daughter of Dyutimān, the King of Madradeśa. This Vijayā was the wife of Sahadeva the son of Pāṇḍu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 80, that a son named Suhotra was born to Sahadeva by Vijayā.

VIJAYĀ III. A synonym of Devī Durgā. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 16).

VIJAYADAŚAMĪ. A festival of Indians. As this festival is celebrated for nine nights from the 1st to the 9th in the bright lunar fortnight of the month of Kanni (September-October) it is known as Navarātri (Nine nights) and as it continues up to Daśamī (the tenth night) it is called Dasra. The Hindus believe that the Vijayadaśamī (the victorious tenth) was the day on which Devī Durgā killed Mahiṣāsura and got victory. So this day is considered to be a suitable moment to begin the learning of all the arts which would enable one to carry on a successful life. Sarasvatī is considered the transfiguration of Durgā. As people became less superstitious, they began to consider the story of killing Mahiṣāsura as a metaphorical saying, to mean the killing of ignorance. So the day of victory of Devī Durgā (the same as Sarasvatī) is considered to be the auspicious moment for the beginning of learning. The warrior places his weapons, the man of literature his books and pen, the musician his musical instruments, at the feet of Devī and with devotion and worship receives them back from Devī on the Vijayadaśamī day at an auspicious moment.

This is a festival celebrated everywhere in India. In several native states this festival used to be celebrated under the sponsorship of the royal family as a State festival. As it is believed that Mahiṣāsura had lived in Mysore the celebration of Dasra in that State generally is on a grand scale. In Kerala, from olden times this festival was celebrated under the patronage of the Vañci Royal family.

VIJAYALAKṢMĪ. One of the eight Lakṣmīs. The duty of Vijayalakṣmī was keeping the treasury of Brahmā. Once she showed carelessness in her duty. So Brahmā cursed her to go and guard the gate tower of Rāvaṇa. Accordingly Vijayalakṣmī guarded the gate of Laṅkā under the name Laṅkālakṣmī. When she was hit by Hanūmān she obtained her original form and returned to the world of Devas. (See under Laṅkālakṣmī).

VIJITĀŚVA. One of the five sons of emperor Pṛthu. Vijitāśva decided to perform one hundred horse-sacrifices and completed ninetynine. Seeing this Indra feared that he might be deposed. So he stealthily took away the sacrificial horse of Vijitāśva.

There was a fierce battle between Indra and Vijitāśva in which Indra was defeated, and Vijitāśva recovered the stolen horse from Indra. It was from that day onwards that this son of Pṛthu got the name Vijitāśva. Being pleased with the King at this expert fighting, Devendra taught him the art of vanishing. (Bhāgavata. Skandha 4).

VIKRAMĀDITYA. Vikramāditya, who is believed to be one of the mighty emperors of Bhārata, was an extraordinarily wise, righteous and valiant ruler. There are several stories in all the languages of India, prevalent everywhere. They are generally called Vikramāditya stories. Vikramāditya was the son of Mahendrāditya, King of Ujjayinī. Mahendrāditya and his wife Saumyadarśanā were in great distress as they were childless. Sumati, the Prime Minister, Vajrāyudha, the army commander, and Mahīdhara, the priest, were as distressed as the royal couple. The King and the queen engaged themselves in fast and prayer.

In the meanwhile, the Devas found life extremely difficult due to the wicked deeds of the barbarians, and they went to Kailāsa and told Rudradeva of their grievances. They said, "Oh! Lord! All the asuras exterminated by yourself and Mahāviṣṇu, are born on the earth as Barbarians. They commit great sins such as killing the Brahmins, obstructing sacrifices carrying away hermit damsels etc. The sacrificial offerings in the sacred fire with Vedic Mantras by Brahmins, is the food of Devas. Because of the troubles caused by the Barbarians in the earth, the sacrifices are hindered and the Devas are in trouble due to lack of food. So a being, mighty and strong enough to exterminate all the Barbarians on the earth, should take incarnation."

Śiva agreed and sent the devas back to their world. Then he called Mālyavān and told him to take birth as the son of Mahendrāditya in the city of Ujjayinī.

Śiva added. "You should exterminate all the Barbarians and reinstate rituals and ceremonies. The Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, ghosts etc. will be under your control. You will be an emperor there with divine powers." Accordingly Mālyavān took birth as the son of Mahendrāditya. That infant was Vikramāditya who became a mighty emperor later. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Viṣamaśīlalambaka, Taraṅga 1).

VIKRAMAŚĪLA. A King praised in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa. Kālindī was his wife and Durgama his son.

VIKRĀNTA. A King who was the father of Sudhṛti and the son of King Dama. It is mentioned in Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 86, that Vikrānta was an ideal King who loved and cared for his subjects.

VIKṚTA. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 196, that this was the name adopted by Kāmadeva (Cupid) when he argued with Ikṣvāku, in the form of a Brahmin.

VIKṚTI. A King of the family of Yayāti. This King's father was Jīmūta, and his son was Bhīmaratha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VIKṢARA. A noble asura born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati by his wife Danu. The most powerful of the Dānavas (asuras) given birth to by Danū, were Vikṣara, Bala, Vīra and Vṛtra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 33). Of these Vikṣara took rebirth later as King Vasumitra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 41).

VIKUKṢI. A son of Ikṣvāku. It is said that Ikṣvāku was born from the spittle of Manu. It is stated in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, that after the death of Śaryāti, the Rākṣasas (giants) attacked Ayodhyā and the sons of the King having fled to different directions, Ikṣvāku continued the dynasty of Śaryāti in Ayodhyā. Hundred sons beginning with Vikukṣi, were born to Ikṣvāku. Of these hundred sons fifty were employed to rule over the regions of East and North and fortyeight, to rule over the regions in the south and the west. With the remaining two sons the King stayed in Ayodhyā, and carried on administration.

One day King Ikṣvāku resolved to conduct the great sacrifice of offering to the manes called Mahāpralayaśrāddha, for which preparations were speedily made. The hermits such as Vasiṣṭha and others arrived according to invitation. He sent his son Vikukṣi to the forest to bring the required amount of flesh for the sacrifice. Vikukṣi entered the forest and hunted hare, hog, deer etc. and collected the required quantity of flesh; but on the way home, he became tired of hunger. To appease his hunger he took a small hare from the collection cooked it and ate it. He took the balance to the King who was much pleased with his son and gave the animals to Vasiṣṭha the family priest for prokṣaṇa (sprinkling of holy water on the animals before sacrifice). But Vasiṣṭha got angry and said, "flesh which constitutes remains is not acceptable." The king understood the truth only then. He was filled with anger and distress. He expelled Vikukṣi from his country for this misdeed. Thus because he had eaten a Śaśa (hare) Vikukṣi got another name Śaśāda. Śaśāda not at all caring about the misfortune that befell him, went to the forest and lived on fruits and roots and worshipped Devī, with ardent devotion.

Ikṣvāku died. Śaśāda knew this and returned to Ayodhyā and assumed reign. He performed several sacrifices on the banks of river Sarayū. The famous Kakutstha was the son of this Vikukṣi. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

VIKUṆḌALA. A Vaiśya who obtained heaven by bathing during the month Māgha in the waters of Kālindī. This Vaiśya was a deplorable sinner. Still the men of Kāla (Yama) sent Vikuṇḍala to heaven without minding his sins. This story occurs in Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 30, as follows:

In days of old there lived a Vaiśya named Hemakuṇḍala in the great kingdom of Niṣadha. He was a devotee and worshipper of devas and Brāhmaṇas. He carried on trade and agriculture and by plundering he amassed much wealth.

Hemakuṇḍala grew old. He thought about the frailty of life and spent a sixth part of his wealth for charitable purposes. For remission of the sins committed throughout the whole of his life, he gave alms as stipulated in the Purāṇas. After entrusting the family affairs to his sons Śrīkuṇḍala and Vikuṇḍala, he went to the forests for penance.

His sons were young. They turned away from righteous ways and followed a path of pleasures and wickedness. They refused to pay any heed to the advice of their elders. Drinking and going to other women became their routine.

Within a short time they lost their wealth. They had nothing to eat. Their friends and favourites all discarded them. Being forsaken by every body, they engaged themselves in theft or robbery. They were afraid of the king and the people, and so they shifted to the forest. They lived by hunting. At this time the elder brother was caught by a tiger. The younger brother was bitten by a snake. Thus, on the same day, both sinners met with death. The messengers of Yama took both of them to the world of Yama. According to the order of King Dharma, Vikuṇḍala got heaven and Śrī Kuṇḍala got hell.

Vikuṇḍala who was glad at obtaining heaven asked the men of Yama on the way, why he was given heaven. They replied, "There was a Brahmin who was well-versed in all branches of knowledge. He was the son of Harimitra. His hermitage was on the southern bank of Yamunā. Yourself and the Brahmin became friends in the forest. Because of that friendship you were enabled to take bath in two Māgha months in the holy waters of Kālindī which is capable of washing all the sins away. By the first Māgha bath you got remission of your sins. By the second Māgha-bath you became eligible for the attainment of heaven."

VIKUÑJA. An ancient country in India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 9, that it was the warriors of this country who stood with the king Bṛhadbala on the left wing of the Garuḍa Vyūha of the army formed by Bhīṣma, in the battle of Bhārata.

(Details relating to Sumati are given in Chapter 19 of Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa). The Nāgas (serpents) were born to Kadrū. For details see under Garuḍa.

VINATĀŚVA. The son of Ila (Sudyumna) and the grandson of Vaivasvata Manu. After the time of his father, he became the ruler of the Western Empire. (Vāyu, 85:19).

VINĀYAKA I. A devatā of the Gaṇas (guards of Śiva). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 25).

VINĀYAKA II. Gaṇapati.

VINĀYAKACATURTHĪ. One of the important festivals of the Hindus. This is called the day of worship of Gaṇeśa. The Caturthī (4th day) of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Siṁha is the birth day of Gaṇapati. It is a famous festival in North India. They make the images of Gaṇapati, every year, and make offerings to them on this particular day.

It is believed, that he who sees the moon on Vināyaka Caturthī, will be subjected to dishonour and derision. This belief is based on the following story.

Gaṇapati is very fond of sweetmeat especially Kozhukkaṭṭa (globular solid sweetmeat, called Modaka). It is the custom in North India to worship Gaṇapati by offering these sweetmeats, even today, with all kinds of festivities. On one birthday Gaṇapati went from house to house and ate belly-ful of modakas and returned home on his conveyance, the rat. On the way the rat saw a snake and began to tremble with fear. Due to the shivering of its legs Gaṇapati fell down. The belly of Gaṇapati was broken due to the fall and a large quantity of modakas came out. Gaṇapati gathered everything that fell out of his belly and stuffed them again in the stomach and joining the cut edges entwined the snake tightly round the stomach. Candra who was standing in the sky seeing all these things laughed with contempt. At this, Gaṇapati got wild and plucked his tusk and throwing it at the moon cursed him. "Let nobody look at you on the Gaṇapati-festival day." (Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa). This story is slightly different according to Gaṇeśa Purāṇa. That story is, that Śrī Parameśvara gave a plum to his elder son Subrahmaṇya without the knowledge of his younger son Gaṇapati, on the 4th day of a bright lunar fortnight and the moon who smiled at it, was cursed.

VINDA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 34, that Vinda was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata.

VINDA II. A prince of Avantī. It is stated that this Vinda had a brother called Anuvinda. The information obtained about Vinda from Mahābhārata is given below :

(i) Sahadeva defeated this Vinda at the time of his southern regional conquest. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 10).

(ii) Vinda helped Duryodhana by fighting on his side with an akṣauhiṇī of army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 24).

(iii) Bhīṣma once said that Vinda was a noble warrior. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 166, Stanza 6).

(iv) Vinda was one of the ten commanders of Duryodhana in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 15).

(v) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata, Vinda fought with Kuntibhoja. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 72).

(vi) When Śveta, the prince of Virāṭa, surrounded Śalya, the King of Madra, Vinda helped Śalya. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 48).

(vii) Once Vinda and his brother Anuvinda together attacked Irāvān. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 81, Stanza 27).

(viii) In the Bhārata-battle, Vinda fought with Bhīmasena, Arjuna and Virāṭa. Vinda was killed in the fight with Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 99, Stanza 17).

VINDA III. A prince of the kingdom of Kekaya. In the battle of Bhārata he took the side of the Kauravas and fought with Sātyaki, in which fight Sātyaki killed Vinda. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 6).

VINDUMĀN. A King born of the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of Marīci and the father of Madhu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

VINDHYA. One of the seven chief mountain chains. This mountain which separates South India from North India is famous in various ways in the Purāṇas.

(i) Agastya kicked Vindhya down. (See under Agastya).

(ii) Sunda and Upasunda, two asuras, did penance on Vindhya and got boons. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 7).

(iii) Because of the fierce penance of Sunda, the mountain Vindhya became hot and from that day onwards smoke comes out from Vindhya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 10).

(iv) The deity of Vindhya stays in the palace of Kubera serving him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 31).

(v) On this mountain there is the eternal abode of Devī Durgā. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 17).

(vi) Vindhya is one of the seven chief mountain chains. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 11).

(vii) In Tripuradahana (the burning of Tripuras) Vindhya appeared behind the chariot of Śiva as the emblem on his flag. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 202, Stanza 71); (viii) Vindhya once became the axle of the chariot of Śiva. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 22).

(ix) This mountain gave Subrahmaṇya two attendants named Ucchṛṅga and Atiśṛṅga. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 49).

(x) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 49, that he who does penance on the Vindhya, for a month without killing any living creature, could obtain all attainments.

VINDHYACULIKA. A Country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 62).

VINDHYĀVALĪ. Wife of Mahābali. A son named Bāṇa and a daughter named Kumbhīnasī were born to Bali by Vindhyāvalī. (Matsya, 187. 40).

VIPĀPMĀ. An eternal Viśvadeva (Semi-god concerned with offering to Manes). Mention is made about this Viśvadeva in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 30.

VIPĀŚĀ. A Purāṇically famous river in the region of five rivers (Punjab). Vasiṣṭha was stricken with grief at the death of his son Śakti and jumped into this river with the help of a rope to commit suicide. The waves of the river untied the knots of the rope and saved him. From that day onwards this river came to be known as Vipāśā. (See under Kalmāṣapāda) Other information about this river given in the Purāṇas is given below:—

(i) Vipāśā stays in the palace of Varuṇa serving him. (M.B. Chapter 9, Stanza 19).

(ii) Two devils named Bahi and Hīka live in this river. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 41).

(iii) If offering to the Manes is made in this river and celibacy is observed there for three days without anger, one could get away from death and birth. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 24).

VIPAŚCIT I. The name of the Indra of the age of Manu Svārociṣa. (See under Manvantara).

VIPAŚCIT II. Husband of Pīvarī, the princess of Vidarbha. It is mentioned in Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, that because of the sinful acts done by this man towards his wife he had to go to hell.

VIPĀṬA. A brother of Karṇa. Arjuna killed him in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 62).

VIPĀṬHA. An arrow. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 6, that this arrow was larger and more powerful than other arrows.

VIPRA. A King born in the family of Dhruva. Two sons named Śiṣṭi and Bhavya were born to Dhruva by his wife Śambhū. Succhāyā the wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa I, Chapter 13).

VIPRACITTI.

1) General information. A Dānava (asura) born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa, by his wife Danū. Danū had given birth to thirtythree notorious asuras (demons). Vipracitti was the eldest of them. His younger brothers were Śambara etc. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 65, Stanza 25).

2) Other details. (i) Siṁhikā was the wife of Vipracitti. This Siṁhikā was the sister of Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇyākṣa and the daughter of Kaśyapa and Diti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15).

(ii) It was this Vipracitti who took rebirth later as Jarāsandha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 4).
(iii) Vipracitti stays in the palace of Varuṇa praising and glorifying him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 12).
(iv) When Mahāviṣṇu took the form of Vāmana and began to measure the three worlds, Vipracitti with some asuras surrounded Vāmana. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātya pāṭha, Chapter 38).
(v) In Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 12, a statement occurs to the effect that in days of old, Mahāviṣṇu took the form of Indra and killed Vipracitti.
(vi) In the war between Devas and asuras, Vipracitti was killed by Indra. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 11).

VIPṚTHU. A Kṣatriya of Vṛṣṇi dynasty. The following information is available about him in Mahābhārata.
(i) Vipṛthu was present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 18).
(ii) He participated in the festival conducted on the mountain Raivata. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 10).
(iii) Vipṛthu was a member of the group of Yādavas who took the dowry to Hastināpura in the marriage between Arjuna and Subhadrā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 32).
(iv) Vipṛthu stayed in the Palace of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 30).

VIPṚTHU II. An ancient king in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 294, Stanza 20, that Vipṛthu had been the emperor of the world.

VIPULA I. Brother of Balabhadrarāma. The sons born to Vasudeva by Rohiṇī were Balabhadrarāma, Gada, Sāraṇa, Durdama, Vipula, Dhruva and Kṛta. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VIPULA II. A mountain near Girivraja, the capital city of Magadha. Mention is made about this mountain in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 2.

VIPULA III. A hermit who was born in the dynasty of Bhṛgu. There is a story showing how this hermit protected the wife of his teacher from Indra while he was the disciple of the hermit Devaśarmā, in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 40. The story is given below:
Ruci, the wife of the hermit Devaśarmā, was extremely beautiful. Devaśarmā was aware of the fact that Indra had often looked at his wife with covetous eyes. He had to perform a sacrifice. But he feared that if he went away from the hermitage his wife would be carried away by Indra. At last he called his beloved disciple Vipula and revealed the secret to him. The teacher told his disciple that Indra was a libertine as well as a magician and that he would appear in various forms to entice Ruci, and asked him to protect Ruci even at the cost of his life. Then Devaśarmā left the hermitage for the sacrifice.
Vipula followed the wife of his teacher, wherever she went. He feared that Indra might come even unseen by anybody. So he decided to get inside Ruci by supernatural powers of Yoga. He made Ruci to sit in front of him and stare into his eyes and through the rays of her eyes he entered inside her.
Knowing that Devaśarmā had left the hermitage, Indra came in front of Ruci. By the power of Stambhana (suppressing the use of faculties by mantra) Vipula made Ruci stand motionless staring into the face of Indra. She did not give any reply to the questions of Indra. At last Indra looked into Ruci with inward eyes and saw as in a mirror Vipula sitting inside her. With shame Indra left the place instantly.
When the teacher returned on completion of the sacrifice Vipula told him all that had taken place. The teacher was pleased and told his disciple that he might ask for any boon.
He got the boon to be a righteous man throughout his life and left the hermitage.
It was during this period that the marriage of Prabhāvatī, the sister of Ruci, took place. The marriage of Prabhāvatī with Citraratha, the king of Aṅga, was settled. A messenger from Aṅga informed Ruci about it. Then some flowers fell from the sky near Ruci. She wore them and went to the marriage. Prabhāvatī wanted to have the same flowers. Vipula was sent to bring flowers of the same kind. As Vipula was returning with the flowers, he saw two men turning a wheel. Each of them claimed that he had turned more than the other, and quarrelled with each other. One of them pointing at Vipula, said that he who told lies would get what Vipula would undergo in hell. Vipula was worried at hearing this. He proceeded on his journey. He saw six men gambling. One of them pointed at Vipula and said "A false gamester would get what Vipula would get in hell." Being flurried by these two talks, Vipula ran to his teacher to understand its meaning. He went to Campāpurī and saw the teacher and asked him the meaning of what he had heard. The teacher told him, that the two who turned the wheel were day and night and the six who were engaged in gambling were the six Ṛtus (seasons) and that Ṛtus and day and night are witnesses of every sinful act committed any time. Vipula became aware of his sin. While he was staying inside the wife of his teacher, his genital touched her genital and face touched face. He had not told the teacher this. But the teacher said that it need not be considered a sin because the deed was done with no bad intention.

VĪRA I. An asura born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 33).

VĪRA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 103).

VĪRA III. A fire. This Agni was the son born to the fire named Bharadvāja by his wife Vīrā. This fire has other names such as Rathaprabhu, Rathadhvāna, Kumbharetas etc. It is said that along with Somadevatā, this Agni also would get the second portion of Ājya (ghee offerings). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 9, that this mighty fire has a wife named Sarayū and a son named Siddhi.

VĪRA IV. Son of a fire called Pāñcajanya. This agni is considered one of the Vināyakas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 13).

VĪRA V. A king in ancient India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 7, that this king had attended the Svayaṁvara marriage of the daughter of King Citrāṅgada of Kaliṅga.

VĪRA VI. A king of the Pūru dynasty. Bṛhadratha, Kuśa, Yadu, Pratyagra, Bala and Matsyakāla were brothers of this king. Girikā was their mother. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

VĪRĀ. The wife of the Agni (fire) named Bharadvāja, the son of Śaṁyu. The Agni Vīra was the son of this Vīrā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 9).

VĪRĀ II. A river of India, very famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 22).

VĪRĀ III. The wife of King Karandhama. She was the mother of Avikṣit. Once, when serpents began to do harm to all the living and non-living things in the world, Vīrā approached her grandson Marutta and advised him to conduct a serpent-sacrifice. Marutta began the sacrifice. The serpents were terrified and sought protection from the wife of Avikṣit. She being kind-hearted, made her husband intervene and stop the sacrifice. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 126).

VĪRABĀHU I. A brother of Subrahmaṇya. It is stated in Skanda Purāṇa, that this Vīrabāhu stood with Subrahmaṇya and fought bravely.

VĪRABĀHU III. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the battle of Bhārata he fought with Uttara and Bhīmasena. Bhīmasena killed him with his club. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 35).

VĪRABĀHU III. A king of the country of Cedi. The daughter of Sudāmā the king of Daśārṇa was his wife. It was this king of Cedi who gave protection to Damayantī when she was forsaken by her husband Nala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 13).

VĪRABHADRA. One of the guards of Śiva.

1) Origin. There are two different opinions in the Purāṇas, regarding the origin of Vīrabhadra. There is no doubt that his birth was due to the anger of Śiva. When Śiva knew that his wife Pārvatī jumped into the fire and died at the sacrifice of Dakṣa, he struck his matted hair on the ground and from that, Vīrabhadra and Bhadrakālī came into being. This is the version given in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7. According to Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 284, Vīrabhadra was born from the mouth of Śiva. From each of the hairpores of Vīrabhadra, who was born from the mouth of Śiva to destroy the sacrifice of Dakṣa a fearful monster was born, all of whom, formed a group of ghosts called the Raumyas.

2) The Destruction of the sacrifice of Dakṣa. See under Dakṣa.

3) Attainment of boon. After the destruction of the sacrifice of Dakṣa, the fearful monster Vīrabhadra, began to exterminate the entire creation. Then Śiva appeared and pacified him and said "You shall become a planet in the sky called Aṅgarakṣaka (Bodyguard) or Maṅgala (well being). Everybody will worship you. Those who thus exalt you, will get health, wealth and long life." (Bhāgavata, Skandha 7; Vāyu Purāṇa, 101, 209; Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, 24).

After the destruction of the sacrifice of Dakṣa, Vīrabhadra severed a portion of his radiance, and from that radiance, later Ādiśaṅkara (Śaṅkarācārya) was born. This story occurs in Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Pratisarga Parva.

4) Prowess. Vīrabhadra was not only a follower of Śiva. He was a prominent general of the army. In the battle of the burning of Tripura and the Jalandhara fight, Vīrabhadra stood with Śiva and fought fiercely. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa and Uttara Khaṇḍa).

5) Protector of the Devas. Vīrabhadra was the destroyer of the Asuras and the protector of the Devas. Once Kaśyapa and all the other hermits and sages with him were burnt to ashes in the wild fire that occurred in the Śaukaṭa mountain. Instantly Vīrabhadra swallowed that wild fire and by the power of incantation, he brought to life from the ashes all the Ṛṣis (hermits) who were burnt to death.

On another occasion a serpent swallowed all the gods. Vīrabhadra killed the snake and rescued all the Devas. Once an asura called Pañcameḍhra put into his mouth all the gods, all the hermits and Bāli and Sugrīva. Those who escaped from the danger stood agape being powerless to confront the Asura. At last Vīrabhadra attacked the asura. That great and fierce battle lasted for years. At the end Vīrabhadra killed the Asura and rescued all.

Because Vīrabhadra had thus protected the Devas and the others on three occasions, Śiva became immensely pleased with him and gave him several boons. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, 107).

VIRĀDHA. A fierce Rākṣasa (giant) whom Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa killed in the Daṇḍaka forest. Virādha was the rebirth of Tumburu, a Gandharva who had been cursed to become a Rākṣasa. The story about Śrī Rāma's liberating the Gandharva from the curse and sending him back to the world of Gandharvas, occurs in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sargas 2 to 4, as follows.

In days of old, Tumburu, a Gandharva had been serving Kubera. Once Tumburu was asked by Kubera to bring Rambhā. Tumburu failed in bringing Rambhā at the stipulated time. Kubera got angry and cursed Tumburu to become a Rākṣasa. Tumburu requested for liberation from the curse. Kubera granted his request and said "In Tretāyuga, Mahāviṣṇu will incarnate as Śrī Rāma, who with his sword will change your Rākṣasa form. You will regain your former form and will come back to the world of Gandharvas."

Accordingly Tumburu took birth as the son of giant Jaya. This child born to Jaya by his wife Śatahradā, grew up and came to be known by the name Virādha. Two extra-ordinarily long hands and the outward appearances of a giant aroused fear in every living creature. He lived in the forest Daṇḍaka. It was at this time that Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa came with Sītā, to live in this forest. As soon as Virādha saw them he ran to them with a loud cry.

"With sunken eyes and swollen stomach, widened mouth and an enormous body, with a fierce appearance, of very great height an uncouth figure, body wet with fat, clad in the hide of a leopard, looking like Yama with open mouth, with three lions, two wolves, four leopards, ten spotted deer and the head of a big tusker with tusks smeared with fat, all these caught pierced in an iron trident, and shouting in a roaring sound", he ran to them and after taking Sītā, he began to run. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa followed him. Virādha placed Sītā down and, taking Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa on each of his shoulders he began running. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa cut off each of his hands. But Virādha did not die. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa decided to bury him alive. Virādha recognized Śrī Rāma and told him his story. Instantly his demoniac form changed and he regained his original form of a Gandharva. Thus Tumburu returned to the world of Devas. (See under Tumburu).

VĪRADHANVĀ I. A warrior of the kingdom of Trigarta. He took the side of the Kauravas in the Bhārata-battle and fought with Dhṛṣṭadyumna, in which fight he was killed. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 9).

VĪRADHANVĀ II. A Gandharva. (See under Puṇḍarīka-mukha).

VĪRADHARMĀ. A King in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16).

VĪRADYUMNA. An ancient King in India. He had a son named Bhūridyumna. Once this son was lost in the great forest. Vīradyumna wandered everywhere in the forest in search of his son. On the way he met a hermit called Tanu. He talked elaborately to the King about the hopes of human mind. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapters 127 and 128).

VIRAJĀ. A cow-herdess. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa duped Rādhā and took the cowherdess Virajā to the region of love-plays. A mischievous maid informed Rādhā of this. Rādhā ran to the dancing garden and searched for the couple. Śrī Kṛṣṇa had made himself invisible. So she could not find him. She found out Virajā. Rādhā opened her eyes wide and pretended that she was about to curse her. Virajā was terrified and she melted and became a river; full of anger Rādhā went home. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VIRAJA (S) I. A nāga (serpent) born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrū. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 13).

VIRAJA (S) II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157).

VIRAJA (S) III. A son born from the radiance of Mahāviṣṇu. Having no desire to rule over a kingdom, he adopted penance. He had a son named Kīrtimān. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 88).

VIRAJA (S) IV. One of the eight sons of Kavi, who was the son of Vaivasvata Manu. He had eight sons. They were Kavi, Kāvya, Dhiṣṇu, Śukrācārya, Bhṛgu, Kāśī, Ugra and Virajas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 132).

VIRĀJA. A King of the Kuru dynasty. He was the grandson of Kuru and the son of Avikṣit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 54).

VIRAJA (M). A particular tower in Dvārakā. Whenever Śrī Kṛṣṇa wanted to be alone he went to this tower. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

VĪRAKA. A King of the dynasty of Aṅga. He was the son of Śibi. Vīraka had three brothers named Pṛthudarbha, Kaikaya and Bhadraka. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

VĪRAKETU I. A son of the King Drupada of Pāñcāla. In the battle of Kurukṣetra, Vīraketu confronted Droṇa and was killed by Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 33).

VĪRAKETU II. A King of Ayodhyā.

VĪRAMAHENDRA. The dwelling place of the asura named Nāga. (See under Nāgāstra).

VĪRAMAṆI. A King devoted to Śiva. Śrutāvatī was his wife. One day at the request of Vīramaṇi, Śiva fought with Yoginīs (women doing Śakti worship). In that fight the Yoginīs defeated Śiva.

VĪRAMOKṢA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 51, that by visiting this holy place one could attain complete remission of one's sins.

VĪRAṆA. A Prajāpati. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 348, Stanza 41, that this Prajāpati learned the philosophy of purity and righteousness from Sanatkumāra and taught the hermit Raibhya what he had learned.

VĪRAṆAKA. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This nāga was burnt to death in the sacrificial fire of the serpent sacrifice performed by Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 18).

VĪRAṆĪ I (VĪRIṆĪ). A daughter of Brahmā. First, Brahmā created the Saptarṣis (the seven hermits) by his mind. After this Rudra was born from the anger of Brahmā, Nārada from the lap of Brahmā, Dakṣa from the thumb of Brahmā, Sanaka and the others from the mind of Brahmā, and the daughter Vīraṇī from the left thumb of Brahmā. Dakṣa married this Vīraṇī. Nārada took rebirth as the son of this couple.

Dakṣa married Vīraṇī at the behest of Brahmā. At first this beautiful woman gave birth to five thousand sons. Nārada misguided them. Dakṣa got angry at this. He cursed Nārada. Owing to that curse Nārada had to take birth again as the son of Dakṣa and Vīraṇī. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

VĪRAṆĪ II. A teacher-priest. According to Vāyu Purāṇa, Vīraṇī was a disciple of the famous teacher Yājñavalkya of the Yajurveda- line of disciples of Vyāsa.

VIRASA. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Prajāpati Kaśyapa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 16).

VĪRASENA I. The father of Nala. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 65, that this King did not eat meat. (For further details see under Damayantī).

VĪRASENA II. A King of Kosala. (See under Candrasena I).

VĪRASIṀHA I. The captain of the army of the asura Vyālīmukha, who came to fight with Subrahmaṇya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Vīramahendra kāṇḍa).

VĪRASIṀHA II. A prince who was the son of King Vīramaṇi and the relative of Rukmāṅgada. It is stated in Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla khaṇḍa that this prince Vīrasiṁha tied the sacrificial horse of Śrī Rāma and fought with Śatrughna who led the horse.

VĪRĀŚRAMA. A holy hermitage. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 145, that those who visit this holy hermitage would obtain the fruits of performing a horse sacrifice.

VIRĀṬ I. The son of the daughter of Priyavrata. Svāyambhuva Manu married Śatarūpā. Two sons Priyavrata and Uttānapāda were born to them. A daughter was born to Priyavrata. Prajāpati Kardama married her. Three sons named Samrāṭ, Kukṣi and Virāṭ were born to them. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

VIRĀṬ II. (VIRĀṬ PURUṢA). Virāṭ Puruṣa is the first incarnation of Brahmā. (For details see under Sṛṣṭi).

VIRĀṬA.

1) General information. The King of Matsya country. During the pseudonymity of the Pāṇḍavas this King sheltered them. At the end of the pseudonymity of one year, the Kauravas had stolen the cows of Virāṭa. In the fight which ensued Arjuna entered the battlefield with Uttara, the son of King Virāṭa, and defeated the Kauravas and proclaimed that the life of pseudonymity was over. After that Abhimanyu married Uttarā the daughter of Virāṭa. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva).

2) Other details.

(i) This Virāṭa, the King of Matsya was born from a portion of the Marudgaṇas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 82).

(ii) King Virāṭa had two sons named Uttara and Śaṅkha. It was with these sons that he attended the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 8).

(iii) In the regional conquest conducted by Sahadeva, before the Imperial consecration-sacrifice of the Pāṇḍavas, Virāṭa fought with him and was defeated. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 2).

(iv) King Virāṭa attended the Rājasūya (sacrifice of imperial consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 20).

(v) Virāṭa gave as a gift to Yudhiṣṭhira two thousand tuskers adorned with gold chains. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 26).

(vi) The name of the wife of King Virāṭa was Sudeṣṇā. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 6).

(vii) During the incognito-life of the Pāṇḍavas, King Virāṭa sheltered them in his palace. He took Yudhiṣṭhira as a court-favourite, Bhīmasena as the over-seer of his dining hall, Arjuna as the dancing master, Nakula as the head of the stables, and Sahadeva as the head of the cow-herds. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapters 7, 8, 10, 11 and 12).

(viii) The first wife of King Virāṭa was Surathā, the princess of Kosala. A son named Śveta was born to Virāṭa by Surathā. After the death of Surathā, he married Sudeṣṇā the daughter of Sūta, King of Kekaya. To Sudeṣṇā two sons named Śaṅkha and Uttara and as the youngest, a daughter named Uttarā were born. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 16).

(ix) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Chapter 26, that King Virāṭa had ten brothers.

(x) Virāṭa had two brothers named Śatānīka and Madirākṣa. Sūryadatta is another name of Śatānīka. He was the commander of the army of Virāṭa. Madirākṣa was also called Viśālākṣa. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapters 31 and 32).

(xi) At the time of the theft of the cows, King Virāṭa engaged in combat with Suśarmā. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 28).

(xii) Suśarmā caught hold of Virāṭa alive. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 7).

(xiii) Virāṭa was one of the seven prominent commanders of the army of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 11).

(xiv) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata there was a combat between Virāṭa and Bhagadatta. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 49).

(xv) Virāṭa attacked Bhīṣma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 73, Stanza 1).

(xvi) In the fight between Virāṭa and Droṇa, Śaṅkha was killed. With that Virāṭa ran away. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 14).

(xvii) There was a combat between Virāṭa and Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 16).

(xviii) Virāṭa combatted with Jayadratha. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 42).

(xix) Virāṭa fought with Vinda and Anuvinda. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 20).

(xx) In the fight with Śalya, Virāṭa fell down unconscious. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 34).

(xxi) In the battle which followed, Droṇācārya killed Virāṭa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 6).

(xxii) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Strī Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 33, that the funeral ceremony of Virāṭa was conducted in a befitting manner and in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 4, that Yudhiṣṭhira performed offering to the Manes for him.

(xxiii) After death, Virāṭa entered heaven and joined the Marudgaṇas. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 15).

(xxiv) The synonyms used in Mahābhārata for Virāṭa are, Matsya, Matsyapati, Matsyarāṭ, Matsyarāja etc.

VIRĀṬA (M). The country called Matsya. King Virāṭa was the ruler of this country. (See under Virāṭa).

VIRĀṬANAGARA. The Capital of Matsya. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 28, that once the Kauravas and the Trigartas attacked this country.

VIRĀṬAPARVA. A prominent Parva (section) in Mahābhārata.

VIRĀVA. A horse. The two horses yoked to the chariot given to Agastya by the giant Ilvala, were called Virāva and Surāva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 99, Stanza 17).

VĪRAVARMĀ I. A child born to King Tāladhvaja by Nārada, when he assumed the form of an illusive woman of beauty. (For further details see under Tāladhvaja I).

VĪRAVARMĀ II. A King who ruled over the city of Sārasvata. His chief queen was Mālinī, who was the daughter of a Yakṣa. Vīravarmā stopped the sacrificial horse of the Pāṇḍavas. When Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna got ready to fight with Vīravarmā to recover the horse, Vīravarmā, with the help of Yama fought with them. At last Kṛṣṇa entered into a treaty with Vīravarmā and got the horse back.

Vīravarmā had five sons named Subhāla, Sulabha, Lola, Kuvala and Sarasa. (Jaimini, Aśva : 47 : 49).

VĪRAVRATA. A King born in the family of Bharata. To Vīravrata who was the son of Madhu, two sons named Manthu and Amanthu were born. (Bhāgavata, Fifth Skandha).

VĪRIṆĪ (VĪRAṆĪ). See under Vīraṇī.

VIROCANA I.

1) General information. An asura. He was the son of Prahlāda and the father of Mahābali. Three sons Virocana, Kumbha and Nikumbha were born to Prahlāda by his wife Dhṛti. Virocana, though an asura, performed rites and rituals carefully. He was kind towards Brahmins. His son Bali became famous and got the name Mahābali. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 19).

2) Other details.

(i) Once there was a controversy between Virocana and Sudhanvā. (See under Sudhanvā II).

(ii) During the time of emperor Pṛthu, when the asuras milked the earth Virocana stood as the calf. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 20).

(iii) Virocana is included among the ancient Kings of prominence. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 50).

(iv) There is a story about the quest for knowledge about universal and individual souls, by Indra and Virocana, in Chāndogyopaniṣad, as given below.

Once the Devas and the asuras approached Prajāpati to learn about Brahman, the impersonal God. Prajāpati told them : "Ātman (soul) is the first tattva (Essential being) which is sinless, eternal, desireless and unimaginable in the earth." Having heard this philosophy about the soul, the Devas selected Indra, and the asuras selected Virocana and to know the details, they sent them to Prajāpati as his disciples.

Indra and Virocana stayed with Prajāpati for several years to know more about Ātman. But Prajāpati did not reveal to them the secret about Brahman. At last to test them Prajāpati said "Your reflection that you see in water or mirror is the Ātman (soul)."

Virocana, who mistook what the Prajāpati said as truth immediately took his bath, put on costly dress and ornaments and stood near water and saw his reflection in water. After that, taking the reflection for soul, he spread this doctrine among his people. With this the asuras accepted body as soul. But the Devas did not recognize this philosophy. They accepted the doctrine that Ātman is that essence of Nature which is alien to body and mind and which is pure.

(v) There are two different statements about the death of Virocana in the Purāṇas.

(1) In the battle with Tārakāsura, Virocana was killed by Devendra. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 99. Brahmāṇḍa 1.20.35; Matsya: 10: 11; Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa 16).

(2) The Sun God was pleased with Virocana and had given him a crown. The sun told him that death would come only if that crown was removed from the head by some body. Because of this boon Virocana became arrogant. So Mahāviṣṇu took the form of a beautiful woman and enticed Virocana towards him and taking away the crown killed him. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa 2, 29).

According to Nārada Purāṇa, Mahāviṣṇu took the form of a Brahmin and reached the palace of Virocana. There changing the righteous wife of Virocana into a mad woman he killed Virocana.

(vi) Virocana had two wives called Viśālākṣī and Devī. Two children, Bala and Ya'odharā were born by them. The wife of the famous Tvaṣṭā was this Yaśodharā. (Brahmāṇḍa. 3: 1: 86; Nārada Purāṇa 2: 32 : Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

(vii) Virocana had five brothers named Kumbha, Nikumbha, Āyuṣmān, Śibi and Bāṣkali and a sister named Virocanā. (Vāyu Purāṇa. 84, 19).

VIROCANA II. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was also called Durvirocana. This Virocana was present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 2).

VIROCANĀ I. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 30).

VIROCANĀ II. Daughter of Prahlāda the asura king. Tvaṣṭā married her. A son named Viraja was born to this couple. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5). In Vāyu Purāṇa, it is stated that the hermit Triśiras also was born to Tvaṣṭā by Virocanā.

VIROHAṆA. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 9).

VĪRUDHĀ. One of the three daughters of Surasā, the mother of the nāgas (serpents). The two other daughters were Analā and Ruhā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 66, that from this daughter Vīrudhā, the Vīruts such as Latā, Gulma, Vallī etc were born.

VIRŪPA I. A son of Ambarīṣa, a king of the Solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that Ambarīṣa had three sons called Ketumān, Śambhu and Virūpa.

VIRŪPA II. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 199, Stanza 88, that once Krodha (anger) changed its form and assumed the name Virūpa and conversed with Ikṣvāku.

VIRŪPA III. An asura (demon) Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed this asura. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 38).

VIRŪPA IV. One of the eight sons of Aṅgiras. The eight sons of Aṅgiras were Virūpa, Bṛhaspati, Utathya, Payasya, Śānti, Ghora, Saṁvarta and Sudhanvā. These sons are called the Vāruṇas or the Āgneyas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanzas 130-131).

VIRŪPAKA. An asura. In days of old this asura had ruled over the world. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 51).

VIRŪPĀKṢA I. One of the elephants which hold up the earth from Pātāla (underworld). It is said that earthquake occurs when this elephant shakes its head. (For details see under Aṣṭadiggajas).

VIRŪPĀKṢA II. A Rākṣasa (giant) who fought on the side of Rāvaṇa against Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. It is mentioned in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa that this giant was born to Mālyavān by a Gandharva damsel called Sundarī. Seven sons named Vajramuṣṭi, Virūpākṣa, Durmukha, Suptaghna, Yajñakośa, Matta and Unmatta and a daughter named Nalā were born to Mālyavān by Sundarī.

All these sons held prominent places in the army of Rāvaṇa. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 10, that in the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, when Kumbhakarṇa was killed, the army was commanded by Kumbha, Nikumbha, Makarākṣa, Mahodara, Mahāpārśva, Matta, Unmatta, Praghasa, Bhāsakarṇa, Virūpākṣa, Devāntaka, Narāntaka, Triśiras and Atikāya.

When Sugrīva devastated the army of Rāvaṇa and caused havoc among the giants, Virūpākṣa, who was an archer got on an elephant and entered the battlefield. He confronted Sugrīva first. He thwarted the stone flung at him by Sugrīva, and struck him. For a time Sugrīva found it difficult to withstand him. But in the battle which followed, Sugrīva struck Virūpākṣa down and killed him. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 97).

VIRŪPĀKṢA III. One of the thirtythree notorious Dānavas (demons) born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 22, that it was this asura called Virūpākṣa, who had, later, taken rebirth as King Citravarmā.

VIRŪPĀKṢA IV. An asura who was the follower of Narakāsura. This Virūpākṣa was killed on the bank of the river Lohitagaṅgā. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Chapter 38).

VIRŪPĀKṢA V. A Rākṣasa who was the friend of Ghaṭotkaca. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 175, Stanza 15).

VIRŪPĀKṢA VI. This giant named Virūpākṣa was the friend of a stork called Rājadharmā. (Mahābhārata Śānti Parva, Chapter 170, Stanza 15). (See under Gautama V).

VIRŪPĀKṢA VII. One of the eleven Rudras.

VIRŪPĀŚVA. A King. This King had never eaten flesh in his life. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 15).

VĪRUT. See under Vīrudhā.

VĪRYAŚULKA. In ancient days the Kings wanted to give their daughters in marriage to the most valiant youths. The custom of showing their valour before the people, before getting the damsel became more prevalent, than giving money to get the girl. Thus marrying a girl by showing his valour is called Marriage by giving Vīryaśulka. (Śulka means Nuptial gift). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

VĪRYAVĀN. An eternal Viśvadeva. (god concerned with offerings to the Manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 31).

VIṢACIKITSĀ. (Treatment for poison). See under Sarpa.

VIŚADA. A King who was the son of Jayadratha and father of King Senajit. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VIŚĀKHA I. One of the three brothers of Skandadeva. The other two were Śākha and Naigameya. There is a story regarding them in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, as follows:—

Skandadeva approached his father Śiva. At that time Śiva, Pārvatī, Agni and Gaṅgā, all wished in their minds that Skanda should come to him or her. Understanding the desire of each, by Yogabala (the power obtained by union with the Universal Soul) Skanda divided himself into four persons, Skanda, Viśākha, Śākha and Naigameya and went to each of them respectively and fulfilled their desire. (For further details see under Subrahmaṇya).

VIŚĀKHA II. A hermit. Mention is made in M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 19, that this hermit stays in the palace of Indra, glorifying him.

VIŚĀKHADATTA. A Sanskrit playwright. It is believed that his period was between the centuries five and nine A.D. His prominent play is "Mudrā Rākṣasa". He is known by the name Viśākhadeva also. He was the son of King Bhāskaradatta and the grandson of Vaṭeśvaradatta. Of his works, only Mudrārākṣasa has been found till now.

VIŚĀKHAYŪPA. A holy place of pilgrimage. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 15, that this spot became a holy place because Indra, Varuṇa and other gods did penance here.

VIŚĀLA. A son of Ikṣvāku. Mention is made in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 47, that a son named Viśāla was born to Ikṣvāku, by the celestial maid Alambuṣā and that Viśāla built a city named Viśālā. This Viśāla had a son named Hemacandra. It was near the city Viśālā, that Ahalyā, the wife of Gautama, stood as stone, because of a curse. (See under Viśālapurī).

VIŚĀLĀ I. The queen of Ajamīḍha, a King of the Lunar dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 37).

VIŚĀLĀ II. The King Gaya once performed a sacrifice in the country called Gaya. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 38, Stanza 20, that Sarasvatī attended this sacrifice assuming the name Viśālā.

VIŚĀLĀ III. Wife of King Bhīma the son of Mahāvīrya. Three sons, Trayyāruṇi, Puṣkarī and Kapi were born to Bhīma by his wife Viśālā. (Vāyu: 37 : 158). In Matsya Purāṇa, Viśālā is mentioned as the wife of King Utakṣaya.

VIŚĀLAKA I. A Yakṣa (semi-god). Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 10, that this Yakṣa stays in the palace of Kubera, glorifying him.

VIŚĀLAKA II. A King. Vasudeva married this King's daughter Bhadrā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 42, that after the marriage Bhadrā was kidnapped by Śiśupāla.

VIŚĀLĀKṢA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 88, Stanza 15, that this Viśālākṣa was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata.

VIŚĀLĀKṢA II. Younger brother of King Virāṭa. He had another name Madirākṣa. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 19).

VIŚĀLĀKṢA III. A son of Garuḍa, (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 9).

VIŚĀLĀKŚA IV. A King of Mithilā. He was present at the sacrifice of Rājasūya (Imperial consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VIŚĀLĀKṢĪ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 3).

VIŚĀLAPURĪ. A holy place on the basin of the Ganges. This place is in the forest Badarī. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 90, that the hermitage of Naranārāyaṇas, stood in this place. This city was built by the King Viśāla. (See under Viśāla).

VIŚALYĀ I. A river famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 20, that this river stays in the Palace of Varuṇa glorifying him. This is a holy river. One could obtain the fruits of Agniṣṭoma Yajña (a sacrifice) by taking a bath in this river.

VIŚALYA II. A medicine. This medicine is used to extricate the arrow-heads that might have stuck on the body. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 289, Stanza 6)

VIŚALYAKARAṆĪ. See under Mṛtasañjīvani.

VIŚAṬHA. A son born to Balarāma by Revatī. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 31:6).

VIŚIKHA. A King of the birds. It is stated in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, that Viśikha was one of the sons born to Garuḍa by Śukī.

VIŚIRĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 29).

VIṢKARA. An asura who ruled over the world in days of old. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 53).

VIṢṆĀPŪ. A hermit who was the son of hermit Viśvaka. This Viṣṇāpū was once lost and was found again by the help of the Aśvins. This story is given in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 116.

VIṢṆU.

1) General information. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara are the Lords of creation, sustenance and extermination of this perishable universe. These trimūrtis (three figures) also are perishable. It is said, that one day of Brahmā will constitute thousand four-fold (catur) yugas and that during the life of Brahmā, fourteen Indras will fall down from heaven and die. This is a Brahmā age. The ages of two Brahmās constitute the age of one Viṣṇu. At the end of the age Viṣṇu also will perish. The age of Śiva is double the age of Viṣṇu. Śiva also will perish at the end of his age. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

When everything perishes there comes the deluge (the great flood). After that, for one hundred and twenty Brahmā years the universe will be desolate and void. In that deep eternal silence, Viṣṇu will be seen sleeping on a banyan leaf on the surface of water. That is the beginning of the next great age. In this stage, Bālamukunda is the name of Mahāviṣṇu. As he remains on Nāra or water he will be called Nārāyaṇa also.

The name Viṣṇu means he who possesses the habit of Vyāpana (To pervade). While Viṣṇu, who has the power to spread his control over everything in whatever condition, lies on the banyan-leaf. From his navel, a lotus-stalk grows up, and on the top of the stalk, in the lotus flower, Brahmā comes into being. Brahmā does penance before Viṣṇu and extols him. Mahāviṣṇu confers on Brahmā the power of creation of the subjects. That Brahmā perishes along with the deluge and in his place another Brahmā is born. Thus in the life-time of Viṣṇu two Brahmās come into being and perish.

2) Beginning. In days of yore, when Viṣṇu was lying on the banyan leaf as Bāla Mukunda, he began to think "Who am I ? Who created me ? Why ? What have I to perform ?" - and soon an ethereal voice was heard, "I am everything. Except me, there is nothing eternal." From behind the voice Mahādevī appeared, and said "Look Viṣṇu. What is there to wonder at ? Whenever the universe is subject to creation, sustenance and extermination, you have taken origin by the glory of the Almighty. The Almighty or the omnipotence is beyond attributes. But we are all subjected to attributes. Your foremost attribute is Sattva (goodness - purity) Brahmā whose main attribute is the attribute of rajas (activity - passions), will originate from your navel. From the middle of the brows of that Brahmā, Śiva will be born, whose main attribute is Tamas (inertia darkness). Brahmā, by the power of Tapas (penance) will acquire the power of creation and build the world. You will be the sustainer of that world. Śiva will destroy the same world. I am Devī Māyā (Illusion - personified as the wife of Brahman), the great power depending on you for the purpose of creation." After hearing these words of Devī, Viṣṇu went into meditation and deep sleep of contemplation.

3) Avatāras (Incarnations). When injustice and lawlessness abound in the universe, Viṣṇu will incarnate in the world in various forms and shapes, and will drive away injustice and will reinstate righteousness. The basis and the indeclinable semen virile of all the incarnations, is this spirit of the universe. All Devas, all human beings and all animals are created from a portion of this soul of the universe, which in itself is a portion. Brahmā, first incarnated as Sanatkumāra and lived the life of a Brahmin student of chaste abstinence. The second incarnation was connected with the creation of the earth. It was the incarnation as a hog to redeem the earth which was immersed in the world of Rasātala. The third incarnation was taken to create the sages and hermits. The Supreme God incarnated as the deva - hermit, Nārada and taught Pañcarātra, the Vaiṣṇavaśāstra explaining the ways of observing Karmans. Fourthly, Viṣṇu took the incarnation of Nara-Nārāyaṇas (two hermits) and performed tapas (penance), difficult to do. The fifth incarnation was that of Kapila who taught his disciple Āsuri, a Brahmin, Sāṅkhya (one of the six systems of Indian philosophy dealing with evolution). The next incarnation was taken, according to the request of Atri, as his son under the name Dattātreya. Seventhly he took incarnation as Yajña, the son born to Prajāpati Ruci, by his wife Ākūti with the groups of devas (gods) such as Yāmas and others to sustain the Manvantara (age of Manu) of Svāyambhuva. The eighth incarnation was as the son of Bhagavān Nābhi by his wife Meru, and the ninth was, as the inner soul of Pṛthu, according to the request of the sages and hermits, with a view to change the earth to such a state that medicinal herbs may grow in plenty everywhere. The tenth was, as Matsya (Fish) in Cākṣuṣa Manvantara deluge; the eleventh, as turtle, to lift up the mountain Mandara; the twelfth as Dhanvantari, and the thirteenth was as Mohinī (Charming woman). The fourteenth was that of Man-lion, the fifteenth was that of Vāmana, the sixteenth that of Paraśurāma, the seventeenth, that of Vyāsa, the eighteenth, that of Śrī Rāma and the nineteenth was that of Rāma and the twentieth that of Kṛṣṇa in the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi. The twentyfirst was as Buddha in the beginning of the age of Kali. The twenty second incarnation was in the name of Kalki as the son of the Brahmin Viṣṇuyaśas. Each incarnation is explained in places where that word occurs. See under Avatāra.

The avatāras of Mahāviṣṇu are numerous. Thousands and thousands of incarnations originate from Mahāviṣṇu as streams flow from a lake which overflows at all times. Hermits, Manus, Devas, Sons of Manus, Prajāpatis, all these are marks and portions of Mahāviṣṇu. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 15; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 5; Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 40; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83; Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1; M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 121; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12; Bhāgavata, Skandha 10; Bhāgavata, Skandha 5; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 272; Vana Parva, Chapter 149; Śānti Parva, Chapter 339).

4) Family life. Vaikuṇṭha is the dwelling place of Mahāviṣṇu. Mahālakṣmī is the prominent wife. It is seen in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that besides Lakṣmīdevī, Gaṅgā Devī and Sarasvatī also were the wives of Viṣṇu. Lakṣmīdevī has taken several incarnations. Once she took birth from Khyāti, the wife of hermit Bhṛgu. At this birth Dhātā and Vidhātā were her brothers. On another occasion, she arose from a lotus-flower which grew up from the sea of Milk. (To know more about the wives Lakṣmī, Gaṅgā and Sarasvatī, see under Gaṅgā).

There is none to be mentioned as the legitimate son of Mahāviṣṇu. But Brahmā is the first that could be imagined as the son of Viṣṇu. Besides, Mahāviṣṇu once created a bright son, by his mind. That son was named Virajas. Śāstā is another son of Mahāviṣṇu. Śiva became amorous with Mohinī (fascinating woman)—the form which Mahāviṣṇu took at the time of the churning of the Sea of Milk. They led a short family life as a result of which the son Śāstā was born. (See under Śāstā).

5) Curses. Mahāviṣṇu had cursed and had been cursed on many an occasion. The most important of them are given below:

(i) The curse of Mahālakṣmī Once Mahāviṣṇu looked into the face of Mahālakṣmī and laughed for no reason. Thinking that Mahāviṣṇu had been making fun of her, she cursed him saying "Let your head be severed from the body."

At this period an Asura named Hayagrīva had done penance for a thousand years and obtained several boons. One boon was that he should be killed only by a man with the head of a horse. Hayagrīva attacked the devas (gods). Though the gods fought with Hayagrīva for many thousands of years they could not kill him. Even Viṣṇu, admitted defeat. Using the bow as a prop to his chin he stood thinking, for years. In the meanwhile white ants began to eat the string of the bow. When the string was broken, the bow straightened with a sudden jerk and the head of Mahāviṣṇu was severed from the trunk and was thrown away. Viśvakarmā cut off the head of a horse and joined it to the trunk of Viṣṇu, who instantly rose up and killed Hayagrīva. Thus satisfying the need of the gods and making the curse of Lakṣmī come true, Viṣṇu regained his original form and returned to Vaikuṇṭha. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

(ii) The curse of Bhṛgu. The Asuras who were defeated in the war with Devas, approached Pulomā, the mother of their teacher-priest Śukra, and sought protection. Pulomā, was the wife of hermit Bhṛgu. She began to do penance for the destruction of devas. Knowing this Viṣṇu aimed his weapon, the Discus, at her and killed her. Bhṛgu got angry and cursed Viṣṇu to take birth as a man and suffer the grief of separation from his wife for many years. This curse was the first cause of the incarnation of Śrī Rāma. (For details see under Bhṛgu, Para 4).

(iii) The curse of Viṣṇu. Once the handsome King Revanta, mounted on the horse Uccaiśśravas and came to Vaikuṇṭha. Looking at the handsome youth, Lakṣmī stood for a while enchanted by Revanta and his horse. Mahāviṣṇu was displeased at this, and cursed her to take birth on the earth as a mare. Accordingly she was born as a mare and when the duration of the curse was over returned to Vaikuṇṭha. (For details see under Ekavīra).

(iv) The curse of Vṛndā. See under Māyāśiva.

6) Contests and wars. Wars are very few in the Purāṇas in which Viṣṇu had not participated directly or indirectly. As almost all of them have been dealt with in various places in this book, they are not given here. Only a few of the prominent among them are mentioned here.

(i) Madhukaiṭabhas. Madhu and Kaiṭabha are two asuras born from the ear-wax of Mahāviṣṇu. They tried to attack Brahmā and Viṣṇu killed them. (See under Kaiṭabha).

(ii) Killing of Andhaka. Andhaka was a notorious asura. He was the minister of Mahiṣāsura. When war broke out between asuras and Devas, Andhaka caused havoc among the devas. At last in the fight with Viṣṇu Andhaka was killed. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

(iii) Killing of Vṛtrāsura. See under Vṛtra.

(iv) Rāhu. For the story of how Viṣṇu cut into two the asura Rāhu, see under Amṛtam.

(v) Contest with Brahmā. The story of Viṣṇu and Brahmā making a competitive journey to find out the crest and foot of Śiva, is given with slight variations in most of the Purāṇas. (For detailed story see under Brahmā, Para 5).

(vi) For the story of how Viṣṇu confronted the asuras Nemi, Sumālī and Mālyavān see under each of those words.

7) The weapons and ornaments of Viṣṇu. The following are the prominent ornaments and weapons of Viṣṇu.

(i) Śrīvatsa. This is a mark on the chest. It is said that this is the mark imprinted by the angry Bhṛgu who kicked on the chest of Mahāviṣṇu. (See under Bhṛgu).

(ii) Pāñcajanya. This is a white conch. Even by the touch of this conch man becomes wise. (For further details see under Pañcaja I).

(iii) The Discus Sudarśana. Vajranābha is another name of this weapon. Viṣṇu uses this weapon to deal with fierce enemies. This is a wheel with a hole in the centre and thousand arms going out from the centre. The outer edge is sharp. This Sudarśana Cakra is operated by putting it on the first finger and turning it round, and releasing it at the enemy. Though it is terrible for the wicked and unjust, it forebodes good to good people and so it is Sudarśana (good to look at).

(iv) Kaumodakī. This is the club. The syllable "Ku" means the earth. Kumodaka means he who delights the earth. He who makes the earth delightful is Viṣṇu. As the club is the property of Kumodaka (Viṣṇu) it is called Kaumodakī.

(v) Kaustubha. This is the jewel of Mahāviṣṇu. (Ku= the Earth. Stubhnāti=Pervades (spreads). Kustubha= ocean. Kaustubha-obtained from the sea. This jewel obtained from the sea of milk at the time of its churning, is worn by Mahāviṣṇu on his neck. This is a red Jacinth.

(vi) Nandaka. This is the sword of Viṣṇu. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, that this sword was obtained from Indra.

(vii) Śāraṅg. This is the name of the bow of Viṣṇu. This is called Vaiṣṇavacāpa (the bow of Viṣṇu) also. A description is given in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 25, as to how this bow was obtained. It is as follows :

Once the Devas made Viṣṇu and Śiva quarrel with each other, to test their might. The fight between the two began. Viśvakarmā gave each of them a bow. The bow of Viṣṇu was called Vaiṣṇavacāpa; the bow of Śiva was called Śaivacāpa. This Vaiṣṇavacāpa is Śārṅga. Due to the power of Śārṅga, Śiva was defeated in the fight. Getting angry Śiva gave his bow to the King Devarāta of Videha. It was this bow that Śrī Rāma broke at the time of the Svayaṁvara marriage of Sītā. After the fight, Viṣṇu gave his bow to Ṛcīka. That bow changed hands from Ṛcīka to Jamadagni and from him to Paraśurāma, who presented this bow to Śrī Rāma on his return after the marriage with Sītā.

(viii) Vaijayantī. This is the necklace of Viṣṇu. This necklace, made of five jewels stuck together, is known by the name Vanamālā, also. Viṣṇu has a charioteer named Dāruka and four horses named Śaibya, Sugrīva, Meghapuṣpa and Valāhaka. Garuḍa is the conveyance of Viṣṇu. He holds conch, discus, club and lotus in each of his four hands. It is said that the discus was made by Viśvakarmā with the dust of the Sun. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa particular mention is made about the ornaments of Viṣṇu.

9) The names of Viṣṇu. The names of Viṣṇu given in Amarakośa and their meanings are given below.

1) Viṣṇu. He who is spread everywhere.

2) Nārāyaṇa. (i) He who lies on water. (nāram= water). (ii) He who had adopted Nāra (human body) in incarnations. (iii) He who enters the human society (Nāra) as Jīvātmā (individual soul).

10) Sahasra Nāmans. (Thousand names of Viṣṇu). The list of thousand names of Viṣṇu, is present in Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa, Chapter 72. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, also all the thousand names are given. Variations are seen in these two lists.

11) Other details (i) Mention about Mahāviṣṇu occurs in several places in Ṛgveda. But more prominence is given to Indra. Though Viṣṇu is exalted in five Ṛgveda mantras (incantations), when compared with other gods, Viṣṇu is only a lesser god. The story of Trivikrama is hinted in Ṛgveda. But there is no mention about the incarnation of Vāmana or Mahābali. Ṛgveda gives Mahāviṣṇu only the position of a younger brother of Indra. That is why the author of Amarakośa has given Viṣṇu synonyms such as Upendra, Indrāvaraja etc.

(ii) Mahāviṣṇu was one of those who came to see Śivaliṅga (Phallus) when it was detached and fell down at the curse of hermit Bhṛgu. (For details see under Śiva).

(iii) Mahāviṣṇu gave Subrahmaṇya as attendants two Vidyādharas named Vardhana and Nandana. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 37).

(iv) Mahāviṣṇu gave Subrahmaṇya the necklace Vaijayantī. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 49).

(v) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 25, that Mahāviṣṇu stays in the assembly of Brahmā.

(vi) Mahāviṣṇu showed grace to Uparicaravasu. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 33).

(vii) Mahāviṣṇu once took birth as the son of Aditi. From that day onwards he got the name Āditya also. (For details see under Aditi). For further details regarding Mahāviṣṇu, see under Virāṭpuruṣa, Prakṛti, Puruṣa, Brahmasṛṣṭi, Avatāra, Amṛta, Garuḍa, Lakṣmī, Gaṅgā etc.

VIṢṆUCITTA. A noble Vaiṣṇavite devotee, who lived in Tamil Nadu. He lived in Villiputtur. It is said that he was the incarnation of Garuḍa. Viṣṇucitta had another name Periyālvār. Āṇḍāl who was famous among the Ālvārs was the daughter of Viṣṇucitta.

Viṣṇucitta sang holy hymns in praise of the beloved god. The hymns of praise he sang are called Pallāṇḍu. He got the name Periyālvār or the foremost of the devotees.

Once at Villiputtur, while he was getting beds ready to plant holy basil, he was attracted by a divine infant. It seemed to Viṣṇucitta that the little girl was lying among the basil plants. He took the child home and named her Godā. It was this Godā who became the famous Āṇḍāl later. Legends say that the birth of Āṇḍāl was in 97 Kali Era. Scholars say that Godā was born in the middle of 7th century. There is another story which mentions that Āṇḍāl was born from a portion of Goddess Earth.

VIṢṆUDĀSA. A Vaiṣṇavite devotee who lived in ancient days. The story of this devotee who defeated his king Cola in devotion to Viṣṇu, is given in Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 110. The story is as follows.

In days of old there was a king named Cola in Kāñcīpura. It was because of his reign that the country got the name Cola. He had performed several sacrifices. On the banks of the river Tāmraparṇī, stood his golden Yūpas (pegs on which sacrificial animals were tied) that the place looked like Caitraratha.

Once the king went to the temple and worshipped Viṣṇu by offering flowers of gold and jewels such as chalcedony and prostrated before Viṣṇu and rose up. At that time a Brahmin named Viṣṇudāsa from his own city came there to worship, with holy basil and water as offerings. He worshipped with the leaves and flower-bunches of holy basil. Because of his worship by holy basil, the king's worship by jewels, was dimmed. The emperor got angry and said, "Viṣṇudāsa, you are a poor man who does not know how to worship Viṣṇu. What merit has your worship of holy basil after mine of jewels?" Both began to contest on this point. At last the king said "Let us see who between us will get oneness with Viṣṇu first, you or I"

After saying this the king went to his palace. He appointed Mudgala the high priest and began to perform a sacrifice to Viṣṇu. The sacrifice was going on with pomp and festivities. Viṣṇudāsa also was immersed in devotion to Viṣṇu to the best of his abilities.

Once Viṣṇudāsa, after his usual prayer and meditation prepared rice-food. But somebody took away the cooked rice unseen by Viṣṇudāsa. Fearing that he would miss the time for his evening prayer, he did not think of cooking food again. Next day also he cooked food and went for evening prayer. On that day also the rice was stolen. This continued. One day after cooking the food, Viṣṇudāsa waited close by in a hidden corner. He saw a low-caste man who was a mere skeleton because of famine, stealing the cooked rice and feeling pity on him he said, "Stop, stop. How can you eat it without any oily thing? See, take this ghee also." Saying so he drew near. The out-caste was terrified at this and ran away. On the way he stumbled and fell. Viṣṇudāsa ran to the spot and fanned him with his cloth. When he rose up the figure in the place of the low-caste was that of the real Śrī Nārāyaṇa with conch, discus and club held in his hands. Because of devotion Viṣṇudāsa stood benumbed. While the King Cola and the people were looking on, Viṣṇudāsa got into the divine Vimāna and went to the world of Viṣṇu.

VIṢṆUDATTA. Son of the Brahmin named Vasudatta. The story of Viṣṇudatta is quoted to prove that bad omens at the beginning of a journey is a warning that the journey would not be fruitful and that it would be rather dangerous.

When Viṣṇudatta became sixteen years old he decided to go to the city of Valabhī for his education. Seven Brahmin boys of his age gathered together and joined him. Deciding not to separate from each other, they started for Valabhī, without the knowledge of their parents. When they proceeded a little further they saw a bad omen. Viṣṇudatta stood undecided, but the others pressed him on and they continued their journey. Next day by evening they reached a village of forest tribes. After walking through the village they reached the house of a woman. They got her permission to stay there for the night. They all lay in a corner. Immediately all slept. Viṣṇudatta alone lay awake. When the night advanced, a man entered the house. The woman and the man talked for a while and carried on sexual sports, and they lay together and slept. A light was burning in the room. Viṣṇudatta saw everything through the cleavage of the shutters, and thought. "I am sorry that we have come to this house. He is not her husband. Sure! she is a harlot." As he was thinking thus, foot-steps were heard in the courtyard. A young man fixed his servants in their places. Then he entered the house and saw Viṣṇudatta and his friends. The new-comer was also a forest-man. He had a sword in his hand. He was the owner of the house. Viṣṇudatta said that they were travellers. When he heard it, without saying anything he got inside and saw his wife sleeping with her lover. With the sword in his hand, he cut off the head of the lover. He did not kill the woman, who did not know that her lover was killed. The forester laid the sword down and lay in the same bed and slept. The light was burning.

After a while the woman woke up, and saw her husband who had cut her lover into two. She stood up quickly and took the trunk of her lover and placed it on her shoulder and taking the head in one hand, went out and hid them in the pile of ashes. Then she returned and lay down. Viṣṇudatta had followed her stealthily and seen what she had done. He also returned and sat in the midst of his friends. She rose up and took the sword of her husband and killed him with it. Then coming out she cried aloud. "Oh dear! These travellers have killed my husband." The servants woke up and came to the house and saw their master lying dead. They tried to attack Viṣṇudatta and his friends. Viṣṇudatta told them everything that he had seen, and showed them the head and the trunk of her lover, hidden in the ashes. When they saw this they understood everything. They tried the woman. At last she admitted the crime. They expelled her and drove her away. After this the travellers returned to their homes. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañcukālambaka, Taraṅga 6).

VIṢṆUDHARMĀ. A child of Garuḍa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 13).

VIṢṆUJVARA. A great disease used by people to defeat their enemies. The antidote for Viṣṇujvara is Śivajvara. In ancient days, in the fight between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Bāṇa, Śivajvara was sent against Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Bāṇa and to prevent it Śrī Kṛṣṇa sent Viṣṇujvara against Bāṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VIṢṆULOKA. Vaikuṇṭha. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, that this world is situated on the top of Mahā Meru along with the worlds of Indra, Agni, Yama, Śiva, Brahmā etc.

VIṢṆUMATĪ. The queen of the king named Śatānīka. Sahasrānīka was the son born to Viṣṇumatī and Śatānīka. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Taraṅga 1).

VIṢṆUPADA. A place at the source of the river Gaṅgā See under Gaṅgā.

VIṢṆUPADATĪRTHA. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, that by bathing in this place and worshipping Vāmana, one could attain the world of Viṣṇu. This place is on the bank of the river Vipāśā. It is mentioned in Droṇa Parva, Chapter 8, that Arjuna, in his dream, had travelled with Śrī Kṛṣṇa to the world of Śiva and had, on the way, visited this holy place.

VIṢṆUPAÑJARA. A Mantra (spell) taught to Devī Kātyāyanī by Śiva. (See under Pārvatī).

VIṢṆUPŪJĀ. (Form of worshipping Viṣṇu). There are conventions regarding the form of worship of Viṣṇu and his satellite gods. The general form of that worship is given below:

Lakṣmī, Gaṅgā, Dhātā, Vidhātā, Yamunā, Navanidhis (nine treasures), Vāstupuruṣa, Śakti, Kūrma (turtle) Ananta (serpent) and Pṛthivī (Earth) are the satellites of Viṣṇu. First you must bow before Acyuta, (Viṣṇu) with all his satellites. Then worship Dharma (Virtue) Wisdom, self-renunciation, Supernatural power and Lawlessness, Ignorance, Want of Self-renunciation and want of supernatural powers, and then Bulb, Stalk, Lotus, Filament and pericarp of the lotus and, the four Vedas, four Yugas (ages) and the three attributes, Sattva (purity) Rajas (passion) and Tamas (darkness). After this the three Maṇḍalas (regions) of Arka (the Sun) Soma (the Moon) and Vahni (fire). After this the nine powers should be worshipped. Vimalā, Utkarṣiṇī, Jñāna, Kriyā, Yoga, Prahva, Satya, Kānti and Īśa are the nine powers. In the same way, Durgā, Sarasvatī, Gaṇapati and Kṣetrapāla also should be worshipped. As the next step heart, head, lock of hair, armour, eyes and the weapons should be worshipped. Then worship the conch, the Discus the club, the lotus, the mark Śrīvatsa, the Kaustubha, the Vanamālā, the Earth, Guru and Garuḍa. With prayer and oblations offered to Indra, Agni, Yama, Nirṛti, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Kubera, Īśa, Ananta and Brahmā, who are the guardians of the ten directions and the weapons and conveyance and Kumuda and the others (the four mountains standing near the Mahā Meru) and Viṣvaksena (Viṣṇu) Viṣṇupūjā will be finished. By performing this worship of Viṣṇu and his satellites, one could attain all one's wishes. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 21)

VIṢṆUPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. Viṣṇu Purāṇa is the description of the activities in Varāha Kalpa (the age of Varāha—Boar). There are twenty-three thousand granthas in this Purāṇa. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 272, that if this book Viṣṇu Purāṇa is given as a gift along with cow and water on the full moon day of the month of Āṣāḍha, the giver would attain the city of Viṣṇu. (For further details see under Purāṇa).

VIṢṆURĀTA. Another name of Parīkṣit.

VIṢṆUŚARMĀ. See under Śivaśarmā.

VIṢṆUVRATA. A Vrata (fast or vow) taken thinking of Viṣṇu in mind. By taking this vow, one could get what one desires for.

Worship Viṣṇu, after bathing his image on the first day of the vow of four days, beginning with the second day of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Pauṣa, with mustard; on the next day with gingelly seeds; on the third day with Orris root and on the fourth day with all the medicinal herbs. 'All the medicinal herbs', means medicine such as Māñcī, Oris root, Costus, Bitumen (stone juice), Saffron, Curcuma, bulb of Kaccūri, Flower of Michelia Champaca and bulb of Cyperus grass. After bathing the image as given above, Viṣṇu must be exalted on the first day by the name Kṛṣṇa, on the second day by the name Acyuta, on the third day, by the name Ananta and on the fourth day, by the name Hṛṣīkeśa. The worship should be performed by offering flower, on the feet on the first day, on the navel on the second day, on the eyes on the third day and on the head on the fourth day, and Candra should be given oblations and exalted by names such as Śaśī on the first day, Candra on the second day, Śaśāṅka on the third day and Indu on the fourth day. It is ordained in Chapter 177, of Agni Purāṇa, that the worship of Viṣṇuvrata should be conducted in this way. This is a form of worship observed by Kings, women and Devas (gods).

VIṢṆUVṚDDHA. A King. He was the son of Trasadasyu. It is mentioned in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa that Viṣṇuvṛddha who was a Kṣatriya by birth, became a Brahmin by penance.

VIṢṆUYAŚAS. Another name of Kalkī. (For further details see under Kalkī).

VIŚOKA I. The charioteer of Bhīmasena. In the Bhārata-battle Bhagadatta struck him and he fell unconscious. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 76).

VIŚOKA II. A prince of Kekaya. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 3, that this prince was killed by Karṇa in the battle of Bhārata.

VIŚOKA III. A Yādava prince born to Kṛṣṇa by Trivakrā. This prince who was the disciple of Nārada had written the book, "Sātvatatantra". (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VIŚOKĀ I. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Chapter 38, that Śrī Kṛṣṇa had a wife called Viśokā.

VIŚOKĀ II. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 5).

VIŚRAVAS. Father of Rāvaṇa.

1) General Information. Viśravas was the son born to Pulastya the son of Brahmā, by his wife Havirbhuk. The son Vaiśravaṇa was born to him by his wife

Ilabilā (Iḍabiḍā) and Rāvaṇa and his brothers by his wife Kaikasī. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 274, there is a story about the birth of Vaiśravaṇa (Kubera) as son to Viśravas.

The son Vaiśravaṇa was born to Pulastya. Vaiśravaṇa rejected his father Pulastya and served his grandfather Brahmā. Pulastya did not like this. He generated another son Viśravas from half of his body. Viśravas tried to wreak vengeance on Vaiśravaṇa, who took refuge near Brahmā, who was much pleased at Vaiśravaṇa and granted him immortality, the state of being the owner of wealth, the position of 'Lokapāla', connection with Śiva, a son named Nalakūbara, the city of Laṅkā, the Puṣpaka Vimāna, the lordship of the Yakṣas and the title Rājarāja (King of Kings).

2) Family Life. Kubera engaged three beautiful Rākṣasa damsels, Puṣpotkaṭā, Rākā and Mālinī to attend on Viśravas. Puṣpotkaṭā had the name Kaikasī also. Kaikasī gave birth to Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa. Khara and Śūrpaṇakhā were born to Rākā and Mālinī gave birth to Vibhīṣaṇa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 7).

VIŚRAVĀŚRAMA. A holy place situated on the boundary of the country Ānartta. Kubera was born in this place. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 89, Stanza 5).

VIṢŪCIKĀ. See under Brahmā, Para 12).

VIŚUṆḌĪ. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Kaśyapa. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 16).

VIṢUVAT. The time, when night and day are equal, is called Viṣuvat. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 8).

VIŚVA. A Kṣatriya King. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 36, that this King was born from a portion of Mayūra, an asura.

VIŚVĀ. A daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 12).

VIŚVABHUK I. A story about the birth of five Indras, on earth, in the form of Pāṇḍavas, is given in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 29. Viśvabhuk is one of them. The remaining four were, Bhūtadhāmā, Śibi, Śānti and Tejasvī.

VIŚVABHUK II. The fourth son of Bṛhaspati. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 17, that it is this Viśvabhuk, who sits in the stomach of all living things and digests food. This Agni (fire) is particularly worshipped in sacrifices. The Purāṇas say that the river Gomatī is the wife of this Agni (fire).

VIṢVĀC. An asura. Mention is made in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 117 that the race of this Asura was destroyed by the Aśvinīdevas.

VIŚVĀCĪ. A celestial maid. She is one of the prominent celestial maids such as Urvaśī and others. Once King Yayāti played with Viśvācī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 65, that Viśvācī had attended the birth festival of Arjuna and sang some songs. Her duty is to stay in the palace of Kubera and serve him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11).

VIŚVADAṀṢṬRA. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 52, that this asura also had been a ruler of this world.

VIŚVADEVAS. A group of Devas. Dharmadeva married ten daughters of Dakṣa, Viśvā was one of them. Viśvadevas are the sons of Viśvā. The Sādhyas were born from Sādhyā, the Marutvans from Marutvatī, the Vasus from Vasū, the Bhānus from Bhānū and the Devas who boast about Muhūrta (auspicious moment) were born from Muhūrtā. Lambā gave birth to Ghoṣa and Yāmī to Nāgavīthī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15).

VIṢVAGAŚVA I. An ancient King in India. He was the son of emperor Pṛthu born in the dynasty of Ikṣvāku and the father of the King Adri. By giving alms of cows, he became famous. Viṣvagaśva was a pure vegetarian. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 20, Stanza 3; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 25; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 58).

VIṢVAGAŚVA II. A King born in the dynasty of Pūru. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 14, that this King was defeated by Arjuna during his Northern Regional conquest.

VIŚVAJIT I. A King of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Jayadratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

VIŚVAJIT II. A King descended from Yayāti. This King was the son of Suvrata and the father of Ripuñjaya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VIŚVAJIT III. The third son of Bṛhaspati. He has the intelligence of all the living beings in all the worlds. That is why he was given the name Viśvajit. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 16).

VIŚVAJIT IV. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 53, that in days of yore, this asura had been ruling over the world and that because of his fate he had to leave this world.

VIŚVAKA. A hermit of the period of Ṛgveda. Once Viṣṇāpū the son of this hermit was lost. The father praised the Aśvinidevas, who showed him his son as one shows a lost cow. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 8, Sūkta 116).

VIŚVAKARMĀ. The architect of the Devas.

1) Birth. Viśvakarmā is the son of Prabhāsa, the eighth of the Eight Vasus. Varastrī, the sister of Bṛhaspati, a celibate woman who had attained Yogasiddhi (union with the Universal Soul) and travelled all over the world was the wife of Prabhāsa. Prajāpati Viśvakarmā was born to Prabhāsa by Varastrī. This Viśvakarmā was the inventor of innumerable kinds of handicrafts, the architect of the gods, maker of all kinds of ornaments, and the most famous sculptor. He was the maker of all the aerial chariots of the Devas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15).

2) Children. Though mention is made about many children of Viśvakarmā in various Purāṇas, five sons and four daughters are mostly spoken of. When Mahāviṣṇu took the incarnation of Śrī Rāma for a stipulated purpose, the devas took birth as monkeys in forests, to help Mahāviṣṇu. Mention is made in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 18, that Nala a very big monkey was begotten by Viśvakarmā.

The other four sons of Viśvakarmā are mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15. Four sons named Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭā and Rudra were born to Viśvakarmā. The great hermit and sage Viśvarūpa was the son of Tvaṣṭā. Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapardī, Raivata, Mṛgavyādha, Śarva, and Kapālī are the eleven Rudras. They are the Īśvaras (gods) of the three worlds. It is said that in this way there are one hundred Rudras with shining radiance.

The daughters of Viśvakarmā:—The four prominent daughters are Saṁjñā, Citrāṅgadā, Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī. The Sun married Saṁjñā. Sun got three children, Manu, Yama and Yamī by Saṁjñā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 2). Priyavrata, the brother of Uttānapāda, married Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī. Of these the first wife gave birth to ten sons named Agnīdhra, Idhmajihva, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi, Vītihotra and Kavi and last of all a daughter named Ūrjjasvatī. Of these Kavi, Savana and Mahāvīra became abstemious and well-versed in Brahmavidyā (theosophy). By the other wife three other sons Uttama, Tāmasa and Raivata were born to Priyavrata. These grew up to be famous and gradually became lords of Manvantaras. This Priyavrata lived with his sons and ruled over the country for eleven Arbuda ages (Arbuda=ten crores). In spite of his old age, his faculties or his body did not become weak. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

Citrāṅgadā was the fourth daughter of Viśvakarmā. Ghṛtācī was her mother. The young and beautiful Citrāṅgadā one day went to bathe in the river in the Naimiṣa forest. When she got into the water the prince Suratha, the son of King Sudeva came there. Their eyes met. Both fell in love with each other. In spite of the advice of her maids she succumbed to the desire of the King. Knowing this her angry father Viśvakarmā came to her and said, "Since you have deviated from the path of righteousness and abandoned your soul to a libertine, you will not have marriage, and hence you will not enjoy the pleasures of having a husband or child." As soon as she was cursed, the river Sarasvatī carried the prince Suratha thirteen yojanas down along with her current. Because the King was washed away by the current Citrāṅgadā fell down unconscious. The maids sprinkled the water from the river Sarasvatī on her face. Still she lay there as dead. Thinking that she was dead, her maids went in different ways to fetch firewood and fire. When the maids were gone, she came to herself and looked on all sides. Seeing none of her maids in the vicinity, she felt miserable and jumped into the river Sarasvatī, and the current carried her down and pushed her into the great river Gomatī. Being aware of her future, the great river Gomatī pushed her down and placed her in a big forest where lions, leopards, tigers etc. lived in plenty.

A Guhyaka (a section of Yakṣas) who was going through the sky, saw Citrāṅgadā in the forest, and in reply to his enquiry she told her story to him. Guhyaka blessed her and advised her to go to the temple close by and to worship Śrīkaṇṭheśvara, so that every thing might end well. Accordingly Citrāṅgadā reached Śrīkaṇṭheśvara on the south of Kālindī, bathed in the Yamunā at noon and went to the temple and bowed before Śrīkaṇṭha Maheśvara.

At that time the hermit Ṛtadhvaja, well-versed in Sāmaveda came there to bathe. The hermit called Citrāṅgadā and enquired about her. She told the hermit all that had happened to her. Hearing her story, the hermit became angry and cursed Viśvakarmā. "Let that Viśvakarmā who has behaved so cruelly towards his own daughter become a monkey." Then he called Citrāṅgadā and said to her. "Good girl, go to the holy place called Saptagodāvara and worship Hāṭakeśvara Mahādeva. Devavatī, the daughter of the asura Kandāramālī the hermit woman Damayantī, the daughter of Āñjana, a Guhyaka, and Vedavatī the daughter of Parjanya would come there. At the time when these three young women meet together at Hāṭakeśvara, you will unite with your husband." Being overjoyed at the words of the hermit, Citrāṅgadā went to Saptagodāvara, lived there and worshipped Śiva. Ṛtadhvaja went on his way.

Viśvakarmā, transformed into a huge monkey, was causing havoc and devastation in the forest. Once the five-year-old son of Ṛtadhvaja, called Jābāli had gone to bathe in the river. The Viśvakarmā monkey chased this boy and caught him and taking him to the top of a Banyan tree, placed him close to the branches and tied him fast with creepers. After this the monkey went to Mahāmeru. As the second adventure, the monkey separated Damayantī from her father Añjana, a Guhyaka. Damayantī was born to Añjana by the celestial maid Pramlocā. Hermit Mudgala had once prophesied that this Damayantī would become the prominent wife of a King. The delighted Damayantī was once about to get into the water of the holy bath Hiraṇvatī, with her maids when the Viśvakarmā-monkey ran to the spot and the terrified Damayantī jumped into the river and was carried down by the current. She floated down and got into a forest. It was in this forest that Jābāli was tied to the banyan branches. Damayantī saw Jābāli. Each said to the other about the cruel deeds of the monkey. After that according to the advice of Jābāli, Damayantī went to the temple of Śrīkaṇṭheśvara on the basin of the river Yamunā. After worshipping Śrīkaṇṭheśvara, she wrote on the wall of the temple, a poem about the misfortunes of herself and Jābāli and stayed in that place engaged in worshipping god.

The next confrontation of the monkey was with Vedavatī the daughter of Parjanya. Vedavatī was born to Parjanya by a celestial woman Ghṛtācī. Once while Vedavatī was playing in the forest, the monkey saw her. He addressed her Devavatī, intentionally mispronouncing her name. She replied, "You monkey. I am not Devavatī, I am Vedavatī." Instantly the monkey ran to her. Vedavatī quickly climbed on a hibiscus tree. The monkey kicked at the tree and broke it. Vedavatī held fast to a strong branch of the tree. The monkey took the branch and threw it on to the sea. Every movable and immovable thing in the world thought a tree was falling down from the sky. Seeing Vedavatī falling down, a Gandharva said, "Oh dear, Brahmā himself had said once that this damsel would become the chief wife of Indradyumna, the famous hero, the son of Manu the great King who has completed thousand yāgas (sacrifices)."

Hearing the words of the Gandharva, Indradyumna the son of Manu, broke that branch into thousand pieces by his arrows. Though the branch was destroyed, Indradyumna could not find where Vedavatī had fallen. She floated into a part of the forest. All alone she walked on and on and reached the temple of Śrīkaṇṭheśvara, on the bank of Yamunā. Damayantī who had reached the temple earlier and Vedavatī met each other and talked about their experiences. Thus due to the wickedness of the Viśvakarmā-monkey Jābāli the son of Ṛtadhvaja came to be tied, on to the banyan tree and Damayantī and Vedavatī to be staying helpless in the temple of Śrīkaṇṭheśvara.

At this time the hermit Gālava reached the temple of Śrīkaṇṭheśvara. He saw Damayantī and Vedavatī and felt pity on them. Next day Gālava started for Saptagodāvara to take a bath in Kārttika. Damayantī and Vedavatī followed the hermit. They reached Saptagodāvara and dipped in Puṣkara bath. Under water they saw several Virgin fishes gathered round a whale begging him for love. The whale was saying harsh words to them rejecting their request. The fish virgins again told the whale. "Don't you see the hermit Gālava going about with two beautiful damsels. If this righteous hermit does not fear slander, why should you, who live under water fear it?" The whale replied. "Gālava doesn't fear people because he is daring and blind with love." Hearing these words of the fishes, Gālava became ashamed of himself. So without coming up he stayed under water. The two girls finished bath and got on the bank, and waited for Gālava. Viśvakarmā's daughter Citrāṅgadā, who had reached the place earlier, met the two girls. They told each other their stories. "As Ṛtadhvaja had prophesied, Damayantī the daughter of Añjana and Vedavatī the daughter of Parjanya have arrived." Thought Citrāṅgadā. "If Devavatī the daughter of the asura Kandāramālī, also is come, I could unite with my husband Suratha." Citrāṅgadā became glad. At this time Devavatī, the daughter of Kandāramālī, ran to the spot, being chased by the Viśvakarmā monkey.

The reader might remember that Damayantī had written a poem on the wall of the temple at Śrīkaṇṭheśvara when she had gone there at the instruction of Jābāli who had been tied on to a branch of a tree. At noon on that day Ṛtadhvaja had gone to the temple at Śrīkaṇṭheśvara and happened to see the poem. Then only did he understand that his son Jābāli had been tied to a tree by a monkey. By then five hundred years had elapsed. Ṛtadhvaja was aware of the fact that the only person capable of liberating Jābāli, was Śakuni the son of Ikṣvāku. Ṛtadhvaja reached Ayodhyā instantly and told Ikṣvāku. "Oh, mighty King! hear me, please! A monkey has made my virtuous and learned son Jābāli, a captive and bound him on a tree, within the boundary of your kingdom. Nobody in the world except your son Śakuni will be capable of rescuing him." Śakuni accompanied Ṛtadhvaja to the forest. They saw the tall huge banyan tree with bulky roots hanging on all sides and on the top of the tree, on a lofty place, the son of Ṛtadhvaja entangled and entwined by creepers. Seeing the network of creepers around the body of the hermit's son, Śakuni began to send arrows one after another and cut off all the creeper's knots. Ṛtadhvaja climbed up the tree. Seeing his father, Jābāli bowed his head to his father. Ṛtadhvaja was not capable of extricating his son. The prince put down his bow and arrow and tried to untie the knots of the creepers that held his body to the branch. Though a sturdy man he could not do it. At last they cut the branch close to his body and got Jābāli down. A piece of the branch was stuck to his back. Thus with his son Jābāli bearing a piece of lumber on his back and Śakuni bearing bow and arrows, Ṛtadhvaja came to Kālindī.

Ṛtadhvaja, Śakuni and Jābāli wandered about for years in search of Damayantī and the others. After nearly a hundred years, with despair Jābāli bearing the lumber on his back, went with his father to Kosala. The king of that country was Indradyumna, the son of Manu. He welcomed the hermit with hospitality. Ṛtadhvaja talked about Damayantī. Indradyumna claimed that he had once saved a young woman by his arrows from the branch of a tree. They all started in search of the girls. They reached Badaryāśrama, where they saw a young hermit. From the conversation it was revealed that the young hermit was Suratha. When he learned everything he stopped penance and accompanied them. Under the leadership of Ṛtadhvaja, they reached Saptagodāvara and saw Citrāṅgadā.

In the meanwhile Ghṛtācī, sad and miserable, was wandering over the mountain of the rising sun, searching for her lost daughter Citrāṅgadā. She met the cursed monkey form of Viśvakarmā and asked it, "Oh! monkey! have you seen a girl?" The monkey told her every thing that took place. Ghṛtācī also reached Saptagodāvara. The monkey followed close behind her. As soon as Jābāli saw the monkey he got angry and jumped forward to wreak vengeance. Ṛtadhvaja checked his son and told him the history of Viśvakarmā. The monkey separated the piece of the branch from the back of Jābāli, who had been bearing it on his back for the last thousand years. Ṛtadhvaja was immensely pleased at this and asked the monkey what boon he wanted. The monkey said. "Brahman, if you wish to give me a boon, please recall your curse. Great hermit! I am Viśvakarmā the father of Citrāṅgadā. I became a monkey because of your curse. Let all the sins I have incurred because of the mischief of a monkey, be remitted." Hearing this Ṛtadhvaja said. "Your curse will end when you get a strong and sturdy son by Ghṛtācī."

Hearing this Ghṛtācī rose up in the sky. The monkey also jumped up and followed her. The monkey was attracted by the beauty of Ghṛtācī. Later, on the mountain named Kolāhala, the monkey enticed Ghṛtācī and wooed her. She consented and they lived thus for a long time. Then they went to the Vindhya mountain. On the bank of the Godāvarī, a sturdy son was born to them. This son was the strong sturdy huge monkey Nala, who helped Śrī Rāma.

On the birth of a son Viśvakarmā regained his former form. He returned to Saptagodāvara with Ghṛtācī. Gālava also came there. With the hermit Gālava at the head, the priests made burnt offerings and began the performance of the marriage ceremony. The Gandharvas sang and the celestial maids danced. The first marriage was between Devavatī the daughter of Kandāramālī and Jābāli. Then Indradyumna married Vedavatī. Next, Śakuni married Damayantī, the daughter of Añjana, and lastly Suratha married Citrāṅgadā. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapters 63 and 64).

3) Other details.

(i) Viśvakarmā shines in the assembly of Indra, in the form of a hermit. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 14).

(ii) The palace of Yama was built by Viśvakarmā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 34).

(iii) Viśvakarmā lived in water and built the palace of Varuṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 2).

(iv) Viśvakarmā stays in the palace of Brahmā and serves him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 31).

(v) Viśvakarmā once performed a sacrifice in Brahmavana. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 17).
(vi) The aerial chariot Puṣpaka was made by Viśvakarmā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 161, Stanza 37).
(vii) It was with an illusive ensign, made by Viśvakarmā, flying in front of the chariot that Arjuna fought against the Kauravas at Virāṭa. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 3).
(viii) Once Viśvakarmā quarrelled with Indra and created the son Viśvarūpa with three heads. (See under Viśvarūpa).
(ix) Viśvakarmā made the bow called Vijaya and gave it to Indra. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 42).
(x) During the burning of Tripura, Viśvakarmā made a divine chariot and gave it to Śiva. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 16).
(xi) To the reception and feast given by Bharadvāja to Bharata, who was going to the forest in search of Śrī Rāma who had gone to live in the forest, Viśvakarmā and Tvaṣṭā were also invited. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyākāṇḍa, Sarga 91).
(xii) Viśvakarmā once cut the face of a horse and attached it to the headless body of Mahāviṣṇu. That figure was given the name Hayagrīva. It was this Hayagrīva figure of Mahāviṣṇu, which killed the asura Hayagrīva. (See under Hayagrīva).
(xiii) Viśvakarmā should be dedicated in temples in the form of wearing Akṣasūtra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).
(xiv) It is stated in Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañcukālambaka Taraṅga 8, that Maya, the architect of the asuras, was the son of Viśvakarmā.
(xv) Laṅkā was built by Viśvakarmā. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
(xvi) Viśvakarmā once made a heaven for hermit Ātreya. (See under Ātreya).
(xvii) Tilottamā was made by Viśvakarmā. (See under Tilottamā).
(xviii) Viśvakarmā once turned the sun in his turning machine. (See under Saṁjñā).

VIŚVAKṚT. An eternal god (Viśvadeva) concerned with offerings to the Manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 36).

VIṢVAKSENA I. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Chapter 7, that he shines in the palace of Indra.

VIṢVAKSENA II. A synonym of Viṣṇu.

VIŚVĀMITRA. A royal hermit of immense attainments.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Brahmā in the following order Brahmā—Atri — Candra — Budha — Purūravas —Vijaya—Hotraka—Jahnu — Puru—Balāka—Ajaka—Kuśa—Kuśanābha—Gādhi—Viśvāmitra.

2) Birth. Six beautiful daughters were born to Kuśanābha the son of King Kuśa. The hermit Brahmadatta married them. After this a son named Gādhi was born to Kuśanābha. Two children named Satyavatī and Viśvāmitra were born to Gādhi. Satyavatī was married to Ṛcīka; As he was born in the family of the famous king Kuśa, Viśvāmitra got the name Kauśika also. His kingdom was Kānyakubja. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 34).

3) Becoming a hermit. Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha were two hermits who were hostile to each other throughout their lives. A quarrel with Vasiṣṭha, persuaded Viśvāmitra to become a hermit.
(Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 51).

The hermit Vasiṣṭha erected his hermitage and did penance in the country of Viśvāmitra. Once, while engaged in hunting Viśvāmitra saw Nandinī in the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, and wanted to have her. In the battle which ensued between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, the hermit Vasiṣṭha came out victorious. The ashamed Viśvāmitra gave up his kingdom and went to forest to do penance. Viśvāmitra became a royal hermit of great attainments. There were constant confrontations between the Rājarṣi and the Brahmarṣi (King-hermit and Brahmin-hermit). (For the detailed story of the quarrels between Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha see under Vasiṣṭha, para 2).

4) Viśvāmitra and Hariścandra. The histories of Viśvāmitra, Vasiṣṭha and Hariścandra are intertwined as a triple string. Viśvāmitra made Hariścandra, the most renowned of the men of veracity, go begging.

Hariścandra and Viśvāmitra. Their history begins from King Triśaṅku of the Solar dynasty.

Formerly the name of Triśaṅku was Satyavrata. Aruṇa was the father of Satyavrata. When Aruṇa was reigning the prince Satyavrata was leading a wicked life. He once entered the wedding hall of a Brahmin and carried away the bride by force. When the king knew this, he expelled the prince from the palace. Vasiṣṭha, as the family priest, was behind the cruelty on the part of the king towards his son. It was because of this that Viśvāmitra crossed the path of Satyavrata.

Satyavrata went to the forest and lived like a low-caste man. King Aruṇa repented his rashness. Entrusting his kingdom to Vasiṣṭha, Aruṇa went to the forest to do penance. For twelve years there was no rain in the country. Famine broke out. Viśvāmitra's wife and three children were in great difficulty. The hermit had been engaged in penance. So the wife of the hermit decided to sell the middle son for the sake of maintaining the rest and started for the market with her children. On the way Satyavrata met them and learned the whole story. He told her not to sell the child. He agreed to give them food till the arrival of Viśvāmitra. The agreement was that he would tie the meat, obtained by hunting, to a tree outside the hermitage, every day. Satyavrata carried out the promise. One day he did not get anything from hunting. He caught hold of Vasiṣṭha's cow which had been grazing in the forest and killed it and gave its flesh to the family of Viśvāmitra. On coming to know this Vasiṣṭha cursed him and changed his form into that of a caṇḍāla (low-caste). Moreover, as he had incurred three sins such as stealing of a bride, anger of father and cow-slaughter, he came to be called Triśaṅku from that day onwards. Weighed down by these sins, he tried to commit suicide. Devī appeared before him and gave him back his original form and his kingdom.

After the death of Aruṇa, Triśaṅku assumed the reign. Hariścandra was his son. After giving the country to his son, Triśaṅku requested Vasiṣṭha to perform the sacrifice to send him to heaven bodily. Vasiṣṭha said that it was impossible for him. Vasiṣṭha's enemy Viśvāmitra took up the task. He lifted Triśaṅku bodily, up to heaven. But he was denied admittance in heaven and so Viśvāmitra created an artificial heaven between the earth and heaven and made Triśaṅku stay there.

Viśvāmitra was keeping up hostile attitude towards the kings of the Solar dynasty. In reality it was not the hostility towards the Solar dynasty, but it was his enmity against Vasiṣṭha. Viśvāmitra did not like Vasiṣṭha's being the family-priest of the kings of the Solar dynasty. So Viśvāmitra kept up an attitude of antipathy towards them. This is the background of the quarrel between Hariścandra and Viśvāmitra.

Hariścandra took Candramatī, the daughter of Śibi, as his first wife. Besides her, he had ninetynine wives. But they had no children. At last according to the advice of Vasiṣṭha he went to the basin of the Ganges and did penance before Varuṇa. Viśvāmitra did not like this. Varuṇa appeared and said that Hariścandra would get a son. The king had promised that he would give his son as a sacrificial animal to Varuṇa.

Candramatī became pregnant and delivered a son. He was named Rohitāśva. Even after the lapse of a month, the son was not given to Varuṇa. On several occasions Varuṇa demanded the child; and Hariścandra would give some excuses. Finally the king agreed to hand him over to Varuṇa at the age of eleven after his Upanayana (investiture with the Brahma string). The boy completed his tenth year. Preparations were being made in the palace, for Upanayana, when Varuṇa arrived. The prince, who was aware of the fact that his father would sacrifice him after his Upanayana, ran away from the palace at night. Varuṇa asked the king to hand over the boy to him. The king was in great perplexity. Varuṇa cursed the king that he would catch the disease called Jalodara(dropsy). Thus the king became a sick man. Rohitāśva heard from travellers that his father was ill. On many occasions he wanted to return to the palace. But Indra appeared before him in the form of a Brahmin and dissuaded him from going to the palace.

Hariścandra called Vasiṣṭha and asked him to suggest a remedy for this woe and misery. Vasiṣṭha advised him to fulfil somehow or other, the promise made to Varuṇa. The hermit continued. "Sons are of ten types. A son bought for price also is included in this. So it is enough if a son is bought for price and is sacrificed. Some Brahmin may be found, who will be willing to sell his son. If you please Varuṇa thus, you will be cured."

The King was delighted to hear this. He instructed his minister to find out any Brahmin who was willing to sell his son. A greedy Brahmin was found out. His name was Ajīgarta. He had three sons. He was prepared to sell the second son, Śunaśśepha. The minister agreed to give him hundred cows in return.

Up to this time Viśvāmitra had been waging only a shadow war against the Kings of the Solar dynasty. From this moment he entered the scene of war. The minister bought Śunaśśepha and brought him to the palace. Viśvāmitra also arrived at the palace. He sympathised with Śunaśśepha who was crying pitiably. He asked the King to release the boy, and gave a warning that if the boy was not set free, the sacrifice would be obstructed. The King said that he was doing so to get recovery from illness, that he would give Viśvāmitra a good deal of wealth, and requested him not to cause any hindrance to the sacrifice. These words and the misery of the boy kindled the anger of Viśvāmitra. He called Śunaśśepha and taught him Varuṇamantra (spell) and told him to repeat the mantra when he was lying on the slaughter-stone and that he would escape death. Śunaśśepha did as he was told. Varuṇa became pleased with him and appearing before the King said, "Leave Śunaśśepha and perform the sacrifice. You will get recovery." Saying so Varuṇa disappeared. Immediately the King was cured of his disease. At the order of the King Śunaśśepha was set free. The sound 'Jaya Jaya' (victory) reverberated in the sacrificial hall. Śunaśśepha got up and asked. "Oh great men. Who is my father now? Some said that it was Ajīgarta. Some others argued that it was Hariścandra. Some said that it was Varuṇa." At this time Vasiṣṭha stood up and said. "Oh, great men, please stop arguing. I shall give reply in accordance with the convention of Vedas. When he bargained on the price of his son and received the cost Ajīgarta lost his paternity. Thenceforward Hariścandra who bought the boy became his father. From the moment he had issued orders to bind the boy and place him on the slaughter-stone, he also had lost his paternity. The claim of Varuṇa to his paternity, because the boy had been saved from death by him, does not hold good. Any god will be pleased, when praised and glorified with great laudatory mantras and will confer upon the supplicant wealth, life, cow, land, salvation etc. There is nothing unusual in this. But it was Viśvāmitra who taught him the Varuṇa-spell in his pitiable and dangerous situation. So Viśvāmitra alone has claim to the boy's paternity."

Those who were present, accepted this decision. Immediately Viśvāmitra took Śunaśśepha with him and went to his hermitage. Hearing about the recovery of the King, Rohitāśva returned to the palace from the forest. Hariścandra received him with tears of joy. The King, with his wife and son led a happy life and ruled over his subjects with justice and truth. At this time, Hariścandra (of Kakutstha's family) accepting Vasiṣṭha as the main priest performed the famous sacrifice of Rājasūya (Royal) consecration with ceremonies and festivities. With this the fame of Hariścandra spread far and wide.

At this point begins the next stage of confrontation between Viśvāmitra and Hariścandra. Vasiṣṭha once reached heaven. Viśvāmitra also reached there at the same time. The devas greeted both honourably. But Viśvāmitra saw that Vasiṣṭha was shown some partiality. This was unpalatable to Viśvāmitra, who asked Vasiṣṭha. "What excellence have you, more than I ?" Vasiṣṭha replied. 'Have you not heard about Hariścandra, the King of the Solar dynasty ? It is the noblest dynasty in the world. The familypriesthood of this dynasty also is laudable. My disciple Hariścandra of that royal family has recently performed the sacrifice of Rājasūya. I was the Supreme priest of the function. This is a covetable position not attainable to many. Moreover, there is none in the world, more truthful, firm of character, more charitable and more liberal than Hariścandra. This is a fact."

Viśvāmitra got up angrily and argued that Hariścandra was not truthful. He staked all the fruits of his penance to prove this. From that day onwards Viśvāmitra began to make moves to instigate Hariścandra to deviate from the path of truth.

Once Hariścandra, while he was hunting, met a lonely woman in the forest. She was moaning. The King asked why she was lamenting. She replied, "Oh King. I am Siddhirūpiṇī (a goddess who helps people to attain anything). Viśvāmitra is doing penance to possess me. I request you to protect me." The King promised her to see that she was not subjected to the molestation of Viśvāmitra any longer. After that Hariścandra went to the hermitage of Viśvāmitra and made an enquiry. He then asked the hermit to stop penance, as his severe, intense, penance was harmful to many people in the country. The King returned to the palace. Viśvāmitra got angry and stood up. Up to this time only a cold war existed between them. Hostility became open now.

Viśvāmitra began to make moves against Hariścandra quickly. He changed a fierce asura into a hog and sent it to the garden of Hariścandra. The hog destroyed the garden. All the attempts made by the guards to drive the hog away ended in failure. They informed the King. The King mounted on a horse and with weapons started for the garden. Without paying any heed to the arrows of the King, the hog ran away. The King began to chase it. The hog seemed to be near. Then it was away, then in front of the King and suddenly it appeared behind him. Then it would disappear instantly. In this manner the hog played around the King. After a while, the King was separated from his army and was entrapped, all alone, in a thick forest. He did not find any way out. He lost his way in the forest. As he was thus walking slowly, he saw a stream of pure water in front of him. Both the King and the horse drank from the stream. As he was standing thus without knowing the way to return home, Viśvāmitra went to him in the guise of an old Brahmin.

The King honoured the old man, and told him that he was Hariścandra, the King of Ayodhyā, and that by chasing a hog which destroyed his garden, he had reached the forest. He continued telling the old Brahmin who had helped him. "You might have heard that Hariścandra, the King of Ayodhyā, had performed the sacrifice Rājasūya. I am that same King. It is my vow to give anybody what he asks for. If you want money or anything for sacrifice or for any other purpose, just come to Ayodhyā. I will give you whatever you want." The old man was pleased. He told the King that the jungle-stream flowed through a holy place and that it would be better to offer the gift after taking a bath in the river. The King purified himself by bathing in the river and then said. "Sir, I am ready to offer gifts. State your needs. It is my vow to give what is requested. At the time of the Rājasūya I acted so towards all of you and took a vow that I would do so in future also. I am glad because I have met you on the bank of this holy stream. So tell me quickly what you want."

Brahmin:—"Oh King, I have heard about your fame. Moreover there is nobody in the world equal to Hariścandra, born of the Solar dynasty, the son of Triśaṅku in liberality. Such is the opinion of hermit Vasiṣṭha. There is nothing more to know about you, oh, King, who is such a man of liberality. I have only one desire. The marriage of my son is being conducted. I do not possess enough money for the marriage. I want only a help for the same." The King thought it to be a very simple request, and promised to give the required amount. Viśvāmitra by illusion customary to Gandharvas created a young man and a young woman, and showed them to the King saying that they were his son and daughter. Then the Brahmin who was delighted by the promise, showed the King the way to the palace.

After making all arrangements for the marriage, Viśvāmitra approached King Hariścandra. The King asked him what amount he required. "Give me your kingdom with all the elephants, horses, chariots, jewels and wealth in it", said Viśvāmitra. The King who had been led to this deception by Viśvāmitra, having no go, agreed. Thus Viśvāmitra obtained the kingdom and everything that Hariścandra possessed. It is conventional that whenever a gift is given to Brahmins, a dakṣiṇā (monetary gift) also should be given along with it. Otherwise the gift will be futile. The King asked the Brahmin what he wanted as dakṣiṇā. He demanded two and a half Bhāras of gold as dakṣiṇā. The King agreed to give that also. But where to get this amount from, since he had lost his kingdom and everything? Having sunk deep in misery due to the deceit of Viśvāmitra, the King sat on the soil, cursing his fate. Seeing this, the queen ran to him and cried. While he was telling his wife every thing, Viśvāmitra came there and said :

Viśvāmitra :—"Hariścandra ! According to the gift hand over your country and everything instantly. I must have the dakṣiṇā of two and a half Bhāras of gold also just now."

Hariścandra :—"Sir ! According to my promise receive everything now. We are leaving the country instantly. But since I have given you everything that I had, how can I give you dakṣiṇā ? Everything I had, has become yours. The amount for dakṣiṇā has yet to be procured. So receive the gift now. The dakṣiṇā shall be given as early as possible."

After giving everything to the hermit, the King left the country with only the cloth he had been wearing. His wife and child followed him. The hermit also followed the King compelling him to give him the dakṣiṇā. The King told him that only after paying this debt would he eat any food, and that he would pay the amount within a month. Viśvāmitra, unwillingly agreed to this.

With his wife Candramatī and his young son, Hariścandra reached Kāśī. After a month Viśvāmitra came to Kāśī for the amount of dakṣiṇā. Finding no go, Candramatī said to her husband. "My Lord ! sell me to some one and clear off this debt." The King with tears agreed to this proposal. Because of their woe and misery, both fell on the ground and fainted. The child sat near them hungry and crying. Viśvāmitra stood near them compelling them to pay the amount. When Hariścandra came to himself, he sold his beloved wife to a Brahmin in the village close by. The Brahmin who bought Candramatī was Viśvāmitra. Hariścandra was not aware of this. After counting out a crore of gold pieces in a cloth and placing it on the ground Viśvāmitra caught hold of Candramatī by her hair and dragged her away. He bought the crying child also paying its price. The Brahmin led the mother and the child, beating and dragging them along, like animals. They disappeared from the sight of the King.

Viśvāmitra again came before Hariścandra and asked for the money. Hariścandra gave Viśvāmitra, all the money he got. The hermit was not satisfied. Viśvāmitra said that the money given, was not an adequate amount as dakṣiṇā when the importance of the great sacrifice Rājasūya was considered and that if he was to get the full benefit of the sacrifice he had to satisfy him by giving him the requisite amount. The King accepted everything the hermit said without any objection. Viśvāmitra compelled him for payment. The King requested for time. Viśvāmitra allowed time till sunset that day.

As soon as Viśvāmitra had gone Hariścandra walked on with bent head, calling out. "Does anybody want me ? Will anybody buy me for price ?" Instantly Yamadharma came there as an outcaste and bought Hariścandra. The name of the outcaste was Pravīra. He bought Hariścandra to guard the funeral ground and to collect tax on dead bodies. Viśvāmitra quickly ran to the place. The outcaste gave Viśvāmitra ten yojanas of land which yielded jewels, in the region of Prayāga and severed his connection. Viśvāmitra went on his way. The outcaste King took Hariścandra to the funeral ground. Day and night Hariścandra had to guard the entrance of the funeral ground.

At this juncture Hariścandra's son died of snake bite, while he was playing with other children on the bank of the Ganges. His mother Candramatī fainted and fell down, the moment she heard about it. As soon as she recovered, she lamented over the death of her son for a long time. Then she requested her master for permission to go and see the dead body of her son. But she was not given permission. She repeatedly pleaded crying all the while. Then the Brahmin, her master, got angry and said. "You slave ! If your son it dead, let him be dead. Is it any loss to you ? It is my money that is lost. You go and do your work. If not I will operate this whip well on you. Remember that. You know the biting pain of this whip. Stop wailing and lamenting."

Candramatī persisted in her request to allow her to go and see the dead body of her son. Not only did he refuse to allow her to see the dead body of her son, but also beat her. With tears she turned to her duties. It was night. The Brahmin took his meals and lay down to sleep. Candramatī was sitting at his feet massaging his legs. When it was nearly midnight that stone-hearted old Brahmin said. "Now you may go. Complete the funeral and return before dawn. Your usual work in the morning should not be left undone. If so, you know the consequences."

Hearing these words, Candramatī ran to the place where the dead body of her son lay. The son lay on the grass dead and stiff, with the face and body turned blue due to poison. She saw that face in the flash of a lightning. She cried aloud. Hearing the cry people of the neighbouring houses ran to the spot. Candramatī did not give any reply to their questions. Some thought her to be a ghost. Some wanted to kill her. Some caught her by the hair. Some struck at her. At last they tied her with a rope and dragged her to the funeral place. They asked Hariścandra who was standing there, to cut her into pieces. He refused to kill a woman. The outcaste King came there and giving Hariścandra a big sword asked him again and again to cut her into pieces. Candramatī and Hariścandra did not recognize each other. At last, finding it difficult to disobey his master, Hariścandra raised the sword to cut her.

Then Candramatī shouted. "You outcaste. My son is lying dead on the bank of the Ganges near this town. Let me bring his body and cremate it. Allow me this much time. After that I will come and sit here to be cut into pieces by you." Hariścandra agreed to it. Crying all the way Candramatī went to the bank of the Ganges and brought the dead body of her son to the cremation place. Seeing her pitiable condition Hariścandra went close to the dead body and removing the shroud looked at the corpse. Because of poison the body of the child was blue and ugly and as Hariścandra and Candramatī had undergone so thorough a change they did not recognize each other. But from her lamentation and talk, he understood that the woman was his wife Candramatī. He also cried aloud. Candramatī recognized her husband. Still Hariścandra said that if the child was cremated without collecting the usual fee, it would be deceiving his master. At last both of them decided to commit suicide before the night ended.

Without loss of time Hariścandra gathered half-burned fire-wood, and built a pile big enough to burn the child's body and for them to jump into it. He laid the child on it and set fire to it. Hariścandra and Candramatī stood with closed eyes ready to jump into the burning fire. Then Brahmā appeared there and prevented them from jumping into the fire. Indra and the Devas showered Amṛta (Ambrosia). The child came to life and got out of the fire. The King and the queen regained their shining bodies and royal garments and ornaments. The outcaste who was the master of Hariścandra was really, Dharmadeva. All the Devas blessed Hariścandra and Viśvāmitra returned the kingdom to the truthful Hariścandra. Their subjects were overjoyed at the return of their King and queen. After that Rohita was anointed as the King of Ayodhyā and the Devas went with Hariścandra to heaven. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

7) Weapon Training. Viśvāmitra had proficiency in wielding all types of weapons. He taught Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa all that he knew about weapons. See under Astra.

8) Cursing Rambhā. Once Viśvāmitra was doing very severe penance. Indra feared him. So wishing to hinder the penance of Viśvāmitra somehow Indra called Rambhā to him and said to her. "Rambhā, you dress well and dance before Viśvāmitra. Somehow his penance must be hindered. I shall take the form of a cuckoo, and help you by singing."

Indra and Rambhā reached the forest of penance. The cuckoo began to sing and there was the atmosphere of spring season. Rambhā danced before Viśvāmitra. The concentration of the hermit was broken. The hermit got angry and cursed Rambhā and changed her into a rock. She entreated for redemption from the curse. The hermit told her that after ten thousand years a Brahmin named Bhūritejas would touch the rock, by which touch she would get her original form. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 64).

9) Viśvāmitra and Triśaṅku. See under Triśaṅku.

10) Viśvāmitra and Menakā. See under Śakuntalā and Kadalīgarbhā.

11) Cursing Vidyutprabhā. Once Viśvāmitra did penance to obtain the position of Kubera, who employed the celestial maid Vidyutprabhā to obstruct the penance of Viśvāmitra. She came to the forest in which Viśvāmitra was doing penance and tried to entice the hermit by her beauty. But when she saw that her beauty did not attract the hermit, she assumed a fearful form. Seeing this form, the hermit cursed her. "You shall retain this fearful form and live like a giantess." She requested for redemption. The hermit said that when Śrīdatta, the son of Kālanemi, touched her hair she would be redeemed from the curse.

After many years Kālanemi was born in the country of Mālava as the son of a brahmin named Yajñasena. A son named Śrīdatta was born to this Kālanemi. Once Śrīdatta happened to see this giantess in a forest and caught hold of her by the hair. Instantly she got her original form. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Taraṅga 2).

12) Stealing the flesh of a dog. Once, at the end of Tretā Yuga and the beginning of Dvāpara Yuga, there was no rain for twelve years. Famine prevailed every-where. The people were in utter want and misery. Hermits left their hermitages and wandered about. In a crowd Viśvāmitra lost his wife and children and entered a forest and travelled all alone. He entered the hut of a low-caste (Paraya) and begged for food. But none of them even talked to him. He again requested for something to eat. Nobody cared for him. The hermit fell on the veranda due to weakness.

Viśvāmitra saw in the hut some decayed flesh and intestine of a dog placed in a corner of the kitchen. He decided to steal some of it to appease his hunger. The Caṇḍālas slept when the night advanced. But the lord of the house lay pretending to sleep. Viśvāmitra slowly entered the kitchen, and opened the pot in which the intestine of the dog was kept. The owner of the house asked, "Who is that?" Viśvāmitra replied that he had stolen because of his hunger. The eyes of the caṇḍāla were filled with tears because of pity. He said:

"Dog is lower than jackal,
That is what men say,
Of all the parts of its body,
the lowest is its posterior."

Though he said so, he felt glad since he had given Viśvāmitra food. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 141).

13). Cursing the river Sarasvatī. See under Vasiṣṭha, para 2, sub-para 5.

14) Sons. Viśvāmitra had many sons. Their names are given in Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva.

15). Viśvāmitra and Ṛgveda. Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 5, was composed by the Viśvāmitra-family. Variations are observed in the two versions of statements about Viśvāmitra, occurring in Ṛgveda and the Purāṇas. The confrontations between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra occur in Ṛgveda also. The last four sections of Sūkta 15 of Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 3, Anuvāka 4, are meant to scold Vasiṣṭha. Here Viśvāmitra curses Vasiṣṭha's family in various ways. In the 'Annotations of Sāyaṇa', mention is made that the disciples of Vasiṣṭha freed Viśvāmitra from the vow of silence, and that instantly these mantras (chants) dawned in his mind. Though the enmity between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra is seen in Ṛgveda, such elaborate stories as seen in the Purāṇas do not occur in Ṛgveda. But Viśvāmitra procured a prominent place in Ṛgveda because this hermit rescued Sudāsa from danger and forded him across rivers, and took Śunaśśepha as his son. Of these two incidents the first is not given much importance in the Purāṇas. Though the second one occurs in the Purāṇas, the version is different from that of Ṛgveda. From this it is presumed that the stories taken from Ṛgveda underwent a thorough change before they appeared in the Purāṇas.

16) Other details.

(i) The famous hermit Gālava was the son and disciple of Viśvāmitra. (For further details see under Gālava).

VIŚVĀMITRA (M). A holy place situated on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 131, that those who bathe in this holy place will get the status of a Brāhmaṇa.

VIŚVĀMITRĀŚRAMA. A holy place on the banks of the river Kauśikī. The hermitage of Viśvāmitra stood in this place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 22).

VIŚVĀNARA. A King. For a time this King was miserable as he was childless. But by the blessing of Śiva, Viśvānara got a son named Gṛhapati by his wife Śucismitā. Gṛhapati was destined to have life only up to three years. But it is mentioned in Skanda Purāṇa that within this short period Gṛhapati learned the whole of Sāṅgaveda and obtained long life from Śiva.

VIŚVANĀTHA. A Sanskrit literary critic who lived in India in the 14th century A.D. Sāhityadarpaṇa is the most important work of this poet of Orissa. This work on criticism in ten chapters, deals with all the aspects of a literary work.

Kuvalayāśvacarita, Raghuvilāsa, Prabhāvatī, Candrakalā, Narasiṁharājavijaya etc. are the other works of this author. Most of these are not yet found. Kuvalayāśvacarita is a poetic work in Prākṛta and Raghuvilāsa is a great poetic work. Prabhāvatī and Candrakalā are dramas. Narasiṁharāja is a historic work.

VIŚVAPATI. The second son of the Agni (fire) called Manu. It is mentioned in the Vedas that this fire is the King of all the worlds. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221 Stanza 17).

VIŚVARANDHI. The son of Pṛthu, a King of the Solar dynasty. He was the father of the King Candra and grandfather of Yuvanāśva. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7)

VIŚVARUCI. A Gandharva King. At the time of emperor Pṛthu, when the Gandharvas made the earth a cow and milked her for various things, it was the Gandharva Viśvaruci who did the milking. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 25).

VIŚVARŪPA I. A Rākṣasa (giant). Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 14, that this giant sits in the palace of Varuṇa glorifying him.

VIŚVARŪPA II. The son of Tvaṣṭā, the son of Viśvakarmā. This Viśvarūpa is also known as Triśiras. (For further details see under Indra, Para 7).

VIŚVARŪPĀ. The wife of Sage Dharma. It is stated in Vāyu Purāṇa that from sage Dharma, a daughter named Dharmavratā was born to Viśvarūpā.

VIŚVAŚAMBHU. A fire. Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala I, Anuvāka 2, Sūkta 24, states that this fire exists in water.

VIŚVAVASU I. A brother of Paraśurāma, who had four brothers named Rumaṇvān, Suhotra, Vasu and Viśvavasu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 58).

VIŚVĀVASU II. A Gandharva King. The following information about this King is taken from the Purāṇas.

(i) The father of this Devagandharva was Prajāpati Kaśyapa and his mother was Pradhā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 47).

(ii) Pramadvarā was born to Viśvāvasu by the celestial maid Menakā. (See under Pramadvarā).

(iii) Viśvāvasu was present at the Birth-festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 22).

(iv) This Viśvāvasu learned from Soma, Cākṣuṣīvidyā (the art of seeing all) and taught Citraratha, a Gandharva the same art. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 43).

(v) He was present at the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 7).

(vi) Viśvāvasu stays in the palace of Indra glorifying him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 22).

(vii) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 25, that he stays in the palace of Kubera praising him.

(viii) This Gandharva recited a poem at the sacrifice performed by Jamadagni. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 18).

(ix) Kabandha, the asura, who stopped Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, was the changed form of Viśvāvasu by a curse (See under Kabandha).

(x) It was this Viśvāvasu who played the lute in the sacrifice performed by emperor Dilīpa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 7).

(xi) Once Viśvāvasu asked hermit Yājñavalkya twenty-four questions. When he got satisfactory answers, the Gandharva returned to heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 318, Stanza 26).

(xii) It was Viśvāvasu and some other Gandharvas who took away Urvaśī from Purūravas. (See under Purūravas).

(xiii) At the time of emperor Pṛthu, when the earth was milked, the thing the Gandharvas got were those befitting them, In the course of the milking Viśvāvasu stood as the calf. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

VIŚVAVEDĪ. A minister of King Śauri. This minister wanted the King to be just. Śauri and his four brothers Khanitra, Udāvasu, Sunaya and Mahāratha were the sons of Prajāpati. The main ruler of the kingdom was Khanitra. The others were Governors of the East, West North and South divisions of the kingdom. The four brothers had a priest each named Suhotra, Kuśāvarta, Pramati and Vasiṣṭha respectively.

Viśvavedī gathered these four priests together and created four wicked fairies and sent them against Khanitra the King. The fierce fairies attacked Khanitra. But because of his purity and cleanliness the fairies had to admit defeat. The fairies came back and attacked their creators, the four priests and Viśvavedī who had planned the programme, and killed all the five of them. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 314).

VIŚVĀYU. An eternal Viśvadeva (gods concerned with offering to the Manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

VĪṬĀ. A ball made of wood. The Kaurava boys played with this ball and by accident the Vīṭā fell in a well. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 130, Stanza 17, that the teacher Droṇa recovered it from the well by shooting a number of arrows, one upon the tail of another.

VĪTABHAYA. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was the son of the King Manasvī and father of King Śuṇḍu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

VĪTABHŪTA. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 65, that this asura stays in the palace of Varuṇa praising and worshipping him.

VĪTADHVAJA. A King of the dynasty of Janaka. He was the son of Dharmadhvaja and the brother of Kṛtadhvaja. Vītadhvaja had a son named Khāṇḍikya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VITADRU. A Yādava. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, that Vitadru was one of the seven Kings of the Yadu dynasty.

VĪTAHAVYA. Another name of King Ekavīra, otherwise known as Haihaya. (For further details see under Ekavīra).

VITALA. A part of Pātāla (underworld). (For details see under Pātāla).

VITAṆḌĀVĀDA. When arguments, which do not serve, either to establish one's own points or to cut the points of the opponent, are employed in a debate, it is called Vitaṇḍāvāda. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 4).

VITARKA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the Kuru dynasty, (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 58).

VITASTĀ. A river famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Ṛgveda. Important rivers mentioned in Ṛgveda are, Kubhā, Sindhu, Suvāstu Vitastā, Asiknī, Paruṣṇī, Śatadrū, Sarasvatī and Yamunā. These rivers were more important than the Ganges in those days. Mention is made about the Ganges only once in Ṛgveda. Perhaps the Āryans were not acquainted with the Gangetic basin in those days. The region from the rivers Kubhā to Yamunā was Āryadeśa (the country of the Āryans). The information about this river Vitastā given in Mahābhārata is given below :—

(i) The river Vitastā is the same river as Jhelum in Kashmir. The deity (goddess) of this river stays in the palace of Varuṇa and praises him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 19).

(ii) By worshipping the Devatās and the Manes after taking bath in this river, one could obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Vājapeya. In Kashmir, Takṣaka the King of the Nāgas has a famous palace known as Vitasta. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 39).

(iii) Once four hundred horses with black ears, owned by Brahmins were caught in the current of this river and carried away. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 119, Stanza 8).

(iv) If anybody bathes in the waves of the river Vitastā, with vow and fasts, for seven days he would become as pure as a hermit. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 7).

(v) Once Pārvatī made a speech before Śiva on the duties of women, after receiving advice from rivers. The river Vitastā was one of the rivers which advised Pārvatī. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 18).

VITATHA. Another name of hermit Dīrghatamas. This Vitatha was the foster-son of Bharata. (For further details see under Bharata I and Dīrghatamas).

VITATYA. Son of Vihavya, who belonged to the dynasty of Gṛtsamada. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 62, that Vitatya was the father of King Satya.

VĪTI. A fire. It is ordained that the offering (Puroḍāśa) prepared for oblation, should be put in the fire formed by the blending of the fires Gārhapatya and Āhavanīya with Dakṣiṇāgni (a fire). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Stanza 25).

VĪTIHOTRA I. A King in ancient India. Vītihotra was one of the ten sons born to Priyavrata by his wife Barhiṣmatī, the daughter of Viśvakarmā. Agnīdhra, Idhmajihva, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Hiraṇyaretas, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi and Kavi were the brothers of Vītihotra. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

VĪTIHOTRA II. The husband of Śabarī in her previous life. (See under Śabarī).

VĪTIHOTRA III. The eldest of the hundred sons of Tālajaṅgha. When Tālajaṅgha was defeated by Paraśurāma, he and his men went to the Himālayas under the leadership of Vītihotra and hid themselves there. They returned when Paraśurāma had gone to Mahendragiri for penance. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 89).

VĪTIHOTRA IV. A Kingdom of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 12, that all the Kṣatriyas of this country were exterminated by Paraśurāma.

VITTADĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 28).

VIVAHA. An air (wind) which blows very speedily. This wind will be transformed to a fierce storm which will cause havoc everywhere. At the time of the great flood this Vivaha will blow away the cloud called Valāhaka in consequence of which destruction and devastation will become rampant on earth. (M.B, Śānti Parva, Chapter 328).

VIVĀHA (MARRIAGE).

1) General information. In ancient India marriage was considered to be a sacrifice performed in accordance with social customs. Marriage was allowed to those who had completed education at the age of sixteen. (Samāvartana). Father or teacher teaches the pupil the Vedas and Vedāṅgas. When the education is completed the teacher or father makes him sit on a seat decorated with flowers, sandalwood etc. and do Godānavrata. Then he is offered Pañcāmṛta (milk, curd, butter, honey and water). This is called Samāvartana. With this his brahmacarya ends, and he is allowed to marry and lead the life of a house-holder.

Marriage is a ceremony with four secondary rites Viz, Kanyādāna, Śacīyāga, Vivāha, Caturthīkarman. If the husband is dead, or lost, or has renounced the world, or has become a eunuch or is expelled from society, the woman is allowed to take another husband. If the husband dies, the wife should be given to the brother of the husband. If there is no brother she could accept anybody whom she likes.

2) Eight kinds of marriages. The woman and man should not be of the same Gotra (family). One could marry a girl who is above seven generations on the paternal line and above five generations on the maternal line. Eight types of marriages allowed in Manusmṛti, Chapter 3, are given below :

(i) Brāhma. A man of good qualities and good family is asked to come and receive the damsel. This is Brāhma. The radiance of this marriage will give the man prosperity.

(ii) Ārṣa. After getting a couple of cows from the bridegroom the bride is given to him.

(iii) Prājāpatya. The virgin is given to the man, who had requested for her hand as a duty.

(iv) Daiva. The virgin is offered to the master who is engaged in performing a sacrifice.

(v) Gāndharva. Marriage between a man and a woman with equal love on either part.

(vi) Āsura. Giving money in return for the damsel and marrying her. This type is mean.

(vii) Rākṣasa. Carrying the damsel away by fight or force.

(viii) Paiśāca. Marrying a damsel when she is sleeping or lying unconscious.

VIVARDHANA. A King in ancient India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 21, that this King was a prominent member of the assembly of Yudhiṣṭhira.

VIVASVĀN I. The Sun.

1) General information. Sūrya (Sun) has a large number of synonyms. But prominence is given to two of them, Mārtaṇḍa and Vivasvān in the Purāṇas. Twelve devas were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi. As these twelve were the sons of Aditi they were called Ādityas. The Dvādaśādityas (the twelve Ādityas) are Viṣṇu, Śakra, Aryaman, Dhātā, Tvaṣṭā, Pūṣā Vivasvān, Savitā, Mitra, Varuṇa, Aṁśu and Bhaga. These twelve Ādityas were, in the previous Manvantara (Age of Manu) of Manu Cākṣuṣa, twelve Devas called the Tuṣitas. When the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara came to an end and the Vaivasvata Manvantara was about to begin, the twelve Tuṣitas met together and after a consultation, they took birth as the sons of Aditi. In this birth they were known by the name Dvādaśādityas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15).

2) The name Mārtaṇḍa. As Aditi was pregnant, Candra went to the hermitage asking for alms. Due to her difficulties of pregnancy Aditi was not in a position to rise up instantly and greet the visitor. Candra thought that it was due to disrespect. So he cursed her. Let the child in your womb die." At this Aditi became miserable. Kaśyapa saw her crying incessantly and asked for the cause. Aditi told him all that had happened. Kaśyapa blessed her and said that the infant would not die. Thus the child which was lying dead in the womb came to life again. As the 'aṇḍa' (egg-embryo) of Vivasvān went mṛta (died) by the curse of Candra, he came to be called Mārtaṇḍa (he who has aṇḍa which has become mṛta). When the child was born he was given the name Vivasvān.

3) Family life. Vivasvān married Saṁjñā, the daughter of Viśvakarmā. The first child born to Vivasvān by Saṁjñā was Vaivasvata Manu. The Sūrya (Solar) dynasty begins from this Vaivasvata Manu. Saṁjñā again gave birth to two children Yama and Yamī. Then finding it difficult to bear the fierce brightness of the sun Saṁjñā gave her place to her maid Chāyā otherwise called Savarṇā, and went to the house of her father. Viśvakarmā did not like this action on the part of his daughter. So Saṁjñā took the form of a mare and went to the pastures of North Kuru. Thinking Chāyā to be his wife Saṁjñā, Vivasvān went to bed with her. She conceived and gave birth to two sons and a daughter. The sons were named Sāvarṇi and Śani and the daughter was named Tapatī. Chāyā loved her own children more. The children of Saṁjñā were grieved at this. Yama once lifted his leg to kick her. "Let that leg be broken." Chāyā cursed him. The miserable Yama ran to his father and said. "Father, this mother hates us and loves Sāvarṇi and Śani more. It is true that I lifted up my leg. But my leg did not touch mother's head. Father, I request you to pardon the wrong I have done because of my ignorance. Have pity on me and tell me how to save my leg from breaking." Vivasvān said to Yama that his leg would not be broken, but because of the curse worms would bite his leg. Vivasvān understood that Chāyā was not the real mother. He went to Viśvakarmā. Viśvakarmā put Vivasvān on his turning machine and by turning lessened his brightness. Vivasvān who was made more handsome by turning, found out his wife Saṁjñā, and approached her. But thinking him to be somebody else she moved away from him. In the meanwhile two male persons were born from the nostrils of Saṁjñā. There is another story that these two persons were the Aśvinidevas. Vivasvān and Saṁjñā came home. As a retribution for the wrong he had done, Yama ruled over his subjects justly and earned the name Dharmarāja. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 21; Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Chapter 47; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 171).

4) Some details about Vivasvān. (i) In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3, the 108 names of Vivasvān are given.

(ii) Vivasvān lived in this world and defeated all his enemies. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 315, Stanza 19).

(iii) Vivasvān performed sacrifice in strict accordance with the instructions given in the Vedas and gave as Dakṣiṇā (gift) to the priest, Prajāpati Kaśyapa, the southern quarter. From that day onwards the south got the name Dakṣiṇadiśā. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 109, Stanza 1).

(iv) In days of yore Mahāviṣṇu advised Vivasvān "Anaśvaratākarma-yoga". Vivasvān advised this art to his son Vaivasvata Manu. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 28, Stanza 1).

(v) Vivasvān is included among the twentyeight Prajāpatis. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 334, Stanza 36).

(vi) He learned from Mahāviṣṇu Sātvatadharma and taught his son Vaivasvata Manu the same in Tretāyuga. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 348, Stanza 50).

(vii) The Aśvinikumāras, Nāsatya and Dasra, are the sons of Vivasvān. They were born through the nose of his wife Saṁjñā (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 17).

VIVASVĀN II. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105, Stanza 12, that this asura was killed by Garuḍa.

VIVASVĀN III. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the Manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 31).

VIVASVĀN IV. The first human being who performed sacrifice. This Vivasvān is considered to be the father of Manu and Yama. (Ṛgveda 8. 52; 10; 14, 16). In Taittirīyasaṁhitā, mention is made that people of the earth are the children of this Vivasvān. (Taittirīya Saṁhitā, 6.5. 6).

VIVIDA. An asura who was the follower of Kaṁsa. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, that the asuras Pralambaka, Cāṇūra, Tṛṇāvarta, Muṣṭika, Ariṣṭaka, Keśī, Dhenuka, Agha, Vivida and some others had been the followers of Kaṁsa who caused havoc among the people.

VIVIKTA. A king of Kuśadvīpa. He was the son of Hiraṇyaretas. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

VIVIṀŚA. The son of king Viṁśa of the Solar dynasty. Viṁśa had fifteen sons beginning with Khanīnetra. (M.B. Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 4).

VIVIṀŚATI. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. The following information about him is given in Mahābhārata.

(i) This prince was present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī.

(ii) He was caught hold of and bound by the Gandharvas in Dvaitavana (a forest). (See under Ghoṣayātrā).

(iii) In the battle between the Virāṭas and the Kauravas following the stealing of cows, this Viviṁśati, was defeated by Arjuna. He ran away from the battle-field. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 43).

(iv) In the battle of Bhārata, Viviṁśati confronted Bhīmasena and Sutasoma and was killed. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 93).

VIVINDHYA. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata Vana Parva, Ch. 16, Stanza 22, that this asura fought with Cārudeṣṇa, the son of Rukmiṇi and was killed.

VIVITSU. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 12).

VIYAMA. One of the three sons of the hermit Śataśṛṅga. He killed Sudeva, the commander of the army of Ambarīṣa and he also was killed in a battle. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 98).

VIYATI. A son of Nahuṣa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

VRAJA. A king born in the family of Manu Svāyambhuva. He was the son of Havirdhāna. Six sons named Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina, were born to Havirdhāna by his wife Dhiṣaṇā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

VRAJANA. A king born to emperor Ajamīḍha by his wife Keśinī. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 31, that he was the brother of Jahnu and Rūpiṇa.

VRAJĪRAVĀN. (VṚJINAVĀN). A king of the Yadu-clan. He was the son of Kroṣṭu and father of Kuśaṅku (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VRATA. Controls ordained by Vedic Saṁhitās are called Vratas. It is known as tapas (penance) also. Vratas are Avadama etc. When it involves mortifications of the body (tapas) it is called tapas or penance. Controlling the organs of sense is called niyama (control). Vrata, fast and restraining or control are always good. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 175).

VṚDDHAGĀRGYA. An ancient hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 77, that this hermit had conversed with the Manes about offerings made to them.

VṚDDHAKANYĀ. Daughter of the hermit named Kuṇigarga. (For further details see under Kuṇigarga).

VṚDDHAKṢATRA I. The father of Jayadratha, the king of Sindhu. (See under Jayadratha I).

VṚDDHAKṢATRA II. A king born in the Puru dynasty. He favoured the Pāṇḍavas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 200, Stanza 73, that in the Bhārata battle, Aśvatthāmā killed him.

VṚDDHAKṢATRA III. A king of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. This king took the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the Bhārata battle and was killed by Bālhīka. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 24, Stanza. 49).

VṚDDHAKṢEMA. The king of the country Trigarta. He was the father of Suśarmā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 9).

VṚDDHAŚARMĀ. One of the five sons, born to the king Āyus by his wife Svarbhānū. The remaining four sons were Nahuṣa, Raji, Gaya and Anenas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 25).

VṚDDHIKĀ. A kind of goblin. It is mentioned in Mahā-Bhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 16, that once the semen of Śiva fell scattered over the trees and that these goblins were born from that. Human flesh is the food of these goblins. It is said those who want children need only worship these Vṛddhikās.

VRĪHIDRAUṆIKA PARVA. A sub-section of Vana Parva, comprising Chapters 259 to 261.

VṚJA. A hermit who was born in the family of emperor Pṛthu. Antardhāna and Vādī were the two sons of Pṛthu. A son named Havirdhāna was born to Antardhāna by his wife Śikhaṇḍinī. Dhiṣaṇā who was born in the family of Agni, became the wife of Havirdhāna. Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vṛja and Ajina were the six sons of Havirdhāna by Dhiṣaṇā. Of these, Prācīnabarhis became a great Prajāpati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 14).

VṚJINĪVĀN. The son of Kroṣṭā who was born in the family of Manu. He was the father of hermit Uṣaṅgu (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Stanza 23).

VṚKA I. A son born to Dhṛṣṭaketu, the king of Kekaya by his wife Dūrvā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VṚKA II. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. born by his wife Mitravindā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VṚKA III. An asura. This asura wanted to bring the Devas under his control. "How to achieve it? The only way is to please one of the three god-heads." The asura saw Nārada and asked him which of the three god-heads could easily be pleased. Nārada replied that it was Śiva. Vṛka resolved to please Śiva and began to do penance. He cut each of his organs and offered it in the fire as oblation. At last when Vṛkāsura was beginning to cut his head to offer it in fire, Śiva made his appearance, and asked him what his wish was. The boon he requested for, was that any one whose head he touched with his finger should die instantly. Śiva granted that boon.

The asura decided to try the boon, on the giver himself first. Terrified at this, Śiva began to run. The asura chased him. At last Śiva sought protection from Viṣṇu. Assuming the form of a boy, Mahāviṣṇu stood on the way and stopped Vṛkāsura, who was running after Śiva. The boy asked him why he was running. The asura told the boy everything. Then the boy laughed and said "Oh ! Asura ! What Śiva said was a lie. He has no divine power now. He was making fun of you. Not an ant would die by the touch of your fingers. You just try on your head and see for yourself." Hearing this the asura became dejected. He thought what the boy said was true. The poor creature touched his own head with his finger. The moment he touched his head, he fell down dead. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10). This story has similarity with that of Bhasmāsura. (See under Bhasmāsura).

VṚKA IV. A king. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 10, that this king had been present at the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Draupadī. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 16, that this king was killed by a mountain King in the battle of Bhārata.

VṚKA V. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by the teacher Droṇa in the battle of Bhārata. (M. B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 16).

VṚKA VI. An ancient King who was a pure vegetarian. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 63).

VṚKA VII. One of the sons born to Śūra by his wife Māriṣā. Vṛka married Dūrvākṣī. Two sons named Takṣa and Puṣkara were born to the couple. (Bhāgavata Skandha 9).

VṚKALA. A grandson of Dhruva who was the son of Uttānapāda. Two sons named Śiṣṭi and Bhavya were born to Dhruva by his wife Śambhū. Succhāyā, the wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to five sinless sons named Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 13).

VṚKATEJAS. A brother of Vṛkala. (See under Vṛkala).

VṚKṢA (S). (TREES). It is stated in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14, Stanza 29, as follows about the origin of Vṛkṣas (trees).

Prajāpati Kaśyapa married Analā, the daughter of Dakṣa. Trees yielding good fruits were given birth to by Analā.

VṚKṢAPRATIṢṬHĀ. The ancient Indians believed that consecration of Trees and gardens (parks) were means of remission of sins and attainment of heaven. As the consecration of trees is a divine ritual it has to be performed as ordained in the Vedas. The rites are given below:

As the first item of the consecration ceremony of a tree, besmear it with all kinds of medicinal herbs, and adorn it with flour and flowergarlands and make it wear good clothes. Then make on it perforations for the ears with golden needle, and anoint ointment for eyes with golden wire. Place on the dais prepared at the foot of each tree, seven fruits and pots (Kalaśas) and make invocations. After this, offerings and sacrifices to Indra and the other gods should be given. Again invocation should be made with burnt offerings to Vanaspati. From the middle of the trees alms of cows should be given. Brahmins should bathe the trees with pots placed on the dais, reciting spells and incantations of anointment, and of Ṛg, Yajur and Sāma Vedas along with instrumental music. The owner of the trees should be given bathing water by himself. Then the owner should give cows, lands, ornaments and clothes as gift.

After having done so much, food with milk should be given for four days and burnt offerings should be made with gingelly etc. and buṭea. The gift to the priest should be double the gifts given to others. (Agni Purāṇa Chapter 70).

VṚKṢAVĀSĪ. A Yakṣa. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11, that this Yakṣa lives in the palace of Kubera.

VṚKṢĀYURVEDA. The name Vṛkṣāyurveda is used for the conventional rules about planting trees near dwelling places. According to Vṛkṣāyurveda it is good to plant Itti (wave-leafed fig-tree) on the North side of the house. Ficus Indica (banyan) should be plantd on the east. Mango tree on the south and Ficus Religiosa (banyan) on the west of the house. Thorny trees should grow up by themselves on the south side of the house. Garden should be close to the house. Svātī, Hasta, Rohiṇī, Śravaṇa and Mūla are considered to be good stars for planting trees. Stars good for taking trees, across river or in vehicle and to take down into ponds, are Hasta, Maghā, Ārdrā, Aśvinī, Puṣyam and Jyeṣṭhā. The stars mentioned above are good for planting Neem tree, Jonesia Asoca, Calophyllum, Mimosasirisha, Acacia Priyaṅgu, Syzygium, Mimusops and pomegranate tree. The distance between trees should be twenty rods. This distance is the best. Sixteen rods is medium. But it should never be less than twelve rods. If the tree does not bear fruit, the stem should be examined by cutting with a knife. Then mix powdered vermifuge seeds with ghee and smear it on the cut. Then water the tree. If fruits are destroyed before they ripen, mix the powders of horse-gram, black-gram, green-gram, barley and sesam with ghee and smear the tree and water it. Watering the tree with water and ghee will make the tree flower and yield fruits quickly. Mix powdered dung of sheep, powdered Barley, sesam, and cow's flesh with water and keep it for seven days. Then water the tree with this water. This will make any tree yield more fruits and flowers. Watering the trees with fish-water will make them yield fruits more quickly. Mixture of Vermifuge seed, fish and rice is a good manure. This manure is a good remedy for all diseases of trees. (Agni Purāṇa Chapter 281).

VṚNDĀ I. Wife of the asura named Jalandhara. (See under Māyāśiva).

VṚNDĀ II. See under Svarṇā.

VṚNDĀRAKA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 33, that he was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata.

VṚNDĀRAKA II. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. Abhimanyu killed this warrior. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 12).

VṚṢA I. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

VṚṢA II. An asura (demon). He is included among those who ruled over this earth in days of old. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 51).

VṚṢA III. A King of the family of Bharata who was the son of Śakuntalā. It is stated that he had a brother called Durmarṣaṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VṚṢA IV. An incarnation of Śiva in the form of an ox. The following is a story that occurs in Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudasaṁhitā, about this incarnation.

When the Devas and the Asuras united together and churned the sea of milk, ever so many noble objects rose up to the surface of the sea. Several beautiful damsels also came up. Viṣṇu grew amorous of them and thus thousands of sons were born by them. These sons who were born in the Pātāla (Nether world), by and by, came up and began to do harm to the dwellers of the earth. At this time Śiva took the incarnation in the form of an ox to study the situation properly. In this disguise Śiva entered Pātāla and took by stealth the Sudarśana (the weapon of Viṣṇu) and drove him to heaven. When Viṣṇu had gone from Pātāla, he had advised his sons to stay in Pātāla. Vṛṣa who came to know of this, cursed them:— "Any man, other than the peaceful hermits and Dānavas (asuras) who are born from my portion, who enters Pātāla shall die." From that day onwards, the world of Pātāla became a forbidden place for men.

VṚṢA V. One of the sons of Kārtavīryārjuna. It is mentioned in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, that this prince escaped from the Kṣatriya extermination of Paraśurāma.

VṚṢĀ. An Indian river famous in the Purāṇas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 35).

VṚṢABHA I. Son of Subala, the King of Gāndhāra. He was the brother of Śakuni. In the battle of Bhārata, this Vṛṣabha, with his five brothers, attacked Irāvān, who killed the five brothers. Vṛṣabha alone escaped death. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 33).

VṚṢABHA II. An asura. Ariṣṭa was another name of this asura (See under Ariṣṭa).

VṚṢABHA III. A Yādava King who was the son of Anamitra. This Vṛṣabha married Jayantī, the daughter of the King of Kāśī. (Matsya Purāṇa, 45, 25-26).

VṚṢABHA IV. A mountain near Girivraja, the capital city of Magadha. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 2).

VṚṢABHĀNU. A King. When Vṛṣabhānu was cleaning the ground for performing sacrifice, once, he got a girl named Rādhā. He brought her up as his own daughter (Padma: Brahma: 7). In Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, Vṛṣabhānu is mentioned as the father of Rādhā.

VṚṢABHEKṢAṆA. Another name of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 7).

VṚṢADAṀŚA. A mountain near the Mandara mountain. Arjuna once dreamt that he travelled to the world of Śiva with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It is mentioned in M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 33, that in this dream travel they visited this mountain Vṛṣadaṁśa also.

VṚṢADARBHA I.

1) General information. An ancient saintly King in Bhārata. This King Vṛṣadarbha and another King named Seduka were righteous as well as experts in wielding main and subordinate weapons. After completing the education of Vedas, a brahmin once approached King Seduka and begged as alms some horses for giving gift to his teacher. The Brahmin said "It is my wish that you will give me these horses as alms." Seduka said that he had not enough wealth or horses to give the teacher's gift. Seduka sent the Brahmin to Vṛṣadarbha. The Brahmin went to Vṛṣadarbha and begged as alms a thousand horses. The King whipped the Brahmin. He asked the King why he was punished as he had done no wrong. The King asked the Brahmin who was beginning to curse. Ho. Brahmin ! Whom are you about to curse? Him who has not given you alms or another Brahmin? The Brahmin said. "O, King I am sent here by Seduka. I begged as he had instructed."

The King said. "This evening I shall give you all the tax-collection of this day. You who have been whipped ought not to be sent emptyhanded." Accordingly the whole of the taxcollection of that day was given to the Brahmin. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 196).

2) Other details.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 29, that Vṛṣadarbha stays in the palace of Yama glorifying him.

(ii) When he was reigning, he made a law that all his subjects should give gold and silver as alms to Brahmins (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 3).

VṚṢADARBHA II. Another name of Uśīnara the King of Kāśī. (See under Uśīnara).

VṚṢĀDARBHI I. A King of Kāśī. Vṛṣādarbhi who was the son of Vṛṣadarbha, was known by the name Yuvanāśva also. He gave as alms, various kinds of jewels, women, beautiful houses etc. and entered heaven. (M.B Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Stanza 24).

VṚṢĀDARBHI II. A famous son of Śibi. The following is a story given in Mahābhārata about this Vṛṣādarbhi.

Once the seven hermits started for going round the earth. At this time Vṛṣādarbhi had been performing a sacrifice. Vṛṣādarbhi invoked the seven hermits and gave them his son as a gift. The child died before long. As famine was prevailing everywhere the hermits were weak and worn out by hunger. They wished to eat the flesh of the child. Vṛṣādarbhi tried to dissuade the hermits from this beastly action in vain. At last the angry King created a wicked fairy to kill the hermits. Though the fairy attacked the hermits, Indra, who had lived with the seven hermits killed the fairy.

Vṛṣādarbhi was not at all behind his father Śibi in liberality. There are various stories in Mahābhārata to illustrate this.

VṚṢADARPA. A son of emperor Śibi. He had three brothers named Bhadra, Suvīra and Kekaya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VṚṢADHVAJA I. A King born in the line of Pravīra. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 16).

VṚṢADHVAJA II. See under Sītā, Para 1.

VṚṢĀGIR. A royal hermit spoken of in Ṛgveda. Ṛjrāśva was the son of this hermit. (See under Ṛjrāśva).

VṚṢAKA I. Son of Subala the King of Gāndhāra. The following information about him is taken from Mahābhārata.

(i) He was present at the Svayaṁvara marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 5). He was present at the Rājasūya sacrifice (royal consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 7).

(ii) He was a prominent archer of the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 168, Stanza 1).

(iii) In the battle of Bhārata this Vṛṣaka was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 2).

(iv) Vṛṣaka also was there among those brave men of the Kuru family who appeared on the surface of the Gangetic water by the invocation of Vyāsa. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 12).

VṚṢAKA II. A Kaliṅga prince. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 33, that he also was killed in the battle of Bhārata.

VṚṢĀKAPI I. One of the eleven Rudras. The eleven Rudras are Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapardī, Raivata, Mṛgavyādha, Sarpa and Kapālī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18). (See under Ekādaśa rudras).

VṚṢĀKAPI II. Another name of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 342).

VṚṢĀKAPI III. A hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 23, that with so many other hermits, he also attended the sacrifice performed by the gods.

VṚṢAKETU. One of the sons of Karṇa. As he was following the sacrificial horse of Yudhiṣṭhira as its protector, he was killed by Babhruvāhana. (Jaimini Bhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, 30).

VṚṢAKRĀTHA. A warrior on the side of the Kauravas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 33, that this warrior stood in the heart of the Garuḍa-disposition of the army formed by Droṇa.

VṚṢALĀKṢA. A King born in the line of Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta. He was the son of Caturaṅga and the grandson of Romapāda. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VṚṢĀMITRA. A hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 24, that this hermit honoured and loved Yudhiṣṭhira.

VṚṢAṆAŚVA. A King praised in Ṛgveda. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 51, that once Indra took birth as the daughter of this King under the name Menā.

VṚṢĀṆḌA. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 53, that this asura had once ruled over the earth and that because of the attacks of Kāla, he had to leave the earth.

VṚṢAṄKU. An ancient hermit. When Śrī Rāma returned from his forest life, the hermits such as Vṛṣaṅku, Kaviṣa, Dhaumya, Raudreya, Nārada, Vāmadeva, Saurabhi, Aṣṭāvakra, Śrīśuka, Bhṛgu, Lomaśa and Maudgala, from the west came and bowed before him. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

VṚṢAPARVĀ I. A noble Asura. The following information about him is taken from Mahābhārata.

(i) Vṛṣaparvā was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 24).

(ii) He took rebirth in the earth as King Dīrghaprajña. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 67, Stanza 15).

(iii) He had a daughter named Śarmiṣṭhā. (See under Devayānī).

VṚṢAPARVĀ II. An ancient royal hermit. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 15, that an ethereal voice was heard by the Pāṇḍavas, who were living in the forest, that they should visit this royal hermit. Accordingly the Pāṇḍavas visited the hermit and he received them cordially. This King rendered them various helps such as giving them directions for going through the forests. It is stated in Vana Parva, Chapter 177, that on the return journey also the Pāṇḍavas entered the hermitage of this hermit and received hospitality.

VṚṢAPRASTHAGIRI. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 3, that the Pāṇḍavas visited this holy place during their life in the forest.

VṚṢASENA I. A son of Karṇa. The following information is taken from Mahābhārata about him.

(i) Vṛṣasena was a famous warrior in the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 23).

(ii) In the Bhārata-battle he confronted the prominent archers such as Śatānīka, Pāṇḍya, Abhimanyu, Arjuna, Drupada, Sātyaki, Nakula and others. (M.B. Droṇa Parva).

(iii) In the fight with Arjuna, he was killed. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 35).

(iv) Among the brave souls of the Kurus who were invoked to the surface of the river Gaṅgā by Vyāsa, Vṛṣasena also was present. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 10).

VṚṢASENA II. A King who shines in the council of Yama. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 13, that this King glorifies Yama.

VṚṢASENA III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 23, about a proud and honoured Vṛṣasena who attended the Rājasūya (sacrifice of royal consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira.

VṚṢṆI. A famous King of the Yadu dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order : Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas - Āyus - Nahuṣa- Yayāti - Yadu - Sahasrajit - Śatajit - Hehaya - Dharma- Kuṇi- Bhadrasena-Dhanaka-Kṛtavīrya-Kārtavīryārjuna-Madhu-Vṛṣṇi.

2) Other details.

(i) The birth of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was in the family of Vṛṣṇi. (See the genealogy of Śrī Kṛṣṇa).

(ii) The line of Kings beginning with Vṛṣṇi is called the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Stanza 18).

(iii) Thinking that the jewel Syamantaka had been stolen by Kṛṣṇa himself, Vṛṣṇi took a hostile mentality towards Kṛṣṇa. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3 : 71 : 1).

(iv) Vṛṣṇi had two wives named Gāndhārī and Mādrī. Five sons were born to him by Mādrī. (Vāyu : 94 : 14; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 211; 1-2; 5 : 8).

VṚTRA (VṚTRĀSURA). A mighty and fierce asura.

1) Reason for his birth. Vṛtra was the rebirth of emperor Citraketu. Citraketu and his wife Kṛtadyuti prayed to Aṅgiras, as a result of which a son was born to them. That son died in his infancy. But Aṅgiras brought him to life again. Brahmā and Nārada taught Citraketu theosophy. Citraketu sat in contemplation for eight days and changing himself to a Gandharva he flew through the sky. As he was flying, he saw Pārvatī sitting on the thigh of Śiva and laughed aloud. Knowing this Pārvatī cursed him to become an asura. Vṛtrāsura was the rebirth of the emperor according to this curse. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

2) Birth. Two stories are mentioned about the birth of Vṛtrāsura. One story is that Kaśyapa created him from fire. The other story is that Vṛtra was the son of Tvaṣṭā. Both are given below :

(i) Hiraṇyakaśipu was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa, by his wife Danu. Mahāviṣṇu killed him on being requested by the Devas. Danu was grieved at the death of her son. So Kaśyapa gave her another son. He was Vala or Bala. Indra killed him with his weapon, the thunderbolt. Kaśyapa got angry and plucking a hair from his matted hair, made a burnt offering of it, saying "Let a son who would be the killer of Indra be born." Immediately a huge giant, as black as antimony with yellow eyes was born from the fire. That asura, clad in the hide of antelope with sword in hand, opening his mouth, from which two huge tusks protruded, very wide, and shining with radiance cried out in a voice of thunder, "Oh ! Sage ! Order me, what am I to do ?"

Kaśyapa ordered him to kill Indra. He named the monster Vṛtra. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 23).

(ii) It was Prajāpati Tvaṣṭā who created Vṛtra to kill Indra. He had sufficient reasons for it. From the very beginning Indra and Tvaṣṭā were enemies. Tvaṣṭā begot a son named Triśiras otherwise called Viśvarūpa, for the purpose of killing Indra. This Viśvarūpa had three heads. One was meant for drinking Surā (a liquor), the second for drinking Soma (liquor) and the third for eating food. Viśvarūpa was a Brāhmaṇa. Still, as his mother was an asura, he loved the asuras and mingled with them. Indra knew about the behaviour of Viśvarūpa. He concluded that it was blasphemy and wickedness. Indra who was afraid of Viśvarūpa, got angry and cut off his heads. Of the heads of Viśvarūpa, that which drank Soma became a bird called Kapiñjala, that which drank Surā became a bird called Kalapiṅga, and that which ate food became the bird Tittiri (partridge). Brahmahatyā (the sin of killing Brahmin) took shape and went against Indra. Though Indra could have destroyed it, he joined his hands and received it. At the end of the year he cut it into four pieces and divided them among earth, water, tree and woman. The earth received it with the boon that depressions will be filled. That sin is now seen as salt beds. Water got it with the boon, "Will be swollen when joined". That sin is foam and bubbles. The tree got it with the boon, "Will not die even if cut into pieces". That sin is the sap of the tree. Women got it with the boon, "Amour will last without break". That sin is the menstruation of women.

When Tvaṣṭā heard that his righteous son was killed by Indra unreasonably, he became angry and began to make burnt offerings with spells and incantations of Atharvaveda. This offering continued for eight days. On the eighth day at night, an extremely bright male person arose from the fire pit. He rose higher and higher as the flame of fire. Then that figure of power asked Tvaṣṭā. "Father ! what is my name ? What have I to do for you ? What is the reason for your grief ?" He said that he was prepared to drink up the ocean dry or smash the mountains, or prevent the sun and the moon from moving or any such thing for the sake of his father. The father ordered him to kill Indra. From that day onwards Vṛtra got ready to kill Indra. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

3) The slaughter of Vṛtrāsura. Hearing about the prowess, strength, and the martial radiance of Vṛtrāsura, Indra grew afraid of him and began to think about means and ways to kill him. Indra called the Saptarṣis (seven hermits) and sent them to Vṛtra. His intention was to make a treaty. The seven hermits approached Vṛtra and requested him to make a treaty with Indra, and told him that Indra was prepared to give half of the position of Indra.

Vṛtra :—Look hermits ! If Indra honestly desires to be in peace with me, I have no objection. But what is the surety that Indra will not deceive me ?

Hermits :—If Indra proves to be false and deliberately deceives you, he has agreed to bear the sin of Brahmahatyā incurred, by himself.

Vṛtra agreed to make a treaty on this condition. The hermits took Vṛtra to the palace of Indra. Seeing Vṛtrāsura who was coming to be friends with him Indra rose from his royal chair and offered half of it to Vṛtra. Both embraced each other and vowed that they would be brothers born from the same womb.

Thus having engaged Vṛtra in a treaty deceitfully, Indra waited for an opportunity to kill Vṛtra. Once Indra sent Rambhā to infatuate Vṛtra. "Look, beautiful girl ! Make Vṛtra senseless somehow so that I may kill him." Hearing this, with a beautiful laugh, Rambhā went with her maids to the Park Nandana and waited for Vṛtrāsura. At this time Vṛtra, with some Dānava friends, came to the park Nandana for entertainment. Indra walked beside watching for the opportunity to kill him. Without fearing any danger from Indra, Vṛtra walked through the park, seeing the celestial maids singing and dancing and playing various games in the garden, and they reached a corner where Rambhā had been singing sweet songs and swinging with her maids. This sight made Vṛtra amorous. He approached Rambhā and prayed to her to become his wife. Under that sandalwood tree Rambhā asked him. "Oh handsome youth ! I am Rambhā. I came here with my maids to play. Who are you, my Lord ?"

Vṛtra : "Beautiful maid ! I am the son of Kaśyapa and the friend of Indra. I enjoy half the position of Indra. I, Vṛtra, have brought the three worlds under my control. I shall be complete in all aspects, if I could marry you."

Rambhā agreed to the marriage on condition that Vṛtra would not gainsay her in anything. They engaged in amorous plays and Rambhā made the Brahmin drink liquor in large quantities and he became unconscious. Indra took this opportunity and sent his thunderbolt which took away the life of Vṛtra. Instantly Indra became affected with sins such as Brahmahatyā etc. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapters 23 and 24).

4) Other details.

(i) Indra washed away the sin of Brahmahatyā incurred by killing Vṛtra, at the place called Karūṣa. (See under Aṅgamalada).

(ii) It was at the time of the killing of Vṛtra by Indra, that Jaṭāyu and Sampāti made bets and flew up to the region of the Sun. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 58, Stanza 4).

(iii) Mention about the conflict between Indra and Vṛtrāsura occurs in various places in the Ṛgveda. Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 80 refers to the battle between Indra and Vṛtra. In many other Sūktas songs about Indra and Vṛtra occur.

(iv) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 33, that Vṛtra was the son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu.

(v) It was Vṛtrāsura who took rebirth later as King Maṇimān. (M.B. Ādi Parva. Chapter 67, Stanza 44).

(vi) The thunderbolt of Indra hit on the head of Vṛtrāsura and was broken into ten big pieces and hundred small pieces. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 50).

(vii) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 48, that Vṛtrāsura was born from the fire of Sorcery and witchcraft of Tvaṣṭā.

(viii) In the fight between Indra and Vṛtra, Indra was swallowed by Vṛtra. But Indra contracted the members of his body and became smaller and smaller and came out of Vṛtra's belly. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 52).

(ix) Once the teacher-priest Śukra asked Vṛtra certain questions to all of which Vṛtra gave proper answers. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 279, Stanza 13).

(x) Vṛtra entered heaven after his death. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 180, Stanza 57).

(xi) Everybody was terrified because the fight of Indra with Vṛtra prolonged without any termination. At last Vṛtra gaped and taking this opportunity, Indra sent his weapon the thunderbolt into the mouth of Vṛtra. Thus Vṛtra met with death. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 15; Udyoga Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 30; Śānti Parva, Chapter 232, Stanza 9; Śānti Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 59).

(xii) In Mahābhārata, the words, Asura, Asuraśreṣṭha, Asurendra, Daitya, Daityapati, Daityendra, Dānava, Dānavendra, Ditija, Surāri, Tvāṣṭar, Viśvātmā etc. are used as synonyms of Vṛtra.

VṚTTA. A nāga (serpent) born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrū. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 10).

VYĀDHI. Vyādhi, Jarā, Śokā, Tṛṣṇā and Krodhā, were the daughters of Mṛtyu (Death). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

VYĀGHRABHAṬA. The minister of King Śrīdatta, described in Kathāsaritsāgara. Besides Vyāghrabhaṭa, he had three more ministers named Mahābala, Upendrabala and Niṣṭhūraka.

VYĀGHRADATTA I. A King who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. This King who was a great fighter on the chariot, fought with the teacher Droṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 32, that he was killed by Droṇa.

VYĀGHRADATTA II. A prince of the country of Magadha. He took the side of the Kauravas and was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Sātyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 31).

VYĀGHRAKETU. A warrior of Pāñcāla, who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. Karṇa wounded him in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 44).

VYĀGHRĀKṢA. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 59).

VYĀGHRAPĀDA. An ancient hermit. He was the father of Upamanyu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 45).

VYĀLĪMUKHA. An asura who fought against Subrahmaṇya. In the fight with Subrahmaṇya this asura was killed. (Skanda Purāṇa, Āsura Kāṇḍa)

VYĀSA. The sage Vyāsa who is the author of the Mahā-Bhārata.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā-Vasiṣṭha-Śakti-Parāśara-Vyāsa.

2) Birth. Vyāsa was born to hermit Parāśara by a fisherwoman named Kālī. His name when he was a child was Kṛṣṇa. As his birth took place in an island (Dvīpa) he got the name Kṛṣṇadvaipāyana. After dividing the Vedas he got the name Vedavyāsa. He is the composer of Mahābhārata, one of the greatest books in world-literature. The births of great men, generally will be wonderful. Behind the birth of Vyāsa also there is a wonderful story.

As has already been mentioned, Kālī, a fisherwoman was the mother of Vyāsa. There is a story about this Kālī also. When king Vasu of Cedi went to the forest for hunting, he saw the coition of animals and he had seminal discharge. The king sent that semen to his queen. But on the way it fell in the river Kālindī and was eaten by a fish. This fish was a celestial maid named Adrikā transformed to fish by a curse. The fish conceived and got into the net of a fisherman, who lived on the banks of Kālindī. When this fish was cut open a male and a female infant were seen inside. The male child was given to the king himself. The fisherman brought up the girl naming her Kālī. As the girl had the gandha (smell) of matsya (fish), she got the name 'Matsya-gandhā', also. This fisherman was also a ferryman. Kālī used to help her father in ferrying people across the river Kālindī. She grew up and became a young woman.

Once the hermit Parāśara came by that way to go to the other side of the river. At that time, the fisherman who has been taking people across the river, was sitting on the bank of the river and having his meals. As soon as Parāśara came, the innocent fisherman—the foster-father of Matsyagandhā—called her, who was standing close by and asked her to take the hermit across the river. The hermit got into the boat. Matsyagandhā began to row the boat. The beauty of the damsel sitting in front of him and the little waves of the river, combined together had the effect of arousing passion in the hermit. He became sexually excited and sat close to her. Discerning his intention she moved away from him and prayed to him humbly not to violate her chastity. She repeated her prayer. The hermit Parāśara created an artificial fog around the boat. The smell of fish was gone from her and the fragrance of Musk took its place. The hermit created an artificial island in the middle of the river. They got down on the island and acted a love drama. She became pregnant. Parāśara said to her. "Beautiful girl! Even after your confinement you shall remain a virgin. A son, who will be a portion of Viṣṇu, a man of purity, famous throughout the three worlds, highly learned, the teacher-priest of the whole world, shall be born to you. He will divide the Vedas and will be exalted by the people of the world."

After this the great hermit took his bath in Yamunā and went away. The pregnancy of Kālī was completed instantly and she gave birth to a very handsome boy in that island of Yamunā. As soon as he was born, he grew up and became a hermit radiant with devotion and assuming a vow of purity and abstinence he said to his mother. "Mother! You can go anywhere, as you please. You need have no worry on my account. I am about to go for penance. When anything unpleasant happens to you, just think of me. The moment you wish to see me, I will be there by you. I wish you a happy life. I am going." Saying thus the brave boy walked away. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 2; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapters 60 to 63).

3) Spiritual life.

i) Introduction. Two sides, the spiritual as well as the material, are seen in the life of Vyāsa. It was after the marriage of Śantanu, a king of the Lunar dynasty, with his mother Kālī, otherwise known as Satyavatī, that Vyāsa came into contact with Hastināpura. Participating in all the vicissitudes of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas was the worldly side of the life of Vyāsa. But the major part of his life was spent in living as a hermit in his hermitage in the forest with a large group of disciples; teaching them the Vedas. A small description of that spiritual life is given below :

ii) In the forest. We do not see Kṛṣṇadvaipāyana, who had grown up to a youth at the time of his birth, for many years after his departure, bidding adieu to his mother. He might have been living with hermits in the forests, learning Vedas from them. After this he appears on the banks of river Sarasvatī as a teacher and Priest. As he was doing penance there, he saw two sparrows, legs and beaks red, without even down feathers, crying for food, and the parent birds, with the utmost care and tenderness feeding them. They flew about here and there and gathered food and came back quickly. Because of joy at the sight of their parents, the little ones opened their ruby-red mouths with cries and throbbing. They kissed the young ones and fed them. The young sparrows hid under the wings of their father and mother and enjoyed the surroundings by thrusting out their heads and looking on all sides.

iii) Birth of son. Seeing this, the paternity instinct in him was aroused. He understood that love of children was merely for the sake of love, that this love was pure and simple. Moreover there is the maxim that a man without a son has no right to aspire for heaven. Sad and silent, thinking of these things he walked on unwillingly and reached the vicinity of the Himālayas. Still, he was doubtful. He began to consider about the deity, before whom he had to do penance for the fulfilment of his wish. He could not decide. As he was sitting in thought, Nārada came there. From the talk of Vyāsa, Nārada knew that childlessness was the cause of his sorrow. Nārada advised him that for the attainment of Puruṣārthas (objects of life) penance was to be done before Devī. Accepting that advice, Vyāsa went to a place near Mahāmeru to do penance.

When Vyāsa began penance, the celestial maids also commenced their work of hindering the penance. It was Ghṛtācī who confronted Vyāsa. She took the form of a parrot of five colours and flew in front of Vyāsa. The hermit was excited at the beauty of Ghṛtācī and sat forgetting himself. As he sat there thinking of the infatuating beauty of the parrot, seminal discharge occurred to him. He became a slave to this infatuation, when he was engaged in making fire by attrition. In this amorous state of mind he was quite unaware of the seminal discharge or its falling on the pieces of wood used for attrition. He continued attrition. Then a very bright, divine person appeared from the pieces of wood. At the birth of a person, without attachment to a womb, all the worlds were delighted. The hide of black antelope, water pot, hermit's rod etc. fell from the sky. Birth rituals and ceremonies, according to the custom, were conducted by Vyāsa. As he was born from the semen discharged at the sight of the Śuka (parrot) the infant was named Śuka. As soon as he was born Śuka began to grow by divine power and shortly became a boy of shining radiance. After investiture with the Brahma-string, the boy was sent for education to the hermitage of Bṛhaspati, the teacher of the devas. Śuka completed his education with Bṛhaspati and having performed Samāvarta and offering of gift to the teacher, he returned home to his father.

iv) Disciples. Śuka commenced advanced study under his father Vyāsa. Besides Śuka, Vyāsa had disciples such as Vaiśampāyana, Sūta, Paila, Jaimini and others also, living with him. The hermitage of Vyāsa soon grew up to be a great educational institution, with plenty of disciples.

v) Separation of son. In the meanwhile Śuka married and lived the life of a householder in the hermitage of his father, for a time. Then forsaking his family and his father, Śuka went to the peak of Kailāsa and began to do penance meditating on Śiva. At last he became a divine person who had obtained complete attainments, and breaking the top of the peak open, he rose up into the sky and shone there as a second Sun. The devas who saw Śuka rising up by breaking the peak of Kailāsa and staying up in the sky, praised him.

This untimely separation of his son had undermined the firmness of the mind of Vyāsa. Filled with grief, he left his hermitage and wandered here and there calling out his son by name. He could not find his son. At last he reached the peak of Kailāsa where his son had been doing penance. Standing there he called aloud his son by name cryingly. Paramaśiva appeared before the lamenting father and consoled him. Thus getting a little bit of peace of mind, Vyāsa returned to his hermitage and lived there. The sorrowing Vyāsa, was made still more sorrowful by the departure of his beloved disciples, Asita, Devala, Vaiśampāyana, Sumantu, Jaimini and others who had been living in the hermitage and who had departed, having finished their education. All the surroundings of the hermitage seemed to him filled with pain. At last he thought about his mother. (Devī Bhāgavata Skandha 1).

4) His terrestrial life.

i) Preface. Within this period many changes had taken place in Hastināpura and the bank of Yamunā. Śantanu the king of the Lunar dynasty had married Gaṅgādevī, who had disappeared after giving the king a son named Devavrata (Bhīṣma). Bhīṣma grew up. Once Śantanu was hunting in the forest when he was attracted by the sweet smell of musk. Tracing the origin of that smell, the king reached the fisherman's hut on the banks of the Yamunā. That smell proceeded from Kastūrigandhā (Satyavatī) the mother of Vyāsa. The king fell in love with her. He returned to the palace, sad and silent. Learning the cause of his father's sadness, Devavrata went to the fisherman's hut and took Satyavatī to the palace to be given to his father. Devavrata had taken a vow that the kingdom would be given to the son born to Satyavatī and that he would remain unmarried, throughout his life. Because he had taken so terrible a vow, Devavrata came to be called Bhīṣma from that day onwards.

Two sons named Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya, were born to Śantanu. Citrāṅgada died when he was young. Vicitravīrya married Ambikā and Ambālikā, daughters of the King of Kāśī. Vicitravīrya also died before any children were born to him. It seemed as if the family was about to become extinct. At this juncture Satyavatī thought about her son Vyāsa.

ii) Vyāsa in Hastināpurī. The mother thought about him, and instantly he reached Hastināpurī. Because of her compulsion, two sons were born, one each to Ambikā and Ambālikā from Vyāsa. The son of Ambikā was Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the son of Ambālikā was Pāṇḍu. Vidura was the son born to Vyāsa by their maid.

iii) Vyāsa and the Kaurava-Pāṇḍavas. From this time onwards we see Vyāsa as the spiritual teacher of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. Behind all the movements of these two families we could see the hand of Vyāsa. Thus though he came to Hastināpurī and gave advice to the members of the family frequently, his main abode was his hermitage. Vyāsa's contact with Hastināpura could be seen up to the Mahāprasthāna (the great departure) of the Pāṇḍavas. In all the administrative affairs up to this period, Vyāsa also had a part. The situations in which Vyāsa had taken part in the life-voyage of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas are given below.

(i) Vyāsa gave the boon that hundred sons would be born to Gāndhārī. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 8).

(ii) Vyāsa cut the mass of flesh given birth to by Gāndhārī into a hundred pieces and kept them in hundred pots. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 17).

(iii) Vyāsa consoled Gāndhārī by telling her that over and above hundred sons a daughter also would be born to her. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 16).

(iv) Vyāsa consoled the Pāṇḍavas who had been living in the forest with their mother Kuntī, after the death of Pāṇḍu their father. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 5).
(v) On another occasion Vyāsa came to the Pāṇḍavas and told them the stories of the previous births of Pāñcālī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 168).
(vi) Vyāsa rendered all possible help to the Pāṇḍavas to marry Pāñcālī. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 195).
(vii) Very often Vyāsa was a member of the council of Dharmaputra. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 11).
(viii) It was Vyāsa who sent Arjuna to the north, Bhīmasena to the east, Sahadeva to the south and Nakula to the west for regional conquest. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Chapter 26).
(ix) Vyāsa engaged himself in making various arrangements in the Rājasūya (sacrifice of royal consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 34).
(x) At the end of the Rājasūya, Vyāsa predicted the future of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 1).
(xi) When the Rājasūya ended, Vyāsa anointed Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 10).
(xii) Vyāsa advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra to prevent Duryodhana from doing injustice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 7 and 8).
(xiii) When the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Dvaitavana (forest) Vyāsa visited them and taught Yudhiṣṭhira the art of Pratismṛti. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 24).
(xiv) He sent Sañjaya to Dhṛtarāṣṭra to tell him about the greatness of Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 11).
(xv) He gave Sañjaya the power of having the eye of a seer penetrating beyond time and space (Divya dṛṣṭi). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 10).
(xvi) Vyāsa consoled Yudhiṣṭhira who was stricken with grief in the course of the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 71, Stanza 23).
(xvii) When Yudhiṣṭhira cried over the death of Ghaṭotkaca in the battle of Bhārata, Vyāsa came to Yudhiṣṭhira and consoled him. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 183, Stanza 58).
(xviii) He talked to Aśvatthāmā about the greatness of Śiva and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 201, Stanza 56).
(xix) When Sātyaki was about to kill Sañjaya, Vyāsa turned him back from the attempt and rescued Sañjaya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 39).
(xx) Vyāsa argued and established that the act of cursing Aśvatthāmā on the part of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was correct. (M.B. Sauptika Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 17).
(xxi) Vyāsa prevented Gāndhārī from her intention to curse the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Strī Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 7).
(xxii) When the battle of Bhārata was over, Vyāsa advised Yudhiṣṭhira about matters regarding the administration of the country.
(xxiii) Yudhiṣṭhira felt grieved at the death of relatives and friends in the battle of Bhārata and he decided to commit suicide. But Vyāsa dissuaded him from that attempt. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 28).
(xxiv) Vyāsa walked to the place where Bhīṣma lay on the bed of arrows and visited him. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 5).
(xxv) Vyāsa advised Yudhiṣṭhira to perform Aśvamedha (horse sacrifice). (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 8).
(xxvi) Vyāsa advised the Pāṇḍavas to go to King Marutta for wealth when the battle of Bhārata was over. (Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 20).
(xxvii) Vyāsa consoled Uttarā, who was lamenting over the death of her husband. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 11).
(xxviii) He consoled Arjuna who was crying over the death of his son. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 14).
(xxix) Vyāsa advised Yudhiṣṭhira on the various arrangements which were to be made for the conducting of horse-sacrifice. (Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapters 62 to 72).
(xxx) Vyāsa went to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who had gone to the forest after the Bhārata-battle and pacified him. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 28).
(xxxi) Vyāsa brought the spirits of those who died in the Bhārata-battle, to the surface of the river Ganges, by the power of his penance and Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the others saw them. (See under Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Para 7).
(xxxii) At the instruction of Vyāsa, all the Kṣatriya widows immersed themselves in the river Ganges and everyone of them entered the world of her husband. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 18).
(xxxiii) When the Yadu-clan was completely destroyed, Arjuna went to the hermitage of Vyāsa and talked with him. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 8).
(xxxiv) Vyāsa had been an adviser of King Janamejaya. (See under Janamejaya).
5) Saving a worm. Once a wicked man took rebirth as a worm. This worm was crawling in haste for life in front of a cart coming at great speed. He saved the worm and gave it Brahminhood, and in the next birth it became a Brahmin who lived in peace and comfort. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 117).
6) The literary life of Vyāsa. Towards the close of his life Vyāsa again entered the caves of Himālayas. Vyāsa who had steered through a very wide and rough sea of life, was in a position to understand clearly the various sides of human life. In the mind of that sage, who sat in deep contemplation in the eternally silent caves of the Himālayas, the events of his past life began to line up one after the other. From that inward instigation the Purāṇetihāsas (the Myths and legends) took form. It might have been during this period that Vyāsa divided the Vedas and composed Purāṇas and Upapurāṇas.
One does not go wrong in saying that it was the composing of the Mahābhārata that brought Vyāsa very close to the later generations. The stories of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas, flowed through his mind as a river flows down crushing down the banks on either side. A scribe was necessary to take them down in the form of verses. Vyāsa informed Brahmā of this need. Brahmā replied "Gaṇapati is the only person capable of taking down every thing that you sing." Accordingly Vyāsa thought of Gaṇapati, who came to the side of Vyāsa, and he informed Gaṇapati of his need. Gaṇapati said that he was willing to do the work on condition that Vyāsa would go on singing unceasingly, so that he might not have to stop the iron pen. Vyāsa said that while he would be singing the poems without stopping, Gaṇapati should not take down this and that without grasping the meaning. Both agreed to this condition and the composing of the Mahābhārata commenced. Within two years and a half the great poetic work was finished. The great disciples of Vyāsa, such as Vaiśampāyana, Jaimini and such others sang them and learned them by heart and published them in the world. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1).

7) Many Vyāsas. It is stated in the Purāṇas that in every Manu's age, a Vyāsa will be born. It is mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 3, as to who were the persons who took birth as Vyāsa in a particular Manu's age and which were the Vedas and branches of Vedas they had divided. It is given below: During the age of Manu Vaivasvata, in each of the past Dvāparayugas, the Veda had been divided by great hermits, twentyeight times. Twentyeight Veda-Vyāsas have passed, each of whom had divided the Veda into four parts in each Dvāpara Yuga. It was Brahmā himself who had divided the Veda into four in the first Dvāparayuga. Prajāpati was the Vedavyāsa in the second Dvāparayuga. In the third, Vyāsa was the teacher-priest Śukra; in the fourth Bṛhaspati; in the fifth the Sun; and in the sixth the all powerful Dharmarāja. It was Indra in the seventh, Vasiṣṭha in the eighth, Sārasvata in the ninth, and Tridhāmā in the tenth. It was Triśikha in the eleventh, Bharadvāja in the twelfth, Antarīkṣa in the thirteenth, Varṇī in the fourteenth, Trayyāruṇa in the fifteenth, Dhanañjaya in the sixteenth, Kratuñjaya in the seventeenth and Jaya in the eighteenth. Next Bharadvāja comes as Vedavyāsa and Gautama after Bharadvāja. It was hermit Haryātmā who was the next Vyāsa, and then comes Vājaśravas. The Next Vyāsa was Tṛṇabindu born in the clan of Somaśuṣma. He was followed by Ṛkṣa. otherwise called Vālmīki born in the family of Bhṛgu. Śakti is the Next Vyāsa. After that Parāśara, then Jātūkarṇa and then Kṛṣṇadvaipāyana. They are the twentyeight Vedavyāsas. Each one of these had divided the Veda which had been one at the beginning of each Dvāparayuga, into four Vedas. It is Aśvatthāmā, the son of Droṇa, who is going to be the Vedavyāsa of the coming Dvāparayuga.

8) Other details.

(i) Most of the scholars are of opinion that the period of Vyāsa was between 1800 and 1500 B.C.

(ii) Apāntaratamas was the rebirth of Vyāsa. (See under Apāntaratamas).

(iii) In Mahābhārata, the word Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇadvaipāyana, Dvaipāyana, Satyavatīsuta, Satyavatyātmaja, Pārāśarya, Parāśarātmaja, Bādarāyaṇa, Vedavyāsa etc. are used as synonyms of Vyāsa.

(iv) The word Vyāsa means he who describes elaborately.

"He became Vyāsa because he had described all the Vedas". (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 88). Vyas=describe (Differentiate the branches and divide).

VYĀSASTHALĪ. An ancient holy place on the border of Kurukṣetra. It is said that because of his grief due to the separation of his son, Vyāsa tried to commit suicide at this place. He who visits this place would get the fruits of giving thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 93).

VYĀSAVANA. A forest near Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 93, that he who bathes in the holy bath named Manojavatī tīrtha in this forest, would get the fruits of giving thousand cows as alms.

VYAŚVA. A King. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 3, that this King remains in the palace of Yama.

VYAVAHĀRA. It is mentioned in Manusmṛti, Chapter 8, that administering the law was of eighteen types in ancient India.

i) Pertaining to giving and taking.
ii) Pertaining to the property entrusted to another for keeping.
iii) Selling the property by anybody other than its owner.
iv) Appropriating gain to oneself in a combined transaction.
v) Not handing over the property which was given as a gift.
vi) Non-payment of salary.
vii) Disobeying orders.
viii) Retaining and doubting the ownership after the completion of a transaction of selling or buying.
ix) A law suit between the owner of the cattle and the cowherd or shepherd.
x) Dispute about boundary.
xi) Striking another.
xii) Reviling others xiii) Theft and robbery.
xiv) Violence.
xv) Stealing another's wife.
xvi) Matrimonial responsibilities. xvii) Partition. xviii) Gambling.

Whenever difference of opinion arises between two persons on any of the matter given above, the King should interfere and make a decision. For one reason or another, if the King could not attend the court, three learned Brahmins should enter the court and conduct the trial sitting or standing, and they should not conduct the trial walking to and fro. This was the practice of courts in ancient India.

VYOMA. A King born in the dynasty of Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that Vyoma was the son of Dāśārha and the father of Jīmūta.

VYOMĀRI. An eternal Viśvadeva (deity concerned with offerings to the Manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 35).

VYOMĀSURA. Son of Māyāsura. For the story how Kṛṣṇa killed this asura, see under Kṛṣṇa, para 24.

VYŪḌHORU (VYŪḌHORASKA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 23, that Vyūḍhoru was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata.

VYŪHA. (Disposition of an army). Disposition of an army of four parts, (infantry, cavalry, elephants and chariots) in the battlefield, the arrangement of it, in various forms. It is said that during the period of Mahābhārata, there were various forms of disposition of the army. Some of them are given below:

i) Ardhacandravyūha. (like a Crescent moon) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 56)
ii) Garuḍavyūha. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 56).
iii) Krauñcavyūha. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 60).
iv) Cakravyūha. (wheel-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 34).
v) Makaravyūha. (shark-like) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69).
vi) Maṇḍalavyūha. (circular) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 81).
vii) Maṇḍalārdhavyūha. (Semi circular) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20). viii) Vajravyūha. (Diamond-shaped) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 81).
ix) Śakaṭavyūha. (cart-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 7).
x) Śyenavyūha. (Vulture-like) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69).
xi) Sarvatobhadravyūha. (fortified all-round) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 99).
xii) Suparṇavyūha. (kite-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20). xiii) Sūcīmukhavyūha. (Like the needle-eye) (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 77).

VYŪKA. A country of ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 31).

VYUṢITĀŚVA. A King of the Pūru dynasty, who was righteous and just. He performed many sacrifices. His wife was Bhadrā, daughter of King Kakṣīvān. It is said that this Bhadrā was the most beautiful woman in India. As the King led a libidinous life with this queen Bhadrā he met with an untimely death.

When the King died, he had no children. Bhadrā cried for a long while embracing the dead body of the King. Then the spirit of Vyuṣitāśva, without the body, said to her. "My love. Lie with me in your own bed on the eighth or fourteenth day of your menstruation. I will give you sons." She acted according to the wish of the King and got seven sons from the dead body. Her sons were three Satvas and the four Madras. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 120).

VYUṢṬA. A King of the dynasty of Dhruva. This King was the son of King Puṣpārṇa, by his wife Prabhā. Pradoṣa, Niśītha and others were brothers of Vyuṣṭa. A son named Sarvatejas was born to this King. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

VYUṢṬI. Another name for day-time.

Y

YA. (य) This letter means "Yāga", "Yātā" (one who goes) or "hero". (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

YĀDAVA. See under Yaduvaṁśa.

YĀDAVĪ. Mother of the King Sagara. (For more details see under Sagara).

YADU I. The founder of Yādava Vaṁśa or Yadu Vaṁśa.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order:—Brahmā—Atri— Candra — Budha — Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yayāti—Yadu.

2) Yadu Vaṁśa (Yādava Vaṁśa). The origin of Yadu Vaṁśa is from Atri. Candra, Durvāsas and Dattātreya Muni were the sons of Atri by Anasūyā. Budha was born to Candra, Purūravas was born to Budha, Āyus was born to Purūravas, and Nahuṣa was born to Āyus. Two children, Āyati and Yayāti were born to Nahuṣa. Yayāti had two wives, Śarmiṣṭhā and Devayānī. Three sons, Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru were born to Śarmiṣṭhā. The Pūru vaṁśa takes its origin from Pūru. Yayāti had two sons by Devayānī. They were Yadu and Turvasu. The descendants of Yadu are the Yādavas.

Four sons, Sahasrajit, Kroṣṭā, Nala and Ripu were born to Yadu. Sahasrajit had a son, Śatajit. Three sons Mahābhaya, Veṇuhaya and Hehaya were born to Śatajit. Of them Hehaya became famous under the name of Ekavīra and founded the Hehaya vaṁśa. The Hehayas and Bhārgavas were on terms of enmity. Dharma was born to Hehaya, and Kunti or Kuṇi was born to Dharma. Kuṇi had four sons—Sadājit, Māhiṣmān, Bhadrasena and Durdama. Dhanaka was the son of Bhadrasena and Dhanaka had four sons—Kṛtavīrya, Kṛtāgni, Kṛtavarmā and Kṛtaujas. Of them, Kṛtavīrya who was the eldest, was the father of Kārtavīryārjuna.

From here, Yadu vaṁśa continues from Kārtavīryārjuna. He had five sons, Jayadhvaja, Śūrasena, Vṛṣabha, Madhu and Ūrjjita. Vṛṣṇi was the son of Madhu, the fourth of them. From this point, Yadu vaṁśa continues from Vṛṣṇi. Yādava vaṁśa from this stage is also known as Vṛṣṇi vaṁśa. Vṛṣṇi had four sons—Sumitra, Yudhājit, Vasu and Sārvabhauma. Yadu vaṁśa continues from Yudhājit. He had two sons, Śini and Nimna. Śini's son was Satyaka and Satyaka's son was Sātyaki. Sātyaki had another name, Yuyudhāna. Jaya was Sātyaki's son. Kuṇi was the son of Jaya, Anamitra was the son of Kuṇi and Pṛśni was the son of Anamitra. Pṛśni's sons were Citraratha and Śvaphalka. Viḍūratha and Kukūra were born to Citraratha. Śūra was the son of Viḍūratha. Śini was the son of Śūra, Bhoja was the son of Śini, Hṛdīka was the son of Bhoja. Four sons, Devavāha, Gadādhanvā, Kṛtaparvā and Śūra, were born to Hṛdīka. Śūra married Māriṣā and their children were Vasu, Devabhāga, Devaśravas, Ānaka. Sṛñjaya, Kākānīka, Śyāmaka, Vatsa, Kavūka and Vasudeva. Vasudeva married Devakī, the sister of Kaṁsa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was their son. Pradyumna was the son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Aniruddha was the son of Pradyumna and Vajra was the son of Aniruddha. The last known link of that branch of Yadu vaṁśa was Vajra.

Kaṁsa also belonged to Yadu vaṁśa. Kukūra who was the brother of Viḍūratha was the ancestor of Kaṁsa. Ugrasena who was a lineal descendant of Kukūra, was the father of Kaṁsa. The Purāṇas mention Devakī, the mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa as Kaṁsa's sister. But in fact she was not his direct sister. Ugrasena, Kaṁsa's father, had a brother named Devaka. This Devaka had three sons, Devāpa, Upadeva and Sudeva. Devakī, Śrī Kṛṣṇa's mother was the daughter of Devāpa. Devakī had six sisters who were—Śrutadevā, Śāntidevā, Upadevā, Śrīdevā, Devarakṣitā and Sahadevā.

Akrūra who went to Ambāḍi also belonged to another branch of Yadu vaṁśa. Pṛśni who was of the ninth generation from Vṛṣṇi, had two sons—Citraratha and Śvaphalka. Akrūra was the son of Śvaphalka.

3) Other details about Yadu Vaṁśa

(i) Once Yayāti wanted his son Yadu to transfer the latter's youthfulness to Yayāti. The son refused to oblige the father who therefore pronounced a curse that Yadu's descendants would not enjoy kingship. (For detailed story, see under Yayāti).

(ii) Yadu's descendants are called Yādavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 10).

(iii) Yadu was the son of Devayānī and the grandson of Śukrācārya. Although Yadu was a hero, he was dull-witted. He did not obey his father. He used to despise his father and brothers. His capital city was Hastināpura. He became dull-witted after the loss of his kingdom by the curse of his father. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 149).

4) The end of Yadu Vaṁśa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was one of the most important members of the Yadu Vaṁśa. That family continued only for 36 years more after the end of the Bhārata Yuddha. At the end of the thirtysix years, evil omens began to appear in Dvārakā. Whirlwinds began to blow furiously. Frightened birds began to fly helter-skelter. Rivers began to flow upwards. The whole land was enveloped in mist. Comets continued to drop from heaven, scattering sparks of fire. The sun's disc was eclipsed with clouds of dust.

At that time, one day, the sages Viśvāmitra, Kaṇva and Nārada happened to come to Dvārakā. A band of Yādavas, under the leadership of Sāmba, gathered round the sages to make fun of them. They dressed Sāmba like a pregnant woman and asked the sages what child "she" would bear. The enraged sages replied that the "Child" would be an iron pestle which would be the cause of the death of all the Yādavas. Besides, they added that, with the exception of Rāma, (Balabhadra Rāma) and Kṛṣṇa, the whole of Yādava Vaṁśa would come to ruin.

Next day Sāmba did give birth to an iron pestle. The frightened Yādavas recalled the curse of the sages. They reported the matter to their king. The king, in deep gloom, had the pestle filed into dust and ordered his men to throw the dust into the sea.

People recalled Gāndhārī's curse on Śrī Kṛṣṇa after the Bhārata Yuddha. The curse was that the family of Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was the cause of all mischief, would be wiped out within a period of 36 years.

At that time, women began to be stolen from Dvārakā every night by a dark woman monster. Śrī Kṛṣṇa's weapon, Cakra slipped out of Kṛṣṇa's grip and rose up to heaven, in the very presence of the Vṛṣṇis. Seeing these evil omens, the alarmed Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas began to leave the place on a pilgrimage. They reached the shore of Prabhāsa tīrtha. The Uddhavas parted company with the Yādavas there. Nobody prevented the Uddhavas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa who saw that the end of the Yādavas was approaching, also kept silent. The Yādava leaders in despair, took to drinking. Intoxicated by drinking they began to quarrel. The particles of the iron pestle thrown into the sea, were carried and deposited on the shore by the waves. They began to sprout into a kind of grass. The blades of this grass soon transformed themselves into iron pestles. The Yādavas pulled them out and began attacking each other with them. Most of them were beaten to death by their own kinsfolk. Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was in a state of trance in "Yogāsana", was hit on his toe by an arrow shot by a hunter and he fell into Samādhi. Balabhadra Rāma renounced his body and went to Pātāla.

After that the sea advanced and submerged the whole of Dvārakā. (M.B. Mausala Parva).

YADU II. There is another Yadu mentioned in the Purāṇas, who was the son of Uparicara Vasu. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 31, says that this Vasu was never defeated by anyone at any time.

YADU III. King of Yadus. There are references to this king in many places in the 1st Maṇḍala of Ṛgveda.

YĀJA. A sage born in Kaśyapa gotra. (For further details, see the word Upayāja and Pāñcālī).

YAJATA. A Yajñakartā (Performer of Yajñas) celebrated in the Ṛgveda.

YAJÑA. An incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. Svāyambhuva Manu had two sons, Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and three daughters, Ākūti, Devahūti and Prasūti. Ruci Prajāpati married Ākūti. Yajña was their son. Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha mentions that this Yajña was an incarnation of Ādi Nārāyaṇa.

Yajña had a sister named Dakṣiṇā. They were twins. They married each other. The twelve sons who were born to them were the Devas known as Yāmas, during the Svāyambhuva Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 7).

Yajña's twelve sons were:—Toṣa, Pratoṣa, Santoṣa, Bhadra, Śānti, Iḍaspati, Iddhma, Kavi, Vibhu, Sraghna, Sudeva and Virocaka. Their father Yajña was the Indra of Svāyambhuva Manvantara. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

YAJÑABĀHU. An ancient sage who was the son of Priyavrata and grandson of Svāyambhuva Manu. Svāyambhuva Manu had two famous sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Of these, Priyavrata married Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī, the two daughters of Viśvakarmā. Yajñabāhu was the son of Priyavrata by Surūpā. The ten sons born to Priyavrata and Surūpā were:—Agnīdhra, Iddhmajihva, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi, Vītihotra and Kavi. They had a daughter, Ūrjjasvatī. Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

YAJÑADATTA I. A youthful sage. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 6, it is stated that this youth was shot dead with an arrow by Daśaratha, mistaking him for an elephant, on the bank of the river Sarayū. But Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa says that the name of the boy-sage who was shot dead by Daśaratha was "Śravaṇa". For more details see 3rd Para under Daśaratha.

YAJÑADATTA II. A Brāhmaṇa. There was a Brāhmaṇa village called Mahat at the foot of the Yāmuna mountain, between the rivers Gaṅgā and Yamunā. This Brāhmaṇa was born and brought up here. There is a story in Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 92, about him, which says that by mistake he was taken to hell by Kāla's messenger and that he was reluctant to leave hell. The story is as follows:—

Once Yama (Kāla) ordered his agent to bring the Brāhmaṇa named Yajñadatta, who lived in Mahat village, born in Vasiṣṭha gotra and was gentle, scholarly and well-versed in Yajña practices. He was specially warned that he should not make a mistake as there was another Brāhmaṇa with the same name who lived in the neighbourhood and who resembled Yajñadatta in appearance, learning and in every other respect. But in spite of Yama's specific warning, his agent brought the wrong person. Yama, with his sense of justice, received him with due respect and allowed him to return to the world. But Yajñadatta was not willing to return to the world.

YAJÑADATTA III. See under Pāṭalīputra.

YAJÑAŚARMĀ. A Brāhmaṇa made famous in the Purāṇas. He was the son of Śivaśarmā. (For detailed story, see under Śivaśarmā).

YAJÑAŚATRU. A Rākṣasa who fought against Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa in the forest. Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras were the three Rākṣasas who declared war on Śrī Rāma. Yajñaśatru was one of the twelve military commanders of Khara. Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, 26th Sarga, mentions that the twelve heroes who were Khara's commanders were: - Śyenagāmī, Pṛthugrīva, Yajñaśatru, Vihaṅgama, Durjaya, Karavīrākṣa, Paruṣa. Kālakārmuka, Meghamālī, Mahāmālī, Sarpāsya and Rudhirāśana.

YAJÑASENA I. See under Pañcatantra.

YAJÑASENA II. Drupada, the son of King of Pāñcāla. (For more details see under Drupada).

YAJÑAVĀHA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. There is a reference to him in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 80.

YĀJÑAVALKYA. An ancient sage who was a profound scholar.

1) General. Purāṇas say that this sage spent the major part of his life at the court of King Janaka. He was also King Janaka's priest. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16, it is mentioned that Kalki was Yājñavalkya's priest. Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 51, mentions that Yājñavalkya was a "Brahmavādī son" of Viśvāmitra.

2) Thousand cows. Once King Janaka conducted a Yāga. At that time he wished to find out the most eminent among the sages. He promised to present a thousand cows to the sage who was a consummate scholar. A bag of gold coins was also tied to each horn of the cows. Janaka announced that the sage who claimed to be a consummate scholar might come forward and take the cows with him. No one among the numerous sages who were present, dared to come forward. Yājñavalkya, however, ordered his disciple to take the cows home with him. The other sages questioned his right to claim the cows. Yājñavalkya asserted his right to do so. One of the sages named Arthabhāga stood up and asked him the following question :—

Arthabhāga :—When a man who has not acquired divine knowledge dies, his "Jñānendriyas" (senses of knowledge) are also merged with it. How is it possible for him to accept another body afterwards? "Yājñavalkya:—Karma (action) becomes the cause of his rebirth."

Next Kahola and many other sages put various questions to him. The substance of their talk is given below :—

Kahola :—What have you to say about the invisible and omnipresent Brahman?

Yājñavalkya :—Your soul is the omni-present Brahman. The soul has no hunger or thirst, fear or desire, old age or death. Those who wish to know the soul, become sages after transcending love of wife, children or worldly riches. The two qualities essential for sages are scholarship and spiritual knowledge.

Gārgī :—Who is the warp and woof of everything ?

Yājña :—It is Brahman. Do not ask further; if you do, your head will be broken to pieces.

Āruṇi :—Who is he who exists within ? (Antaryāmī).

Yājña :—He who is contained in Jagat (the universe) without the knowledge of Jagat, he whose body is Jagat, he who controls Jagat as antaryāmī, he is within every one. He cannot be seen, but he sees. He cannot be heard; but he hears. He is capable of thinking; but he is beyond our thoughts. He exists as one who sees, hears and thinks, in all creatures.

Gārgī :—I have two questions to ask. They are as sharp and pointed as two arrows. By what force is fixed that which is above Heaven, below the earth and that which is between them, like warp and woof?

Yājña :—By the sky.

Gārgī :—By what force is the sky held in position like warp and woof?

Yājña :—Under the command of God, the sun and moon do not deviate from their orbits. The sky and the earth remain in their respective places. Rivers run making the fields fertile. One who lives and works without the ability to know God does not obtain immortality. He who dies without knowing God is a Kṛpaṇa (spiritual bankrupt). On the contrary, he who knows God attains Mokṣa.

Śākalya :—How many gods are there ?

Yājña :—Thirtythree. They are—8 Vasus, 11 Rudras, 12 Ādityas, Indra and Prajāpati. The 8 Vasus are—Agni, Pṛthvī, Vāyu, Antarīkṣa, Āditya, Dyau (Heaven), Candra and Stars. The 11 Rudras are the combination of the 10 jñānendriyas and the working of the mind. The ruling deities of the 12 months are known as the 12 Ādityas. They receive into them our lives and our Karmans (actions).

Yājñavalkya gave suitable answers to all other questions of Śākalya. At last, he asked Śākalya :—"Now I will ask you a question. Whom do the Upaniṣads describe? If you do not answer, your head will break." Śākalya could not answer it. He dropped down with a broken head. He asked the other scholars who had gathered there, if any of them wanted to ask him more questions. But no one came forward. All remained dumb. Then he continued :—"Fresh leaves sprout from a tree which has been cut. If the seed is destroyed, the tree does not grow out of it. How is it that a man is born again after his death ?"

No one was able to answer that question. Thus after defeating all of them in argument, Yājñavalkya went home with the cows.

3) In Janaka's court again. On another occasion, Yājñavalkya went to see King Janaka. The King asked him whether he had come for getting cows or to ask abstruse question. The sage answered that he had come for both. Their conversation continued as follows :—

Janaka :—Jita Muni has said that "Vacana" (word) is Brahman or God. What is your opinion ?

Yājña :—It is correct. But did he say which is the body and abode of God ?

Janaka :—No.

Yājña :—In that case he has said only onefourth about God. Vacana is god's body and sky, his abode. Brahmavidyā depends on the word. The word is Parabrahman. Janaka was highly pleased. He decided to give a thousand bulls to the sage. But Yājñavalkya said that his father's principle was to give effective knowledge to the pupil and not to receive any dakṣiṇā (Payment) from him. Janaka again wanted Yājñavalkya to explain clearly what "Brahma Vidyā" means.

Yājña :—Just as a person can reach his destination by walking or by travelling in a chariot or by sailing in a boat, in order to secure peace for the soul, you are depending on the Upaniṣads. But although one is learned in Vedas and Āgamas, or adored by others or wealthy, or well-versed in Upaniṣads, unless one has known God—unless one acquired Brahmajñāna—one cannot be said to be gratified. Do you know where you will go after renouncing your body?

Janaka :—I do not know.

Yājña :—I shall tell you. The deity of the right eye is "Inda" (light). People call it "Indra". The deity of the left eye is Indrāṇī, the wife of Indra. Indra is eater and Indrāṇī is food. In a state of consciousness they are separated. (Then the soul is called Vaiśvānara). In a state of dream, the two are united. (Then the soul is called Taijasa). In a state of slumber, the soul is in "Prjñāa" state. (Since there is no activity it is called Prājña). In the fourth or "Turīya" state, one becomes capable of transcending the three other states and to attain Parabrahman. It is a state of fearlessness transcending birth and death.

The King who was pleased by this teaching dedicated the kingdom of Videha and even himself to the sage.

4) In Janaka's court for the third time. After some years Yājñavalkya went again to Janaka's court. At that time also there was a philosophical discussion between the King and the sage in the form of questions and answers.

Janaka :—Which is the light that gives us guidance during the day time?

Yājña :—The Sun.

Janaka :—After sunset which is the light that guides us?

Yājña :—The Moon.

Janaka :—And in the absence of the sun and moon?

Yājña :—Agni.

Janaka :—Which is the light that guides us in the absence of the sun, moon and Agni?

Yājña :—Vacana.

Janaka :—Which is the light that shines in the absence of all these luminaries?

Yājña :—Ātmajyotis (soul's light).

Janaka :—Who is Ātman?

Yājña :—"Puruṣa" who is formed by the union of "vyāna" in prāṇas (lives) and jyotis (light) in the heart. The soul is disposed to action with the help of intelligence. In the end it transcends the body, senses and mind and attains Mokṣa. In the state of consciousness the soul's activities become manifest to us. When in sleep, after deputing "Prāṇa" for the protection of the body, the soul remains outside the body. The senses become inactive. Therefore we should never wake up one who is asleep. When the soul remains in the body and the senses are active, it is in a most vigilant state. Thus the soul is above the states of wakefulness, dream and slumber. The soul is the divine light of pure energy.

Janaka who was pleased, gave the sage a thousand cows more. After that Yājñavalkya spoke about liberation from worldly bonds.

Yājña :—The soul has no connection with the three conditions. Just as the actions in a dream do not affect the soul, the actions in a wakeful state also do not affect it. Just as a fish jumps from one side of the river to the other and back again, life keeps jumping from the state of wakefulness to the state of slumber and vice versa.

Just as a kite goes up flying and then comes back to its nest, one moves from the state of wakefulness to sleep and back again. In deep slumber, he merges with God, but he does not know that. In that state, the father or the mother does not have the knowledge that they are the father or mother.

After that Yājñavalkya explained the nature of the soul and the various aspects of its working in a state of wakefulness and of slumber. He added:—"As long as there is "Kāma" (desire) there is "Karman" also. Life goes on passing from birth to death and from death to birth. One attains perfection when one is above all desires, and acquires the highest divine knowledge. He is liberated from birth and death and becomes immortal.

By jñāna, dāna and tapas we become self-purified and thus become worthy of the highest divine grace. We have to go from the world of Karman (action) to the world of ātman (soul). One who has acquired Brahmajñāna (knowledge of Brahman) becomes a Brāhmaṇa.

Hearing these famous teachings of Yājñavalkya, Janaka became his permanent disciple.

5) His end. Yājñavalkya had two wives named Kalyāṇī and Maitreyī. After giving his all to his wives he passed into immortality. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka; M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapters 3-9).

6) His works. Yājñavalkya has written a Smṛti on the subject of law. "Mitākṣarā" is its famous commentary. Mitākṣarā is the highest authoritative treatise on Law in South India.

7) Other details.

(i) Yājñavalkya flourished in Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).

(ii) He was also a member of Indra's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 12).

(iii) Yājñavalkya was the priest at the Rājasūya Yajña of Dharmaputra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 35).

(iv) Yājñavalkya had his knowledge of Vedas from Sūryadeva. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 6).

YAJURVEDA.

1) General. The Caturvedas are:—Ṛg veda, Yajurveda Sāmaveda and Atharvaveda. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 5, mentions that Vaiśampāyana, the disciple of Vedavyāsa, divided Yajurveda into twentyseven branches and taught them to his disciples. Among those disciples there was Yājñavalkya, the son of Brahmarāta. It was Vyāsa who divided the Vedas into four parts. After dividing them, the sage Vyāsa taught Ṛgveda to Paila, Yajurveda to Vaiśampāyana, Sāmaveda to Jaimini and Atharvaveda to Sumantu.

The rules for Japa, Homa etc. of Yajurveda were taught to Vyāsa by Agnideva. If all the rules of Yajurveda are correctly observed, all desires will be fulfilled. There are special rules for the observance of homa for the fulfilment of particular desires.

YAKṚLLOMĀ. An Indian town. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 46).

YAKṢA.

1) General. A class of Semi-gods. There are chiefly three classes of inhabitants in Heaven:—Devas, Gaṇadevas and Upadevas. Gaṇadevas consist of the 12 Ādityas, 10 Viśvadevas, 8 Vasus, 36 Tuṣitas, 64 Ābhāsvaras, 49 Anilas 220 Mahārājikas, 12 Sādhyas and 11 Rudras.

Among the Upadevas there are 10 subdivisions. They are, Vidyādharas, Apsaras, Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras, Piśācas, Guhyakas, Siddhas and Bhūtas.

2) Origin. There are different views relating to the origin of the Yakṣas. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 1 we find that the Yakṣas took birth after Brahmā's birth from "Virāṭ Puruṣa's" aṇḍa. According to a statement in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19, Yakṣas and Rākṣasas were born from Munī, the grand daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati. Thus Yakṣas and Rākṣasas are related as brothers. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 7, there is another passage which says that Yakṣas are the progeny of the sage Pulastya.

3) Other details.

i) Once Śukadeva sang the story of Mahābhārata to the Yakṣas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 108).

(ii) Lakhs of Yakṣas remain in Kubera's assembly, worshipping him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 18).

(iii) There are Yakṣas in Brahmā's assembly also. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 56).

(iv) Kubera is the King of Yakṣas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 10).

(v) Bhīmasena once drove away Yakṣas and Rākṣasas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 57).

(vi) On another occasion, Sunda and Upasunda defeated and persecuted the Yakṣas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 208, verse 7).

YAKṢAGRAHA. A Graha (Evil Spirit) connected with Yakṣas. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 53, mentions that people become mad owing to the adverse influence of this Graha.

YAKṢAVĀṬA. A place made famous in the Purāṇas. In Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha, there is a statement saying that it was at this place that the Dānava called Rambha took a she-buffalo as his wife.

YAKṢAYUDDHAPARVA. A sub-division of Vana Parva, in Mahābhārata, Chapters 158 to 164 of Vana Parva, are included in this sub-division.

YAKṢEŚVARA. An incarnation of Śiva. The devas were puffed with pride when they secured Amṛta by churning the ocean of milk. In order to allay their pride, Śiva took birth as Yakṣeśvara.

One day he put a blade of grass on the ground before them and asked them to take it up. Although the Devas tried their best, they were not able even to move it. It was only then that they became convinced of their own incapacity. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudra Saṁhitā).

YAKṢĪ (YAKṢIṆĪ). Women folk of Yakṣas. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50 mentions that the images of Yakṣī to be installed in temples should have fixed and long eyes. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 105, states that Yakṣiṇī is a Devī and by eating the prasāda (naivedya) of the Devī one would be absolved of the sin of Brahmahatyā (killing a Brāhmaṇa).

YAKṢIṆĪ TĪRTHA. A famous sacred place situated on the borders of Kurukṣetra. By bathing at this place one's desires would be fulfilled. The place is also famous for offering worship to the Pitṛs. A visit to this place will be rewarded with the benefit of Aśvamedha Yāga. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 23 mentions that this tīrtha was founded by Paraśurāma.

YAKṢMĀ (RĀJAYAKṢMĀ). The disease of consumption (Tuberculosis). There is a story in Mahābhārata which says that this disease was created by Dakṣa Prajāpati. (For more details see under Candra).

YAMA. Kāla. (For more details see under Kāla).

YĀMA (S). A band of special gods of the Svāyambhuva Manvantara (See under Manvantara).

YAMADŪTA. One of the Brahmavādī sons of Viśvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 51).

YAMAJIHVĀ. A prostitute. In Kathāsaritsāgara, Śaktiyaśolambaka, 1st Taraṅga, there is a story about her as follows :—

In the city of Citrakūṭa Ratnavarmā a wealthy Vaiśya, had a son named Īśvaravarmā. In order to avoid his son falling under the influence of prostitutes, the father decided to teach "veśyātantram", to Īśvaravarmā while he was a boy. Yamajihvā, the prostitute undertook this task for a reward of 1000 Niṣkas. (a gold coin of that time).

After completing his education on the wiles and tricks of prostitutes, he was sent by his father to start a trade with a capital of five crores of Niṣkas. Īśvaravarmā and his friend Arthadatta on their way, stopped at a park on the outskirts of the city of Kāñcanapura. There he fell a victim to the bewitching charms of a prostitute named Sundarī. He spent the lion's share of the money given by his father, on her. On the advice of his friend Arthadatta he was about to leave the place when Sundarī pretended to be in danger of falling into a well and asked for his help. Īśvaravarmā was again caught in her trap and he was forced to spend the rest of his money also on her. When he was rendered penniless the prostitute and her mother deserted him.

Īśvaravarmā returned home to his father, empty-handed. Ratnavarmā took his son to Yamajihvā again and told her the whole story. He said that his son fell into this plight because Yamajihvā's training was not effective. After listening to the whole story, Yamajihvā promised to recover the whole amount lost by Īśvaravarmā. She brought her trained monkey named "Āla" and placed 1,000 Niṣkas before him. She taught him to swallow the whole amount. After that, she taught him to give out by vomiting, the swallowed money in instalments of twenty, thirty, forty etc., as ordered. Then Yamajihvā said to Īśvaravarmā :—"Take this monkey with you and go to Sundarī's place. Make him swallow the money in secret and get it again from him, in instalments, in her presence. She would think that the monkey is an inexhaustible source of wealth and would be prepared to buy it at any cost— even by offering her whole wealth in return. At first you must pretend to be unwilling to part with the monkey. In the end, you must make him swallow 2,000 Niṣkas which he would be able to give out in two days at the rate of 1,000 on each day. Exchange him for her whole wealth and leave the place immediately."

With this advice Yamajihvā sent Īśvaravarmā with the monkey. He went to Kāñcanapura in the company of his friend Arthadatta after receiving two crores of Niṣkas from his father. When Sundarī knew that Īśvaravarmā had come again with more money, she welcomed him with due respect and invited him to live with her. He accepted her invitation and took up his residence there. One day, he brought the monkey into the house and in the presence of Sundarī asked him to produce various amounts of money for different purposes.

The monkey promptly vomited the various amounts separately without making any mistake. Sundarī and her mother Makarakaṭī were naturally amazed at the marvellous performance of the monkey. Īśvaravarmā explained that the monkey was capable of giving in this way, 1,000 Niṣkas daily. Sundarī made up her mind to purchase the wonderful animal at any price. She requested Īśvaravarmā to give her the monkey in exchange for the crores of Niṣkas she had taken from him earlier. But he turned down her request. At last she persuaded him to sell the monkey to her for the entire wealth she possessed. Īśvaravarmā secretly made the monkey swallow 2,000 Niṣkas before handing it over to Sundarī and left the place at once to go to Svarṇadvīpa for trade.

Āla, the monkey gave Sundarī 1,000 Niṣkas on each of the first two days, but on the third day she was disillusioned. In her disappointment and anger, she beat Ālan. The enraged monkey attacked both Sundarī and Makarakaṭī and harmed them by biting and tearing with its nails. They in turn, beat him to death. Thus Sundarī lost all her ill-gotten wealth and was reduced to utter poverty and distress.

YAMAKA. A region in ancient India. The inhabitants of this place were called "Yamakas". Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, refers to the presents offered by the princes and people of Yamaka at Yudhiṣṭhira's Aśvamedhayajña.

YAMASABHĀ. Yama's assembly. This assembly is described in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8. It was Viśvakarmā who built Yamasabhā. It is 100 yojanas in length and 100 yojanas in width. Although it is illuminated with sun-light it has an equable temperature. Sadness, old age, hunger or thirst are unknown there. There is a dense growth of Kalpavṛkṣas. All the dead people who were famous in ancient times are members of this assembly.

YAMĪ. A daughter of Sūrya. One of the wives of Sūrya was Saṁjñā, the daughter of Viśvakarmā. Three children, Manu, Yama and Yamī, were born to Sūrya by Saṁjñā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 2).

YĀMĪ. A wife of Dharmadeva. The ten wives of Dharmadeva are—Arundhatī, Vasu, Yāmī, Lambā, Bhānu, Marutvatī, Saṅkalpā, Muhūrtā, Sādhyā and Viśvā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

YĀMINĪ. A daughter of Dakṣa Prajāpati. She was one of the wives of Kaśyapa. (Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

YAMUNĀ. Another name for the river Kālindī. (See also under Kālindī).

1) How the water in Kālindī turned Black :-The water in the river Kālindī is black in colour. There is a story behind the changing of the colour of this river-water into black. Originally it was clear.

After the death of Satī, Dakṣa's daughter, Śiva broke up Dakṣa yāga and went about rambling round the world. Kāmadeva who saw Śiva who had lost his wife (Satī) shot him with "Unmādāstra" (an arrow causing madness and excitement). Śiva, in his excitement, always thinking about Satī, wandered about, finding peace and rest nowhere. In his excited and restless state he plunged himself into Kālindī river. Just then, the clear water of the river turned black. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

2) The greatness of Kālindī (Yamunā). The Purāṇas declare that by bathing in the holy Kālindī one attains heaven. There is a story illustrating this in Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 30, as follows :—

Long ago, in Kṛtayuga, there lived in the country of Niṣadha, a very wealthy Vaiśya, by name Hemakuṇḍala. By doing various kinds of business, he had earned eight crores of golden coins. By that time he was advancing in age. At this stage he began to think of the transitoriness of worldly pleasures and set apart one-sixth of his entire wealth for charitable purposes. He built two temples—one for Viṣṇu and the other for Śiva. He offered daily worship to the gods and spent money in generous hospitality. His two sons, Śrīkuṇḍala and Vikuṇḍala were growing up. He entrusted the burden of domestic affairs to them and went to the forest to perform austere tapas, after which he attained Viṣṇuloka.

His sons, who were intoxicated with their affluent and luxurious life, deviated from the path of virtue and began to indulge in all kinds of sensual pleasures. It did not take long for them to be reduced to utter poverty. Their relatives and dependants left them to their fate and at last, they began to resort to stealing. For fear of the King, the public and the law, they changed their residence to the woods. One of them went to a mountain and the other to a forest. One day, the elder brother was caught by a tiger and the younger was bit by a snake. Both of them died on the same day. Yama's agents took both to Yamaloka. Dharmarāja (Yama) ordered the elder brother to be sent to Naraka (Hell) and the younger one (Vikuṇḍala) to be sent to Heaven.

Vikuṇḍala who knew that he did not deserve Heaven by any standards, asked Yama's agent how this had happened. The agent gave him this answer :—"There was a Brāhmaṇa well-versed in Vedic lore, who was the son of Harimitra. His āśrama was on the southern bank of Yamunā. While you were living in the forest, you were associated with him. As a result of that contact, it so happened that you bathed for two months in the holy river Kālindī, the waters of which have the power of absolving sinners. By your bath in the first month you were liberated from all sins. By the second you have become eligible for Heaven. You have qualified yourself for the eternal bliss of Heaven, by that holy act."

Yamunā is being worshipped as a goddess. Devotees of this goddess imagine her as riding on a tortoise, carrying a water pot in her hand and is of black complexion. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

YĀMUNA I. A town in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 51).

YĀMUNA II. A mountain, made famous in the Purāṇas, standing between the rivers Gāṅgā and Yamunā. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 3).

YAMUNĀDVĪPA. An island in the river Yamunā. It was on this island that Vyāsa was conceived as the result of the union of sage Parāśara with Satyavatī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 2).

YAMUNĀPRABHAVA. A sacred place. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 44, mentions that the man who bathes here obtains the reward of Aśvamedha Yāga and enters Heaven.

YAMUNĀTĪRTHA. A holy tīrtha on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 11, refers to a Rājasūya Yajña performed at this place by Varuṇa, the son of Aditi.

YĀNA. One of the royal qualities like Sandhi, Vigraha etc. (For more details see under Ṣaḍguṇas).

YĀNASANDHIPARVA. A subdivision of Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva. Chapters 47-71 of Udyoga Parva, are included in this Parva.

YAŚAḤKETU. A King of the city called Śobhāvatī. He was one of the chief characters in the sixth story told by the famous Vetāla in Kathāsaritsāgara.

YAŚAS. Father of Kalki, the tenth incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16, mentions that towards the end of Kaliyuga all people will become atheists, there will be an intermixture of castes and all people will become thieves and devoid of virtue. At that time, the 15 branches of the Veda called Vājasaneyas alone will be the authority. Mlecchas (low-class people) assuming the form of Kings will begin to eat human beings. Agni Purāṇa states further that at that time, Lord Viṣṇu will incarnate as Kalki, the son of Yaśas and Yājñavalkya's priest and after training himself in archery and weapons, annihilate all Mlecchas.

YAŚASVINĪ I. A woman follower of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 10).

YAŚASVINĪ II. A sister of Pāñcālī. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

YĀSKA. A famous Sanskrit Grammarian of ancient times. Although the people of India always believed in the greatness of the Vedas, the Vedas became unintelligible even to scholars owing to changes in language and differences in grammar. It was Yāska and Sāyaṇa who saved the country from that plight. Yāska became famous by composing "Nirukta" (etymology). There is a reference to this ancient sage in Mahābhārata, Chapter 342, Verse 72.

YAŚOBHADRA. A son of King Manobhadra. Padma-Purāṇa, Kriyākhaṇḍa mentions that Yaśobhadra happened to be born in a royal family because in his previous birth he had bathed in the Gaṅgā.

YAŚODĀ. Foster-mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. How she became Śrī Kṛṣṇa's fostermother, is explained in a story given in Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha:—

Once Droṇa, one of the Aṣṭavasus, and his wife Dharā, caused displeasure to Brahmā. In his anger, Brahmā cursed them to be born in the world as human beings and to spend a life-time on earth, tending cattle. Droṇa became sad and with tears in his eyes, prayed to Brahmā that during his life on earth he should be blessed with Viṣṇu's darśana. Brahmā granted that prayer. It was in fulfilment of this prayer that Droṇa was born as Nandagopa and Dharā as Yaśodā in Ambāḍi.

YAŚODHARA I. Son of Durmukha, who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 184, Verse 5).

YAŚODHARA II. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇīdevī. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33).

YAŚODHARĀ. Daughter of King Trigarta. She was married by Hasti, King of the Pūru dynasty and they a had a son named Vikaṇṭha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 35).

YAŚOVATĪ I. The name of Īśāna's city. Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha mentions that god Īśāna, the ruler of the north-eastern part, lives in the city called Yaśovatī.

YAŚOVATĪ II. A princess. (See under Ekavīra).

YATHĀVĀSA. A muni (sage) who followed the Vānaprasthadharma. He attained Heaven as a Vānaprasthadharmī. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 244, Verse 17).

YATI I. A king who was the eldest son of Nahuṣa and the eldest brother of Yayāti. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 31, mentions that he became a yogī and lived in the forest.

YATI II. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

YATI III. A community-group. They were perhaps enemies of yajñas. There are references to them in various parts of the Ṛgveda.

YATINĀTHA. An incarnation of Śiva. Āhuka, a forest-dweller and his wife who lived in Arbuda (Abu) mountain were blessed by Yatinātha and as a result of the blessing they were born as Nala and Damayantī in their next birth. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudra Saṁhitā).

YĀTUDHĀNA. One of the sons of Kaśyapa and Surasā. All Rākṣasas who were born in this family are known as "Yātudhānas".

YĀTUDHĀNĪ. A Rākṣasī who was born from the sacrificial fire when King Vṛṣādarbhi performed a yāga. As directed by the king, she proceeded to the forest to destroy the Saptarṣis. She remained there as the owner of the tank in which the sages used to take bath. Seeing her standing alone there, they enquired who she was. She answered that she was guarding the tank. She allowed them to enter into the tank after each of them explained the meaning of his name. Accordingly, the sages Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Kaśyapa, Viśvāmitra, Gautama and Bharadvāja explained the meaning of their names before getting down into the tank. At last when sage Śunassakha's turn came, he said that he was not prepared to explain in detail, the meaning of his name and that she should be satisfied with his statement that he was the sage Śunassakha. Yātudhānī became angry on hearing it and insisted on his giving the meaning of his name. Śunassakha with a single stroke with his "tridaṇḍa" (trident) killed her. Śunassakha was really Indra himself. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93).

YĀTUKARṆA. A Devaguru. (See under Guruparamparā).

YAUDHEYA I. A son of Dharmaputra. Mahābhārata. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76, states that this prince was born to Dharmaputra by Devikādevī, daughter of Govāsana, king of Śibi land.

YAUDHEYA II. A native of Yaudheya country. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14, mentions, that the Yaudheyas had participated in Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya.

YAUDHEYA III. A king. According to Matsya Purāṇa, he was the son of Prativindhya.

YAUGANDHARĀYAṆA. Minister of Prince Udayana who is celebrated in the Purāṇas.

YAUNA. A particular caste. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 207, states that they were Caṇḍālas and were as ignorant as animals and birds.

YAUVANĀŚVA. Māndhātā, the son of Yuvanāśva. (For more information see under Māndhātā).

YAUYUDHĀNI. Son of Sātyaki the Yādava King. This hero who escaped from the ruin of the Yādava dynasty was presented with the region lying in the Sarasvatī river valley, by Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 19).

YAVAKRĪTA I. A sage. (See under Arvāvasu).

YAVAKRĪTA II. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 26, refers to Yavakrīta who was the son of Aṅgiras and the supporter of the eastern land.

YAVAKṢĀ. A famous river in Bhāratavarṣa (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 30).

YAVANA.

1) General. There are many references to Yavanas and the land of Yavanas in the Purāṇas. There is a statement in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 34, that the Yavana race takes its source from Turvasu, the son of Yayāti. There is another version in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 36, that Yavanas were born from the womb and the sides of Nandinī.

2) Other details.

(i) Arjuna's brother Sahadeva once conquered the Yavana land. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 73).

(ii) Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 17, mentions that on another occasion, Nakula defeated the Yavanas.

(iii) According to Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 35, the world will be filled with Yavanas and other Mleccha (low class) kings.

(iv) In the course of his conquests, Karṇa once subdued the Yavanas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 8).

(v) Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 21, mentions that king Sudakṣiṇa of Kāmboja approached Duryodhana with an "Akṣauhiṇī" along with the Yavanas, to take part in Bhārata Yuddha.

(vi) Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 65 states that at the time of Mahābhārata, Yavana land was part of India.

(vii) Originally Yavanas were Kṣatriyas. But they became Śūdras by the curse of Brāhmaṇas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 18).

(viii) Once there was a duel between a Yavana king and Mucukunda. (For further details, see under Mucukunda).

YAVASA. A particular region of Plakṣadvīpa. Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha says that Plakṣadvīpa had seven divisions which were - Śivam, Yavasam, Subhadram, Śāntam, Mokṣam, Amṛtam and Abhayam.

YAVĪNARA. A king of the Pūru dynasty. Bāhyāśva was his father. Five sons were born to Bāhyāśva. They were Mukula, Sṛñjaya, Bṛhadiṣṭha, Yavīnara and Kramila. These five persons became famous in later ages under the name of Pāñcālas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

YĀYĀTA. An ancient holy place in India. King Yayāti conducted a Yāga at this place. From that time the place became sacred. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 32).

YAYĀTI. An eminent king of the Lunar dynasty.

1.) Genealogy and Birth. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order—Brahmā—Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yayāti.

Sage Atri had three sons—Candra, Durvāsas and Dattātreya—by his wife Anasūyā. Candra's son was Budha, Budha's son was Purūravas, Purūravas's son was Āyus, Āyus's son was Nahuṣa who had six sons—Yati, Yayāti, Saṁyāti, Āyāti, Ayati and Dhruva. Yayāti had two wives, Devayānī and Śarmiṣṭhā. Two sons, Yadu and Turvasu, were born to Devayānī. Of them, Yadu became the founder of Yaduvaṁśa. Śarmiṣṭhā had three sons who were Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru. The Puruvaṁśa traces its origin to Puru.

2). Yayāti's marriage. Yayāti married Devayānī, the daughter of sage Śukra and Śarmiṣṭhā, the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā.

There is a story behind this marriage, given in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 76.

Once there was keen rivalry between Devas and Asuras. For achieving victory Devas accepted Bṛhaspati and Asuras accepted Śukra as their preceptors. Although Devas slaughtered all Asuras they were restored to life by Śukra by the power of his mantra. Devas and Asuras resumed their battle. "Mṛtasañjīvanī" (the art of reviving the dead) was then unknown to the gods. Devas sent the handsome youth Kaca to Śukra, to learn Mṛtasañjīvanī from him. There, Kaca fell in love with Devayānī, Śukra's daughter. But after acquiring the knowledge about Mṛtasañjīvanī he returned, without marrying Devayānī. At the time of his departure, Kaca and Devayānī cursed each other. Devayānī's curse was that Kaca's newly acquired knowledge would not produce the desired result, while Kaca's curse was that Devayānī would not be married by any youthful ṛṣi.

Śarmiṣṭhā was the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā, the Daitya king. Devayānī was the daughter of Śukra, the Daitya preceptor. One day they were enjoying a bath in a forest brook with their maids, after leaving their clothes on the bank of the stream. At that time Devendra who came that way, transformed himself into a strong wind and carried all the clothes to a place and put all of them in a heap. Seeing this, the women rushed out of the water and in the hurried confusion in snatching their garments Devayānī and Śarmiṣṭhā happened to put on each other's clothes. A quarrel took place between them on this mistake and the angry Śarmiṣṭhā pushed Devayānī into an unused well. Thinking that Devayānī was dead, Śarmiṣṭhā and her maids went to the palace.

At this time, Yayāti who was a king of the lunar dynasty happened to come there exhausted after his hunting. After rescuing Devayānī from the well and enquiring about her identity and the circumstances in which she fell into the well, he returned to his palace

Devayānī sent her maid Ghūrṇikā to her father and informed him about her mishap. The father, sage Śukra became angry towards Vṛṣaparvā, and came down from Daityaloka and settled down in the forest with his daughter. Afraid of his preceptor's curse and anger, Vṛṣaparvā came to Śukra and offered profuse apologies to him for his daughter's misconduct. But Śukra answered that he would be prepared to forgive only if Śarmiṣṭhā with 1000 maids would go and serve Devayānī. Finding no other way, Vṛṣaparvā yielded to the condition. Soon Śarmiṣṭhā and her 1000 maids went to the forest and began to serve Devayānī. Śukra returned to Daityaloka. Some time after this, Yayāti came to the forest one day for hunting. There he met Devayānī, being attended by many maids. In the conversation that followed, Devayānī was able to recognize Yayāti. She fell in love with him. But Yayāti insisted that he was not prepared to marry her without the consent of Śukrācārya. So she sent one of her maids to her father and informed him of her desire. The sage readily agreed and had their marriage performed. He also presented them 1,000 maids. After the ceremony, Yayāti returned to his palace with his bride. Śarmiṣṭhā and the 2,000 maids also accompanied them. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 76-81).

3) Yayāti's domestic Life. After his arrival in his capital city, Yayāti made arrangements for Devayānī's residence in his own palace while Śarmiṣṭhā took up her residence in Aśokavanikā. In due course, Devayānī gave birth to a son. The sight of the child roused the motherly instincts of Śarmiṣṭhā who spent a thousand years in heart-burning. One day, while she was brooding alone in her garden, Yayāti happened to come there. As they met, their hearts were moved by tender feelings. Śarmiṣṭhā approached Yayāti and begged for a son. But he tried to evade her by pleading that it was not proper to do anything in violation of Dharma. But in the end, he had to yield to her earnest supplications and philosophical arguments. Thus Śarmiṣṭhā conceived a son in secret.

When the child was born and it grew up, Devayānī's mind was constantly vexed with the thought as to who was the father. Once in an angry mood she questioned Śarmiṣṭhā herself about it. She answered that the child's father was a sage whose identity she could not ascertain in the excitement of her union with him. Any way, this answer satisfied Devayānī.

Soon after, another son was born to Devayānī. The first boy was named Yadu and the second son, Turvasu. As a result of the secret relations between Yayāti and Śarmiṣṭhā, three boys were born to her and they were named Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru, respectively. These boys also grew up in Aśokavanikā.

Once Devayānī was in her garden with her husband and children. Just then, Śarmiṣṭhā's children also happened to come there. Devayānī who somehow had her own suspicions, enquired of them their parentage and the innocent children replied that their mother was Śarmiṣṭhā and their father was Yayāti. Devayānī who became furious, immediately went to Asuraloka and informed her father Śukra about it. On hearing it, the sage who was beside himself with anger owing to his paternal affection, cursed Yayāti so that he fell a victim to the infirmities of old age. Yayāti entreated Śukra to withdraw the curse since he had not enjoyed his youth to the full.

Śukra lifted the curse by assuring him that one of Yayāti's sons would accept his father's old age in exchange for his youth and the son would be crowned King after Yayāti. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 82 and 83).

4) Rejuvenation. Yayāti asked his eldest son Yadu for his youthfulness. But the latter was not prepared to exchange it for his father's old age. Next the father approached his younger sons, Turvasu, Druhyu, and Anudruhyu, with the same request, but all of them in turn refused to oblige him. Even though Yayāti promised to return the youthfulness to them after a thousand years, they refused to exchange it for his old age. Yayāti in his anger, cursed Yadu that his progeny would never become Kings. Turvasu's family would be completely destroyed and Druhyu would float down the river, with unfulfilled desires and faded prosperity. Pūru wholeheartedly accepted his father's old age in exchange for his youth and went to the forest. From that day Yayāti began his reign with a cheerful heart. (M.B. Ādi parva, Chapters 84 and 85).

In Padma Purāṇa, there is a slightly different version about the way in which Yayāti fell a victim to the infirmities of old age. It is as follows:—Seeing the rigorous observance of Yayāti's virtuous life, Devendra began to be alarmed at the thought that he might be dislodged from his place. He called his charioteer Mātali and ordered him to bring Yayāti with him to Indraloka. When Mātali failed in his mission, Devendra sent some Gandharvas to enact the drama of "Vāmanāvatāra" before Yayāti. Enchanted by the charm and performance of Rati on the stage, the King became irresistibly fascinated by the female sex.

Once the Rākṣasī named Jarā and Madana got access to Yayāti's body. While in that state, one day he went to the forest for hunting. There he happened to meet a beautiful girl named "Aśrubindumatī". From her companion-maid, Viśālā, the King came to know of her history. Viśālā said to Yayāti—"Long ago when Kāmadeva was burnt Rati was in deep grief. The gods were moved to pity by her tears and they restored Kāma to life. Rati who was extremely happy, began to shed tears of joy. A beautiful girl was born from the tears which fell from her left eye. This maid who is standing before you is that girl. She is now looking for a suitable person for her Svayaṁvara." On hearing this story the King expressed his desire to marry her. Aśrubindumatī agreed to become his wife on condition that he exchanged his old age with some young person for his youthfulness.

Yayāti returned to his palace and asked each of his sons to give him his youth. Pūru alone fulfilled his father's desire. After this Yayāti married Aśrubindumatī. But he was compelled to submit to another condition also, that he should not maintain any contact with his other wives. Devayānī and Śarmiṣṭhā naturally, became distressed and furious when they saw Yayāti and Aśrubindumatī as husband and wife. So Yayāti asked Yadu to kill both of them. But Yadu refused to obey him. Yayāti who became angry at this, cursed his son that one of his descendants would marry his uncle's daughter and become heir to his mother's wealth.

After some time, on Menakā's advice, Aśrubindumatī urged Yayāti to go on a visit to Heaven. So he entrusted his kingdom to Pūru and went to Vaikuṇṭha.

5) Yayāti's reign. The Purāṇas describe Yayāti as a noble and eminent King. Some of the events which took place during his reign and which deserve special praise, are given below:

(i) Gift of cows. Once when King Yayāti was in the company of his subjects, a Brāhmaṇa approached him with a request for Gurudakṣiṇā. At once Yayāti gave him a gift of 1,000 cows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 195).

(ii) Yayāti and Gālava. See para 6 under Gālava.

(iii) His end. After a thousand years, Yayāti handed over his kingship to Pūru and went to the forest. He spent many years living in Bhṛgutuṅga in the company of sages, and feeding on fruits, roots, etc. and in the end died in the forest and attained Heaven.

(iv) Yayāti's fall from Heaven. Yayāti remained in Heaven for many years. Once he insulted the Devas, Indra and other gods and kings in the divine assembly. The gods looked at one another, wondering who this proud fellow was. They asked how this man reached Heaven without renouncing his pride. In the meantime Yayāti lost his balance and fell down from Heaven to the earth. While descending, he prayed that he should fall in the midst of good men.

Just at this time, four kings named Pratardana, Vasumanas, Śibi and Aṣṭaka were performing a Yāga in Naimiṣāraṇya. Yayāti happened to fall head downwards into their midst. But since they caught him in his fall he did not crash to the ground. He explained his story to them. They allowed him to accept the fruit of their Yajña and to go to Heaven. But since he was a Kṣatriya he told them he had no right to it. Just then, his daughter Mādhavī arrived there. She allowed him to take half of the divine grace which she had earned and with the help of it Yayāti ascended to Heaven again. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 120).

6) Other details.

(i) Yayāti witnessed the battle between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas which was fought as a result of the theft of King Virāṭa's cows. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(ii) In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 8, it is stated that King Yayāti continues to be in Yama's assembly.

(iii) Yayāti once gave 1,000 cows to a Brāhmaṇa as "Gurudakṣiṇā". (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 195).

(iv) He came riding in Indra's chariot and witnessed the battle between Arjuna and Kṛpācārya, from the sky. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(v) Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 115, mentions that Yayāti had conducted 1,000 Yāgas and that he was the leader of all Kings.

YAYĀTIPATANA. A holy place. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 48, mentions that a visit to this place will give the same reward as an Aśvamedha Yāga.

YĀYĀVARA(S). A particular section of Brahmins. Their special feature is that they wander about here and there, following the course of life of the sages. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 13, mentions that the reputed sage Jaratkāru was a Yāyāvara.

YODHYA. A country in ancient India. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 254, we read that this country was conquered by Karṇa.

YOGA I. A sage who was the grandson of Svāyambhuva Manu and son of Śraddhā. Yoga was born to Śraddhā by Dharma. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

YOGA II. It is Jñāna that reveals Brahman. Yoga is the concentration on Brahman. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 372, mentions that Yoga is the perfect union of Jivātmā and Paramātmā.

In fact Yoga is activity with the body as its basis. It may be doubted how a mere physical karman helps Parabrahmadarśana. But Maharṣis assert that there is an inseparable connection between matter and soul. Matter and soul are merely the two phases of the single "Astitva". The object of Yoga is to achieve union with Parabrahman; in other words, to attain Mokṣa. The recitation of mantras is important in many disciplines connected with the practice of Yoga. The letters and words of mantras are so arranged that their recitation in the proper manner produces profound and favourable effects in the body. The habitual recitation of mantras helps the practice of Yoga.

There are two broad divisions of Yoga—Haṭha Yoga and Rāja Yoga. The two are interconnected and have to be practised simultaneously. Haṭha Yoga is mainly concerned with disciplining the body by various kinds of exercises. Standing in Pañcāgni with the arms held aloft; standing on one leg or standing on the head are some of these exercises. Rāja Yoga aims at arousing Prajñā by control of the senses.

Rāja Yoga involves the practice of eight disciplines. They are :—Yama, Niyama, Āsana, Prāṇāyāma, Pratyāhāra, Dhāraṇā, Dhyāna and Samādhi. An account of each of these is given below :—

i) Yama. Yama means refraining from evil courses or sinful things like cruelty or dishonesty. Yama demands the practice of Ahiṁsā, satya, asteya, brahmacarya and aparigraha. (Ahiṁsā = non-violence or not killing any creature. Satya = truth; practising truth in thoughts, words and deeds. Asteya = not stealing. Brahmacarya = sexual continence. Aparigraha = not coveting wealth or pleasures which are not absolutely necessary).

ii) Niyama. While Yama is a negative discipline, Niyama is a positive one. It requires the positive practice of virtuous courses. Niyama includes five things :— Śauca (cleanliness), Santoṣa (contentment), Tapas (penance and austerities), Svādhyāya (study of the Vedas and incantations or mantras) and Īśvarapraṇidhāna (prayer and meditating on God). Śauca means not only cleanliness of the body, but also of the mind. The mind must be purged of all 'malas' like kāma, krodha and lobha. Tapas means ability to endure opposites (dvandvas) like heat and cold or joy and sorrow. Svādhyāya is "study of philosophical works." Īśvarapraṇidhāna—dedicating all actions unto God.

iii) Āsana. The way of sitting or posture. Different postures have been prescribed for different actions. First of all, the yogī must choose a suitable place.

(The place must be level, neat, free from stones, fire or gravel, agreeable to the mind and not causing irritation to the eyes). (Śvetāśvatara).

Different āsanas like Padmāsana, Svastikāsana and Siddhāsana have been prescribed for the practice of Yoga.

Putting the left leg on the right thigh and the right leg on the left thigh, holding the right toe with the left hand and the left toe with the right hand, place the chin on the chest and look at the tip of the nose. This is Padmāsana.

Sitting upright with the feet tucked under the hips is Svastikāsana.

Placing the left leg under the genitals, put the right leg on it. Insert the chin into the pit of the throat; control the senses; with steady eyes look at the point between the eye-brows. This is Siddhāsana which will break open the doors to Mokṣa.

iv) Prāṇāyāma. This is regulation of breathing. Inhale air through the left nostril, retain the air in the lungs for a few minutes and then exhale it through the right nostril. The process may be reversed—that is inhalation through the right nostril and exhalation through the left. This is the first step in Prāṇāyāma. Exhaling the breath and then not inhaling for some time is called recaka; the opposite process is called pūraka. The object of prāṇāyāma is to awaken Kuṇḍalinī.

v) Pratyāhāra. This is a process of withdrawing the five senses from the outer world. A man who practises Pratyāhāra becomes oblivious of the outer world. This helps the concentration of the mind on the Ātman.

vi) Dhāraṇā. Withdrawing the mind from outer objects and concentrating it on the self.

vii) Dhyāna. Meditation, concentrating the mind on several places like Bhrūmadhya and nābhīcakra. Repeating the sacred syllable OM is very useful in dhyāna.

viii) Samādhi. In Samādhi the soul and mind unite, the mind merging into the soul. Samādhi is defined thus :—
When the mind and soul unite just as salt and water unite, that state is called Samādhi.

YOGAMĀYĀDEVĪ. The form of Devī in the state of Yoga. It was Yogamāyādevī who transferred the seventh child of Devakī (Balabhadrarāma) from her womb to that of Rohiṇī. (Devī Bhāgavata 4th, Skandha).

YOGAVATĪ. Third daughter of Menā. She was the wife of the sage Jaigīṣavya. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa).

YOGĪŚVARA (S). A community of famous yogins. Kavi, Hari, Antarikṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Āvirhotra, Drumila, Camasa and Karabhojana belonged to this community. They were the sons of the sage Ṛṣabha and used to go about naked, everywhere. This community of yogins participated in the yajña of Nimi, King of Mithilā and gave him advice on Bhāgavatadharma. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

YONIDVĀRA. A sacred place on the Udaya mountain. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 95).

YONITĪRTHA. A sacred place in North India. A bath in this place will make a person handsome and he will get the reward of a gift of 1000 cows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 84).

YOTIMATSAKA (POTIMATSAKA). A King in ancient India. There is a passage in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 20, which mentions that the Pāṇḍavas had sent an invitation to this King to take part in the war.

YUDDHA (WAR). (i) In ancient times in India war was considered a "Rājadharma". A war declared under this law was known as "Dharmayuddha"

(ii) It is forbidden to use a weapon describing it falsely as another weapon. The use of arrows heated in fire, is also against Dharmayuddha.

(iii) It is also against the rules of Dharmayuddha to kill a person who gets down from the chariot, a eunuch, one with joined palms, one who squats on the ground, one who seeks refuge, one who is asleep, one who is naked, an unarmed person, one who has come to witness the fight, one who is fighting with another, one whose weapon is broken, one who is bereaved by the death of a son or other relative, one who is vanquished, one who flees from battle, and one who refuses to attack in return etc.

(iv) If a warrior fleeing from battlefield is killed by his enemy, he carries with him his master's sins.

(v) All the grace earned by the young man who flees from battle, passes to his master.

(vi) The soldier himself may take all booty in the battle except chariots, horses, elephants, umbrellas, wealth, corn, cows, women, weapons, silver and gold.

(vii) All costly articles, seized in battle, such as gold, silver, jewels etc. are to be handed over to the King, according to the Vedas. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 7).

YUDHĀJIT I. A Kekaya King. This Yudhājit was the brother of Kaikeyī, Daśaratha's wife, and the uncle of Bharata. Daśaratha's death took place at the time when Bharata was living in Kekaya country, at the invitation of Yudhājit. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 73rd Sarga).

YUDHĀJIT II. A King of Avantī. Līlāvatī, the daughter of Yudhājit was married by Sudarśana of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. In course of time their relations became hostile and they separated. At last Yudhājit exiled Sudarśana from his country and crowned his own brother, Śatrujit as King of Ayodhyā. (See under Dhruvasandhi).

YUDHĀJITA. A Yādava King. In Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa and in Matsya Purāṇa, it is stated that Yudhājita was the son of Anamitra by Pṛthvī.

YUDHĀMANYU. A warrior who fought against the Kauravas from the side of the Pāṇḍavas. The following references are made to him in the Mahābhārata.

(i) Yudhāmanyu was a prince of the Pāñcāla royal family. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 5).

(ii) He took his position in the battle as the bodyguard of Arjuna. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 19).

(iii) Yudhāmanyu's war-horse was a wonderful animal, both in spirit and shape. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 3).

(iv) In Bhārata Yuddha he fought against Kṛtavarmā, Duryodhana, Kṛpācārya, Citrasena the brother of Karṇa, and Aśvatthāmā. Kṛpācārya defeated him. He (Yudhāmanyu) killed Karṇa's brother Citrasena. (Droṇa Parva, Chapters 92, 130; Karṇa Parva, Chapters 61, 83).

(v) Yudhāmanyu met with his death in his fight against Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Sauptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 38).

YUDHIṢṬHIRA. See under Dharmaputra.

YUGA. See under Manvantara.

YUGANDHARA I (YUGANDHARAS). In the Purāṇas there are references to a mountain called Yugandhara. The inhabitants of that place were known as Yugandharas. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 9, there is a statement that these people used to drink the milk of camels and donkeys.

YUGANDHARA II. A warrior who fought against the Kauravas from the Pāṇḍava party. He attacked Droṇācārya in the battle and was killed by him in the end. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 30).

YUGAPA. A Deva Gandharva. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 56, mentions that he participated in Arjuna's birth festival.

YUKTĀŚVA. A sage who was a Sāmavedin. There is a story about this sage in Pañcaviṁśa Brāhmaṇa :—
Yuktāśva who was a scholar in Vedas and Śāstras once abducted two new-born babies and killed them. As a result of that sin, he lost all his Vedic knowledge. To recover his lost learning, he started an austere tapas. After many years of tapas, he got back the whole of his Vedic knowledge.

YŪPĀKṢA I. A military commander of Rāvaṇa. In the battle between Śrī Rāma and Rāvaṇa, he was killed by Hanūmān. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, 46 : 32).

YŪPĀKṢA II. A Rākṣasa. In the battle between Śrī Rāma and Rāvaṇa, this Rākṣasa was killed by the monkey Mainda. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa 76 : 34).

YUTAJIT. A son of King Bhoja of the Yaduvaṁśa. King Bhoja had six sons, who were—Nimroci, Kiṅkaṇa, Vṛṣṇi, Sahasrajit, Śatajit and Yutajit. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

YUVANĀŚVA I. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order :—Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa - Vivasvān-

Vaivasvata Manu-Ikṣvāku-Vikukṣi- Śaśāda - Kakutstha (Purañjaya)-Anenas-Pṛthulāśva-Prasenajit- Yuvanāśva. This Yuvanāśva was the father of Māndhātā.

2) Other details.

(i) Yuvanāśva performed many Yāgas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 126, Verse 5).

(ii) Once he drank water which had been subjected to special mantras (incantations) and as a result he became pregnant. Māndhātā was born by cutting open his belly. (For more details see under Māndhātā).

(iii) Yuvanāśva once received a wonderful sword from King Raivata. He presented that sword to King Raghu. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 78).

(iv) In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 61, it is stated that he had received "Parāvaratattva" (ability to know the highest and the lowest) because he had renounced meat-eating.

YUVANĀŚVA II. Another Yuvanāśva was the grandson of Viṣvagaśva of the Ikṣvāku dynasty and the son of Adri. This Yuvanāśva was the father of King Śrāva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 3).

YUVANĀŚVA III. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 15, refers to another Yuvanāśva who was the son of Vṛṣadarbha. He attained Heaven by offering gifts of jewels, women and dwelling houses.

YUVANĀŚVA IV. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty who was the grandson of Māndhātā. There is reference to him in the Ṛgveda. (Ṛgveda, 10; 134).

YUYUDHĀNA. Another name for Sātyaki. For further details, see under Sātyaki.

YUYUTSU I.

1) General. Son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra by a Vaiśya woman. He is not included in the 100 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Yuyutsu is referred to by another name, "Karaṇa" in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 113.

2) Other details.

(i) It was Yuyutsu who disclosed to the Pāṇḍavas that once Duryodhana gave poisoned food to Bhīmasena. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 37).

(ii) Yuyutsu was present at the Svayaṁvara of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 2).

(iii) In Bhārata Yuddha, Yuyutsu joined the Pāṇḍava party. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 100).

(iv) He was an eminent warrior and an honest and mighty hero. Many Kings attacked him in the city Vāraṇāvata. He was not able to fulfil his desire to kill all of them. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 58).

(v) In Bhārata Yuddha he fought with Subāhu and cut off his hands. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).

(vi) The bullocks tied to Yuyutsu's chariot were killed by Bhagadatta's elephant. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 56).

(vii) Yuyutsu severely rebuked the Kauravas who rejoiced over the death of Bhagadatta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 60).

(viii) Yuyutsu was defeated in his fight with Ulūka. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 25. Verse 11).

(ix) As advised by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Dharmaputra, Yuyutsu went to Hastināpura with the ladies of the royal family. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 86).

(x) On his return after the battle, Yuyutsu described the details of the battle to Vidura. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 29. Verse 21).

(xi) At the suggestion of Dharmaputra, Yuyutsu began to attend on Dhṛtarāṣṭra to serve him. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 17).

(xii) Yuyutsu was guarding Hastināpura when the Pāṇḍavas went to the Himālayas to get money from Marutta. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 24).

(xiii) Under the leadership of Yuyutsu, the Pāṇḍavas offered Jalāñjali (offering libations of water) to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 12).

(xiv) When the Pāṇḍavas departed on their Mahāprasthāna after handing over the reign of the country to Parīkṣit, it was Yuyutsu who was entrusted with the task of supervising Parīkṣit and the country. (M.B. Mahāprasthāna Parva Chapter 1, Verse 6).

(xv) In Mahābhārata the following names are given for Yuyutsu :—Dhārtarāṣṭra, Dhṛtarāṣṭraja, Dhṛtarāṣṭraputra, Karaṇa, Kauravya, Kaurava and Vaiśyāputra.

YUYUTSU II. There is a reference to another Yuyutsu who was the son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra by his wife Gāndhārī in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 93.
